The leaders of the other nationalist factions, Bishop Abel Muzorewa of the ANC and ZANU President Ndabaningi Sithole, arrived in Geneva Monday and said all the blacks would present a united front at the conference.

With the statements Monday there was little indication on how long the negotiations will last — whether they will break up almost at once in total disagreement or whether either side will back down from preliminary public posturing.

News in Brief

British pound at record low

LONDON [UPI] — Britain's pound sank to an all-time low today in its biggest one-day drop in history.

Panicked traders cut 7.5 cents from its value in 45 hectic minutes on the basis of one immediately-denied newspaper story.

The pound bottomed at $1.5730 — its lowest value in history in dollar terms.

Then second thoughts set in and the pound recovered slightly. By late afternoon it was trading at $1.5920 to the pound, down 5.65 cents since the markets closed Friday.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey defended the pound in the House of Commons this afternoon, repeating denials of the newspaper story that touched off the rout.

That story said the U.S. Treasury and the International Monetary Fund had decided the pound should drop to $1.50 as a condition of the IMF's pending $3.9 billion loan to Britain.

"Neither I nor any minister could accept responsibility for an irresponsible newspaper article or for the market's decision to pay more attention to that article than to the unequivocal denials from those whose views it purports to describe," Healey said.

He placed the entire blame for the morning run on the pound on the Sunday Times report. Its author said only, "I stick to my story."

Jews arrested in USSR

MOSCOW [UPI] — Police arrested 33 Soviet Jews yesterday in what was believed to be the biggest roundup since the 1974 visit of President Richard M. Nixon, Jewish sources said.

The roundup followed a series of protests and demonstrations here before this week's three-day meeting of the Supreme Soviet parliament, the sources said.

They said one of those arrested, physicist Vladimir Slepak, received a 15-day jail term for resisting a policeman last Friday during a sit-in demonstration. A woman also was fined $26, they said.

According to the sources, those arrested today included five women and a youth.

Slopak's wife told Western reporters her husband and the rest of the Jews were taken into custody at the administration office of the Supreme Soviet to hand in a protest against the arrest of four other Jews last week.

N.Y. firebomber still at large

NEW YORK [UPI] — Scores of suspects were questioned by police yesterday trying to find a firebomber responsible for 25 deaths in a Bronx social club, but officials admitted they don't have a prime suspect.

The interrogation of survivors of the fire and relatives of the dead began even before the city Medical Examiner's office had positive identifications of all of the victims.

Detectives said they would visit the 16 persons hospitalized with burns and broken bones suffered when the raging fire forced them to jump for their lives from a second story window to the street below.

In addition, police and detectives of the Bronx District Attorney's office planned interviews with dozens of residents in the Bronx neighborhood who watched as firemen, after extinguishing the blaze, lowered the bodies of the victims in pine boxes in the early morning hours Sunday.

"All of the survivors have to be interviewed, we have to talk to all of the relatives of those who were killed in the fire," the spokesman for D.A. Mario Merola said.

"We have to look into the background of the social club to determine if anyone might have had a reason for burning it down.

White students clash with cops in South Boston

BOSTON [AP] — Bands of angry whites, most of them students, brushed with police on the streets of South Boston yesterday in a one-day school boycott that started with two attempts at bombing integrated schools.

Police reported 22 arrests, most for disorderly conduct.

A stick of dynamite, apparently undetonated because of a flawed fuse, was discovered in the steel grate at the front door of Charlestown High School, and at South Boston High six bottles of gasoline and oil were heaved through a back window into a home economics classroom.

A burning highway flare was pitched into the room after three beer bottles and three brandy bottles, but police said it failed to set off the gasoline that spread from the shattered flask.

"By rights, it should have gone off. It had all the ingredients of a bomb," said police officer Bill Charbonnier who discovered the smashed schoolroom window before dawn.

Trouble in "Southie," as the amost entirely white South Boston neighborhood is called, erupted over the weekend when youngsters marched behind a banner proclaiming, "Southie Still Says Never."

The sign referred to the two-year war that South Boston residents have waged against federal court-ordered busing that each day at 8 a.m. delivers a half-dozen busloads of black students to the steps of South Boston High.

On Sunday the students, few appearing older than 16 and 17, called on their neighbors to stay out of school on Monday. Some students said they chose Monday because it is a federal holiday — Veteran's Day — and their school is in federal receivership.

A scant number of students, black and white, bothered to go to school. The School Information Center said there were 159 blacks in the classrooms and 39 whites. Full registration, according to the center, has 835 whites and 534 blacks, although normally only about 400 whites and 200 blacks attend.

Pro-gun lobby violates law

BOSTON [UPI] — Taxpayers AGAINST Question 5, a lobbying group that has spent $94,000 on advertising in opposition to the ban on handguns, is in apparent violation of Massachusetts campaign and political finance law, official records indicated yesterday.

The records also revealed the group received nearly all its money from two anti-gun control organizations — the National Rifle Association, $30,000; and the Gun Owners Action League, $66,010, $5,000 of which was listed as an "in kind" contribution and not an actual monetary donation.

Taxpayers against Question 5 failed to file a list of contributors from either organization, making it impossible to determine if the contributions came from individuals, corporations or associations.

Nuke trouble in Vermont

VERNON, Vt. [UPI] — The Vermont Yankee nuclear power plant was shut down yesterday because of a mechanical problem in the reactor's water purification system, spokesmen said.

They said it did not pose any threat to public health and safety.

Company spokesman Lawrence Keyes said the plant was taken out of operation at 4 a.m. Monday following a "routine" weekend shutdown.

He said it was "too early to say" how long the repairs would take. "I wouldn't call it a major thing," Keyes said.

He said the problem was centered in a system used to "assist in cleaning and removing impurities in water used in the reactor.

"It posed no safety problem because at all times the water purity of the reactor stayed within the limits of the plant license," he said

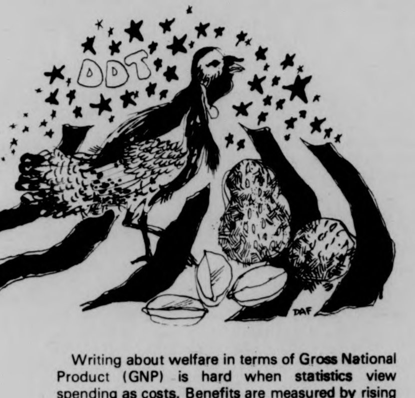
Peanuts for Thanksgiving

By MICHAEL ROBERTS

I have been dodging one of my classes for the past week and a half. I could not write a short paper. The unwritten paper articulates data on social welfare expenditures.

The data is supposed to reflect a liberal presidential candidate's defense of welfare spending before a critical constituency, who view spending as inflationary.



Writing about welfare in terms of Gross National Product (GNP) is hard when statistics view spending as costs. Benefits are measured by rising GNP and rate of inflation, not actual social benefits. When the economy fails, the spending is blamed. Welfare costs are blamed for inflation because more people seek government assistance during bad times. Using GNP statistics there is no argument favoring welfare spending.

Eventually I will have to go to class; the following is my speech to my professor.

I have been avoiding this class because of the grave crisis facing Louisiana's State Bird, the brown pelican. This concern has drawn my attention and energy from other less important endeavors, such as writing for imaginary liberal candidates. The brown pelican faces extinction from DDT poisoning.

Turkeys face a demise similar to the brown pelican, unless you believe those who purport that turkeys are birds of proven experience because they have never had their shells weakened by DDT. This does not mean they never will, but that no one has cited an instance where a turkey failed because he forgot to wear his shell in a football game. As long as agri-business rapes the environment, turkeys will eventually be afflicted by DDT.

Could you imagine what might happen if turkeys became extinct from DDT? We would have to develop alternative sources of Thanksgiving dinner. Something whose shell would not weaken from DDT - like peanuts.

It is important that peanuts are brought to the public's attention.

Peanuts would be great for Thanksgiving. The shells can be stuffed, and peanuts are great with sweet potatoes.

Peanuts are safe. No peanut ever grown by a nuclear physicist ever leaked radiation when its shell cracked. Peanuts have been approved by the power industry and Hunter S. Thompson, and that is good enough for me.

There is no indication that an Anapolis graduate, an understudy of Admiral Rickover, and an engineering officer for the Nautilus' nuclear power plant, would ever cut back on military spending, especially for the Trident Nuclear Peanut. It just may be that George Washington Carver never made nuclear bombs. Irregardless, nuclear plants could be built underground because it is where peanuts grow best.

Yet there are some people who place trust in turkeys, thinking birds are truthful and have public support. They believe President Turkey when he says Congress is ineffective.

Of course, blame Congress. he should know, Turkey was a member of Congress. The average voter did not elect Turkey. It took what's-his-nose and both houses of Congress to pull that wishboner. Congress is truly to blame.

So what does all this turkey dribble mean? It means we have a political process that is a failure, a centralizing of fifty separate Democratic and Republican parties into a useless Two-Party System (only two and Eugene too). The institutions have given us no better candidates than Ford and Carter, et. al.; and we have an electorate that put Richard Nixon in office, not once, but twice (not including two terms as V.P. and other lower offices).

Gerald Ford was appointed as the person least likely to run for President and be elected to that office. A year ago any Democrat could beat him — even a wino in the street. The remnants of the New Deal Coalition were hopeful, but all they could find were unwanted politicos, culminating in convention, the nomination of the least wanted.

Now the polls show the race is close. It is among those who still believe in the process.

The process is so lacking it cannot even stir sympathy through televised debates. The question is no longer which candidate, but the merits of the electoral system. Voters are not concerned about whom, or which party, but whether they shall vote at all.

With the election close at hand, will Gerald Ford do nothing and let the Presidency slip through his fingers? Or will he try something exotic to capture the public eye, like the Mayaguez; something like war with Cuba?

And just what is the Presidency, but an oversized bureaucracy that has perverted its constitutional duties? Are not elections like voting for a new Pope every four years, when you are still stuck with the Roman Catholic Church? And what hurts is, that some people have the balls to call it "democracy."

I am not going to the polls. I see no civil obligation to legitimize this election. Some may say those who do not vote elect the Hitlers. With a choice between Carter and Ford, who needs Hitler? Voting is like writing speeches for imaginary liberals for a course called Presidential Elections; it is suicide if you do, and damned if you dodge. Pardon my apathy, but I doubt if I will be granted amnesty.

Solving the porno problem

To the Editor:

In light of the recent controversy over the screening of "sex-ploitative" films on campus, we of the Southwest Men's Center feel it is necessary to take a public position on the matter.

As men, we are trying to overcome what we see as limiting, societally imposed, and essentially non-human male roles. We are dedicated to eliminating that part of the male role which demands the pure sexual objectification of other human beings for fulfillment and, therefore, see the insensitive and degrading cinematic portrayal of sexual relations as antithetical to our goals.

Although we feel there are a large number of "X" and "R" rated films which use both sex and violence in ways inimical to the development of our full human potential, we are, at the same time, extremely uncomfortable with the notion of prior censorship by some agency. Censorship is a dangerous weapon, quite frequently turned against those it purports to serve. We see another way. Since men are taught to measure both themselves and women by sexual standards, which allows men to be sexually exploited by the media and inclines men to sexually exploit others, we see working to remove this part of the society's definition of "maleness" as a way out of the present dilemma.

We feel that explicit human sexuality can be shown on the screen both sensitively and as part of the full range of human emotions. Films in this category can act as powerful forces for social change and we encourage them. At the same time we must deny our monetary support to film-makers who persist in manipulating us via our need to feel "manly", who degrade us by turning our sexuality into something impersonal and vulgar.

As men, we feel it is important to voice our objections to these films and to work at redefining our roles so that "sex-ploitative" cinema no longer meets anyone's needs. When sexist films find themselves without an audience, we will find ourselves without these films.

Veterans' affairs meeting

To the Editor:

In light of recent disclosures by the Veterans Administration concerning the possible overpayment of some $267,000 to veterans at UMass-Amherst over the past ten years, and in view of the University's intent of introducing new controls into the process of obtaining veterans' benefits, the Veterans' Affairs Advisory Committee will conduct a meeting on October 28, 1976 at 4:00 p.m. in 162-175 Campus Center. All veterans, as well as dependants eligible for benefits under the G.I. Bill, are urged to attend.

The agenda will consist of an introduction of committee members, a summary of the events leading to the formation of the committee last spring and action taken by the committee during the summer in resolving those events, an introduction of the current Director and Assistant Director of the Veterans' Affairs Office, and a discussion of problems currently facing veterans and their dependents at UMass. If it is the consensus of those present, nominations for election to vacant posts on the committee will be conducted. The members of the VAAC encourage all to attend with problems, comments, and questions concerning veterans' benefits, loans, employment, or course requirements.

Pornography on campus: We say NO

To the Editor:

We would like to state our opinion regarding the censorship of pornography on campus. Although it may be conceivable to produce a film which is both erotically stimulating and non-oppressive, we haven't viewed any inoffensive examples to date. Rather, pornography has been oppressive to all people by reinforcing rigid sex roles and stereotypes. It further perpetuates the myths of man as omnipotent with an unceasing necessity to dominate, and woman as mindless sex object craving brutal violating and aggression.

We agree with statements made by Charlotte Allen that such films and materials should have no place at an institution of higher learning. Many undoubtedly argue that this form of censorship infringes upon their rights. We, however, strongly support any and all measures enacted to deter often violent crimes. We support the right of women not to be raped and murdered, and the right of men struggling with their role as oppressor and who desire an end to the exploitation of women.

We are aware of recent studies which disclose evidence that pornographic materials psychologically release a man's aggressive tendencies, therefore decreasing the possibility of him committing a rape. Such research is limited in its perspective by failing to examine and recognize that the nature of such aggression is inherent within the institutional sexist models which these films promote. Although pornographic films-books are not the single direct cause of such acts, they unquestionably contribute to a distorted, unproductive view of both human social relationships and sexuality.

We say no to pornography on campus.

Inviting disaster

In Anaheim, California, there sits a young man hunched, intense, over a teletype. He types rapidly, not noticing the others in the rows of teletypes and display screens, working mindlessly. A gleem comes to his eye as the computer responds. He waits until the keys stop, linefeeds, tears the form from the carriage, folds it carefully and puts it into his pocket, making sure no one is looking. He goes on with his regular work.

Across the country, in Burlington, Massachusetts a young woman, alone in a room clicking with automatic typewriters, sits in front of the display screen of a Hazeltine 2000, typing an entry that won't go into her log. Quietly she waits for the response to flash, letter by letter on the screen. There will be no paper record of her inquiry. No one will know the incident took place.

Neither of these two people know each other. They don't belong to any secret organizations, any underground cult. Yet, both suspect each other's existence, both know that their curiosity is not unique.

What happened is that both these people made illegal inquiries into massive data banks. It wasn't that the data banks, full of private financial information, did not have security procedures; they did. Both people, never screened for loyalty (though they were loyal to their companies) or questioned about their feelings, living in a mechanized world, etc. had been taught the passwords and entrance codes as part of their jobs. It was no trouble for them, once inside the computor, to ask it anything they wanted, using language they knew the computer would understand. They could enter any information. It was so simple.

Not important, you say? Well, in one of those computers was more individual financial information, more corporate information than the government's IRS computors have. It has a direct line to Sears stores, meaning everytime you use your Sears credit card, this computer across the country knows it in a matter of minutes. Stored in its memory is every Mastercharge, Bank Americard, gasoline credit card transaction you make. Everytime you apply for credit, someone will go to the private company that owns this computer bank and extract as much info as they need about how much you earn, how much you tend to spend. And the man-woman behind the teletype can enter any information they want, if the source is not 'on line' like Sears.

Most people who work there are careful not to make mistakes — they are too honest and not creative or bored enough to experiment with the power they don't even know that they have.

Data banks are dangerous. Just one curious person can reek havoc on companies and innocent consumers. And if someone with a real purpose got a job with a credit information bureau to destroy a competitor or an individual — it could be done.

By the way, if you have a teletype and get the right phone number (which has been done by some nut in California), you can get into the FBI's data banks, too. The only problem lies in knowing how to inquire. One person on the inside, or the time to keep trying will solve that problem. Just thought you should know. Makes you feel real secure, right?

Computers are vulnerable to the people who know how to use them. More security must be used, or data banks will forever be at the mercy of abuse. It is also not that great an idea to store so much important information in one place, with only magnetic records of their existence. That is almost inviting disaster.

And we depend on computers, believing their output to be always truthful. It is hard to control private companies and their right to make money with information on our personal lives or to hinder their ability to grow. But something must be done, before all the control we have on our lives has been taken away — without even the intent to do so. It has to stop somewhere. It does have to stop.

Avoiding the tow

To the Editor:

After reading Bill Jenkins' letter about the "perfidious towing cartel" yesterday I thought I'd pass along some advice. First of all I agree with Jenkins' views of the situation and sympathize heartily with the victims, having been a victim of towing several times myself.

Whatever you do, don't park in a tow zone. As unfair as it may seem your car will be towed sooner or later [I should know]. The only way to be sure your car won't be towed is to park on a meter. The worst that can happen is that you will get a $2.00 ticket for overtime parking. The car can't be towed from a meter.

Another possibility is to try parking in the Newman Center parking lot [except in the areas right around the building that are tow zones]. Two hours of free parking are allowed for people using the Center.

This often means having to wait and-or look around for a parking space, but it is worth it if you think of the consequences. Those tow trucks are always waiting.

Bottle Bill ad

To the Editor:

It is a shame that the Collegian will be prostituted for ad revenue. My comment is in reference to the 180 dollar full page spread laid out to the bottle-bill opponents.

I realize that is is purely economics but the fact is, the deterioration of the environment will not produce $180 to rebut the charges. Can we question the ethics of the Student Run newspaper? Any response will be appreciated.

Paul Logue, Jr.

The Collegian received several letters to the editor yesterday, such as Paul Logue Jr.'s above, criticizing the newspaper for accepting an advertisement that claimed the cost of beer in Vermont jumped $1.80 per case as a result of that state's beverage container deposit legislation. The ad also urged voters to "vote no on Question 6" on the November 2 ballot.

That ad, paid for by a front group for the bottling industry, was maliciously misleading.

Here are the facts:

When you return your containers, you get all of your deposit back. On a case of 24 bottles, this comes to a refund sum of $1.20. The advertisement deceptively implied that there is no refund.

As for the other 60 cents:

Vermont law is different than ours, and requires a 24 cent handling charge to be paid; ours requires no handling charge.

b) the remaining 36 cents is supposed to reflect increased handling. But in Vermont, according to the Environmental Protection Agency, an additional 16 to 36 cents per case was added by wholesalers to cover handling. Thus, the anti-bottle bill forces are misleading people in that; they use only the high figure (36 cents); they do not discuss the savings which the bill creates; and they attribute all cost increases to the Bottle Bill despite the EPA's clear statement that the EPA report did not conclude that the beverage price increases in Vermont in late 1973 and early 1974 were caused by the container deposit law. Increases in costs of sugar, grain, containers, energy and labor resulted in similar price increases all across the country during that period. Furthermore, the EPA report did not find that Vermont consumers were paying more for beverages after the law.

The Collegian has offered MassPIRG, the main force behind passage of the bottle bill, a full page in one of our upcoming issues to explain their position on the bill. There will be no cost for the page.

The publication of such misleading advertising is regrettable, and we have now taken safeguard measures to prevent a recurrence. Another deceitful advertisement arguing against the flat electric rate referendum (Question 7) was rejected last night by the Collegian Editor.

So to Paul Logue Jr. and the many others who were irritated by the anti-bottle bill ad, we appreciate your concern, and hope that we can provide you with more truthful information from responsible sources from now on.

A helpful nuisance

For most Americans, preserving the environment is a nuisance. It means thinking about the type of detergents we use, sorting the recyclable and non-recyclable trash, holding onto garbage until we can find a barrel to dump it in. All of this is time consuming, and generally not convenient. So, most of us don't bother.

Question six, on the upcoming ballot, is a state bottle bill. It is designed to help eliminate litter, and it is also an attempt to recycle enormous amounts of glass and metal, now thrown away.

The bottle bill, like other environmental safeguards, might seem to be a nuisance. It means that all the bottles and cans from all those six-packs are going to pile up in the corners of rooms, until somebody gets around to lugging them back to the store. For most people on campus, that lugging isn't easy.

It means that the people who decorate the stairwells in the dorms every weekend, and the pyramids in Southwest, and the Campus Center steps, with Miller bottles and Mick cans, will be losing five cents on each piece of modern art.

It means that we will all have to think before we toss away empty beverage containers.

But thinking isn't such a bad idea. Some weekend, when you're sitting around broke, think how nice it would be to turn in a few bags of cans and bottles for movie or Bluewall money.

Think how much cleaner your dorm and the rest of the campus would be if everyone who left a container someplace was losing five cents by it.

Think too, that if we don't put the brakes on the one-shot bottle or can, that soon the question of returnable versus non-returnable will be academic, because there won't be anything to make a can or bottle out of.

A nuisance is a nuisance, and there's no way to get around that, though the nuisance of the bottle bill does have its compensations. But compensations or no, the bill is a step toward protecting what's left of our environment, and it stops us from passing the buck.

Unfair criticism

To the Editor:

I am a senior in the Nutrition Department and upon reading Ms. Beacock's article in Thursday's paper I was bemused at her lack of understanding of institutional food services and nutrition. What makes this T.A. of the Rhetoric Department think she knows more about food and food services than the average person? Her article was filled with sensationalism and inaccuracies which serve the purpose of instigating discontent and misunderstanding with a system which I regard as operating rather well.

I believe that most gripes are based on individuals' misguided dissatisfactions with their inabilities to choose intelligently from the foods provided. Sure, the D.C.'s provide much starchy, sweet, and inexpensive items, but you don't have to eat them. The trouble is, many people can't distinguish between good food and junk. They prefer the latter and complain about the quality. These people usually make the additional mistake of comparing the food services with a restaurant or "Mom's home cooking". That's unfair. Institutional cafeterias are geared towards quantity and can't possibly produce quality like a restaurant in sufficient quantity to serve UMass at a price which the students would be willing to pay. Heavy eaters would have to pay more if that food came from anywhere other than the D.C.s.

Also, the commons' practices are watched by nutritionists who see to it that adquate quality is provided at all meals. Thus, the services are not dealt out "with total unconcern for the poor quality of its product," as Ms. Beacock put it.

In further disagreement, I would like to say that it is quite inaccurate to assign students' ill health to such a singular event as their eating habits. Poor health has many causes and often they are multiple in any one instance.

Regarding Ms. Beacock's statement that white bread and foods made with white flour are proven to be without adequate nutritional value, I say she is misinformed. A recent publication by Consumer Reports magazine stated that white flour and bread pose no nutritional disadvantages over whole-grain, unbleached flour and bread. Often the former are more highly fortified. And there is no advantage to eating "natural", unrefined sugar over white sugar. Both are carbohydrates having essentially the same nutritional content and yielding the same amount of calories.

I rarely see unnecessarily greasy fried foods. Fruit is provided daily and, in refute to Ms. Beacock, the yogurt served is prepared without additives. I checked the label. Apparently she hadn't.

So, if Ms. Beacock could contain her unfounded criticism to matters of the Rhetoric Department for which she is more qualified, then much misunderstanding and discontent could be allayed.

If a fire should start because of one of the items, the owner could be liable under the endangering behavior act and appropriate measures would be taken, Hoyle said.

Besides evacuation drills, which must be held according to state law, Hoyle feels "there has to be a general education program" concerning fire safety at UMass.

Arrow, Nobel laureate in economics, which said, the new uniform rate structure would shift 100 million dollars from those who cannot afford to pay to those who can afford to pay for electric charges. The statement said the uniform rate proposal would create jobs and provide a lasting and beneficial effect.

Charkaudian said the $100 million figure quoted must be the amount which industry will have to pay if the referendum is passed, which is unfair.

The tradition is for industry to conserve electric energy, as proven by a study of the past two years. The study, he said, revealed that industry conserves 17 per cent more than previous years. He said no matter what, if electric rates for industry increase, the reality of economics is that prices will rise too.

Your Birthday
by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, October 26 – Born today, you are not one of those basically lazy, unenergetic individuals who will always find the easy way out of any difficult situation. You take into account the consequences of any move before you make it, not only the consequences to yourself and your own work, but those that will fall to any associated with you in any way. Only when all appears in order will you allow yourself to take the next step in a general progression toward your goal, for you have no wish to achieve your aims and fulfil your ambitions at the expense of another. A thorough person, you never leave any project in an incomplete state -- though about this, you might begin to think twice; some projects simply aren't worth the effort.

You are not one to encourage others to bring you their problems. Indeed, you have enough of your own and a hard enough time dealing with them. However, because you will early establish a reputation for emotional and mental soundness and for an almost unfailing sense of logic, others will habitually attempt to talk you into easing their difficulties for them. That you will often refuse to do so will not, surprisingly, create enemies for you: the tact and diplomacy in which your refusals are couched guarantees you that.

Yours is a highly instinctive nature, but because you employ reason so openly and so customarily in your dealings with others, the intuitive side of your makeup may well be hidden.

Wednesday, October 27

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – You may run up against more than one of life's unpleasant surprises today. Do your best to adapt to the unexpected situation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Your objections to another's plans should be aired today -- but tactfully. There is no need to hurt feelings through blunt negativism.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Defiance in the face of duty can only gain you a reputation for surliness. Make yourself at home with a friend at evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Take care that in your zeal to tell another your tale of woe, you don't distort the facts until they are unrecognizable as such. Seek aid.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – An inability to admit wrongdoing could land you in additional difficulty. When asked for an accounting, give one.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Pursue your present interest to the limits of its usefulness to your future; after that, seek something new to delve into.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Take care that you are not about to base irrevocable decisions upon assumptions both false and presumptuous.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Discharge your duties as quickly -- but as proficiently -- as possible. This is a good time to demonstrate your willingness to work.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – The examination of old records may yet yield facts of considerable interest. You may be able to make long-desired changes – starting now!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – A continued illness of a friend may lead to bad feeling rather than sympathetic response --unless you are both tolerant and patient.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – So long as your concern over another's difficulties is demonstrated by some kind of helpful action, all is well. Talk is cheap!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Though you may not be able to justify your actions to another, you can to yourself – which is all that counts at this time.

JV gridders idle as URI cancels

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass-Rhode Island junior varsity football game, which was originally scheduled for yesterday, was cancelled for one very good reason.

The Rams no longer field a JV team.

Rhode Island nearly dropped football as a varsity sport after last season. However, a vote of the school's trustees saved it for at least one year. The Rams play a reduced schedule (eight games) but cannot affort to fund a JV squad. Thus, the cancellation. The drop of the game shaves UMass' season slate down to a total of five games.

The Minutemen won their last contest 27-14, over Army. The game, which was played a week ago last Friday at West Point, upped the JVs record to 1-0-1 on the year.

Quarterback Mike McEvilly sparked the UMass win, as he passed for two touchdowns and ran for another.

"He had an exceptional day," said coach Tom Mullen. "He really got the offense moving, both passing and running. McEvilly is a great leader."

The ground game was also aided by the return of fullback Hank Sareault. The 235-pound sophomore had been with the varsity during the first JV game, and he celebrated his return by playing a fine game, according to Mullen.

But the Minutemen defense was the part of the team which really impressed Mullen. Just before the half, Army had a first and ten at the UMass 12, but the Minutemen held the Cadets as safety John Czerapowicz came up with a key interception.

"I'm really proud of the defense," said Mullen. "They rose to the occasion and killed off the drive."

The coach credited defensive ends Marty Trymbulak and Duncan Gillan for their fine play, as well as Czerapowicz. In addition, linebacker Tony Grasso, filling in for starter Bob Wilson who injured a knee in the Dartmouth game, also had a good day for the Minutemen.

Flanker Kevin O'Connor, who was the receiving standout of the season's first game, scored UMass' final touchdown in the latter stages of the tilt on a 37-yard pass from McEvilly. The TD climaxed an eight play, 65-yard scoring drive.

Halfback Cliff Pedrow picked up key yardage in the game-icing march.

UMass is now readying itself for a game this Sunday against arch-rival Boston College at Alumni Stadium. The Eagles will bring a 2-2 record to Amherst.

Newest Celtic Rowe joins club in workout

LEXINGTON, Mass. [UPI] — Curtis Rowe joined the Boston Celtics yesterday a few hours after becoming a father for the second time, and demonstrated he would be ready Thursday for the team's next game.

Rowe, 27, was traded to the defending NBA Champions in a three-way deal last week, but had gone back to Detroit to be with his expectant wife. Rowe came to Boston Sunday and was told yesterday his wife had given birth to a seven-pound, 13-ounce daughter. The couple also has a son.

The newest Celtic then tested his slightly injured right knee in a 2½-hour workout at the club's practice gym and appeared to pick up the Celtics' system quickly.

Rowe, who studied the Boston playbook while in Detroit last weekend, said he expected "basketball is going to be more fun" this season than it was the past five years with the Detroit Pistons.

"I had a good time playing basketball with the guys in Detroit. They're a great bunch of guys and I had a lot of nice friends there. But I was looking forward to being with a first class organization, and I believe I've found it."

Coach Tom Heinsohn worked with Rowe, forward Sidney Wicks and six other young players in the last hour of the practice on special plays. During the drills Wicks, a UCLA teammate and next door neighbor of Rowe, would give his friend personal instructions and ask Heinsohn to run particular plays over again.

"Sure I think Curtis is going to help us," Wicks said after the practice. "UCLA players are winners; they're good, solid, fundamental players. And that's the certain kind of players the Celtics are looking for."

With the arrival of Rowe, the Celtics had their full 12-man roster for the first time this season. Center Dave Cowens, bothered by back spasms, worked out with little pain and expected to be ready for Thursday night's game against Buffalo at the Hartford, Conn., Civic Center.

Giants, 0-7, fire Arnsparger, name McVay as successor

PLEASANTVILLE, N.Y. [UPI] — The New York Giants, the only winless established team in the National Football League this year, yesterday fired head coach Bill Arnsparger one day after his club's most dismal performance of a thus far bleak season and replaced him with the assistant John McVay.

The ax fell on an off-day for the Giants, following their 27-0 loss to the Pittsburgh Steelers in which they mustered just 151 yards in being shutout for the first time this season. It was the seventh straight loss for the club.

The only other team without a win this year is the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, an expansion club that did not even exist except on paper eight months ago.

The Giants' director of operations Andy Robustelli, who said after Sunday's loss he wanted to "sleep on it" before making a decision, said the 45-year-old McVay would meet with the team Tuesday morning before beginning preparations for Sunday's game against the Philadelphia Eagles.

Robustelli said McVay's appointment was not necessarily an interim one and said a final determination on his status would be made at the end of the season.

"It was our feeling we had reached a critical point and we did not want to lose what we had accomplished up to this point," said Robustelli. "We feel that Arnsparger left us in a much better position in every department than when he came here — and that would include personnel, organization, offseason conditioning and approach to the draft.

"Everything was improved except for our record."

Robustelli told Arnsparger personally of his dismissal at the Giants' training camp here.

Some time later, Arnsparger came in to say goodbye to the team's regular writers and said: "There are three things I have now that I will continue to have — my family, my God and my ability."

He then shook hands with the writers, left camp with his wife, Betty, and told Robustelli he did not wish to accept any further calls.

McVay had coached the Memphis Southmen during their 1½-year stand in the world football league. He guided the Southmen to the best record in the league in their first season, 17-3, and directed them to an 8-4 mark before the WFL folded last October.

It was Robustelli who brought McVay to the Giants' along with one of his assistant coaches, Jay Fry, and five of his players, including Larry Csonka.

Former UMass athletes hustle as pros

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is tne first in a four-part series on former UMass athletes now active in professional sports.

Now that the World Series has run its course and the Cincinnati Reds are once again top dog in major league baseball, perhaps now is as good a time as any to review the 1976 seasons of the five former UMass players who were active in organized baseball.

Two of the five players saw action in the majors, while the other three were scattered throughout the various minor league classifications. They go back as far as class of 1969 and as recently as 1976. But now, without further introduction, their brief profiles:

The year was 1969 and the place was Omaha, Nebraska. The team nobody ever heard of, the University of Massachusetts Redmen, were competing in the College World Series. They won their first game over Southern Illinois, but were soon eliminated from the tourney. The player who sparked that team was leftfielder Bob Hansen.

Seven years have passed and Hansen is now a first baseman. Twice an all-New England first team selection, Hansen was chosen by the then-expansion Milwaukee Brewers. He spent two and half months in the majors this season before being demoted to the Brewers triple-A farm team in Spokane.

While with Milwaukee, Hansen saw limited action. He played in just 24 games, mostly at first or as a designated hitter, and batted .164 with no home runs and four RBIs.

However, at Spokane it was a different story. Hansen hit .303 with 16 homers and 80 RBIs under manager Frank Howard.

The 29-year old left-handed hitter will probably not be protected by the Brewers in the upcoming expansion draft, so look for him to hook up with either Seattle or Toronto.

The other UMass major leaguer had an up and down season with the Baltimore Orioles. Mike Flanagan, who was chosen first-team all-New England once, had a 3-5 record and a 4.13 ERA in his first full major league season. Included among his wins was a verdict over the eventual American League champion New York Yankees and Catfish Hunter. The left-hander, who was profiled in an earlier Collegian article this year, came up at the tail-end of the 1975 season and made a start.

Tom White was all-New England second team during his stay at UMass. A 1972 graduate and native of Amherst, White spent 1976 with the Reading Phillies of the double-A Eastern League. The right-hander was a starter here, but was shifted to relief this season by the Philadelphia organization. Statistical information on him is unavailable, but UMass coach Dick Bergquist said he had "a so-so year."

First baseman Ron Beaurivage left UMass in 1974 after his junior year. He was chosen first-team all-New England after his freshman year. Beaurivage signed with Oakland A's, and played with Chattanooga of the AA Southern League last year. A shoulder injury suffered at the beginning of the season hampered his performance, as he appeared in 55 games and hit .193. Beaurivage had one home run and 19 RBIs.

According to Norm Koselke, Oakland's minor league administrator, the A's look for a good season out of Beaurivage next year. They consider him a good defensive first baseman who can hit for both power and average.

The final ex-UMass athlete active in pro-baseball is its most recent graduate. Craig Allegrezza, the 6'5" fireballing right-hand ace of recent years, signed after his May, 1976 graduation with the Baltimore organization.

Allegrezza spent 1976 in the rookie Appalachian League. He had the ninth best ERA in the circuit, at 2.43. He had a record of 5-4 and struck out 75 batters in 74 innings.

According to Bergquist, Allegrezza decided to forego the winter instructional league circuit to have a troublesome knee operated on. The same knee hampered his performance last year with the Minutemen, and forced him to part of the season.

Next: The pro-football players.

Babe Ruth's widow dies

NEW YORK [UPI] — Mrs. Babe Ruth, the widow of the late New York Yankee home run king, died Monday. She was 76.

Mrs. Ruth died of cancer in her New York City apartment, her daughter, Mrs. Brent Stevens, said.

"She didn't want to go to a hospital," said Mrs. Stevens. "She wanted to die at home."

A model and chorus girl, Mrs. Ruth was introduced to the Yankee slugger by actor James Barton. After a long courtship, they were married in 1929, according to Allan Schneider, a family friend. it was the second marriage for both.

Mrs. Ruth, whose maiden name was Claire Merrit, came from a baseball family. Her father was Ty Cobb's attorney and her cousin was Johnny Mize.

Barnes back with Pistons

DETROIT [UPI] — The Detroit Pistons reinstated troublesome forward Marvin Barnes to their roster Monday after a week of turmoil caused by unexcused absences of the former ABA star.

A team spokesman said the Barnes reinstatement was retroactive to Friday, the day he reported for a physical after failing to show up three previous days. He was suspended from the team Wednesday and missed the first two regular season games.

However, the Pistons' reconciliation with the 6-foot-9, 200-pound Barnes did not help him with his legal troubles.

A warrant has been issued for his arrest on a concealed weapon charge after a revolver was spotted in his luggage at Detroit Metropolitan Airport Oct. 9 as he boarded a plane for St. Louis. The warrant has not yet been served on Barnes.

The spokesman said Barnes settled his trouble with the team in a meeting Saturday with general manager Oscar Feldman, who paid $500,000 to sign Barnes after the ABA dispersal draft.

The women's field hockey team will be looking to extend its three game winning streak when it takes on Plymouth State this afternoon at 2:30, on the field behind NOPE.

Another streak that the Minutewomen will be trying to continue is their shutout string, also at three games.

"I saw them (Plymouth St.) at Sportsday and they didn't seem to be strong then, but that was a month ago," commented UMass coach Judy Davidson. Plymouth State tied UNH 1-1, a team that UMass defeated 1-0. "I think that it was sort of a fluke that they tied UNH," commented Davidson.

Coach Davidson was not pleased with her team's practice yesterday.

When asked if she thought her team would be looking ahead to the big match against Springfield next Saturday, Davidson referred to yesterday's practice.

"They were sort of flakey today, they were clowning around," the coach said. She spoke to the team and reminded them that there was plenty of time after practice to fool around, but that during practice they had to play hockey.

There will be a few changes in the lineup today. Forward Ginger Bulman was not feeling well after practice and is a questionable starter, while Davidson has decided to start Olivia Lovelace at left halfback, in place of Jody Wickman. Coach Davidson gave her reasons for the replacement; "I wanted to give Olivia a chance to play. It is not because Jody didn't play well."

STICK SHIFTS ... Last year UMass defeated Plymouth State 3-0 ... UNH, a team that UMass disposed of last week, defeated Springfield College 1-0. UMass plays Springfield on Saturday.

Season ends, but practice continues

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

Although the UMass netmen are holding informal practice sessions three nights a week on the indoor courts at Hampshire College, their season has been over for some time now.

Two weeks ago the season terminated with the Yankee Conference Championships at UMaine. The Minutemen, at their peak of performance, gave a strong showing in Maine edging out URI for second place.

There were several highpoints in UMass' play at the championships:

—Alan Green, who went undefeated throughout the entire season, won the second singles division.

—Rickey Sharton overpowered the fifth singles division to gain that title.

—Steve Heyl, who's final match was the most exciting battle of the championships, won the sixth singles division.

—The team of Sharton and Heyl took third division doubles honors.

—Green and partner Adam Rosen were runners-up in the first doubles division.

UMass accumulated more divisional titles than any other team at the YanCons, including UNH who, despite the Minutemen's top-notch performance, gained the necessary points to come out on top.

During the regular season, however, the UMass netmen were not so smooth, finishing at 3-2. Although they ended regular season play with devastating wins over UConn and Vermont (both by scores of 8-1), their play in the first half of the season was somewhat shakey.

In losses to URI and UNH (which were separated by a 9-0 victory over a weak BU team) it became clear that UMass doubles play was faulty. In both cases the Minutemen held their own in the singles competition only to lose in the doubles.

Coach Bill Brown realized that total concentration on singles, which was emphasized in practice, was not going to win matches against a worthy opponent. A capable opponent would force the match to be decided in the doubles, as did URI and UNH.

After the UNH loss Brown made a change in doubles personnel; a move which he later dubbed as "the turning point of the season."

He switched Green, who was playing second doubles with Jimmy Barnhart, to first doubles with Rosen. Rosen's partner, Barnaby Kalan was then teamed up with Barnhart.

Brown's attempt to strengthen his first doubles pair proved fruitful as Rosen and Green went undefeated until the finals at the championships.

Along with the successful team of Sharton and Heyl, Brown found himself with two winning doubles teams.

Brown plans to keep these teams intact for the spring season. In the meantime he will be working with the team of Kalan and Barnhart this winter, along with the rest of the players, in order to produce a well-rounded, polished team for the upcoming season.

News good for UM as Williams recupes

The UMass football team did receive one piece of good news following its 28-6 loss to UConn Saturday.

Moses Williams, the Minutemen's starting tight end, who was hurt on the final play of the game, escaped serious injury with a bruised vertebrae in the back of his neck.

The 6-2, 215 lb. junior was sandwiched by two Huskie defenders as he hauled in a Brian McNally pass for an 11 yard gain. It was Williams' fourth catch on the day for 44 yards, and McNally's 32nd completion. After the hit, Williams lay motionless on the field as doctors, coaches, and family surrounded him. After a short delay, he was carried by stretcher into an awaiting ambulance and taken to Cooley Dickinson hospital where the extent of the injury was determined.

Moses Williams

"I was in the process of going down when I got hit by two guys at the same time in the back," Williams said. "When it first happened it just rang my bell and I saw dark spots. It hurt for a minute, and I tried to get up and it felt like I had pins and needles in my back. I just couldn't move."

Williams, although not practicing yet, hopes to be ready for this weekend's game against powerful Rutgers.

One player who will definitely be out is senior Steve Telander. It was announced that Telander, bothered by a bad knee which sidelined him so far, will miss the entire year. He will still be eligible to play next year, though.

Violent fans deserve penalties

The boors are back in business.

The boors, of course, are the so-called "fans" who choose to spend their money making life as miserable as possible for the majority of sports fans at various stadiums around America.

Juvenile behavior on the part of spectators at sporting events is nothing new. As far back as the 1880's, baseball umpires reportedly were so bullied by fans that they were forced to seek police protection. And I've heard that it was really something to attend early pro basketball games and be pelted by flying objects.

The practice of tearing down the goalposts after a big collegiate football victory sometimes resulted in serious injuries to participants, as did the so-called "victory" parades and celebrations afterwards. A march after a big Ohio State—Michigan football game in the late 1960's resulted in numerous arrests.

And this doesn't even include the hockey riots that have taken place over the years. Witness the "St. Patrick's Day Massacre" at the Montreal Forum in the mid 1950's after Maurice Richard was suspended by commissioner Clarence Campbell.

But the fan reaction at games has taken a turn for the worse in recent years. Many of the outbursts by the patrons are vicious, resulting in robberies, injuries, and arrests.

Remember the 1973 National League playoffs? The fifth and decisive game was played in New York, and the left-field fans at Shea Stadium chose to single out Pete Rose, the Cincinnati Reds star leftfielder, for their particular brand of abuse.

The game was halted for several minutes as the "people" threw garbage and other enticing tidbits at Charley Hustle. Too bad the Mets won. But, maybe not. Just think for a while how the ogres would have acted had they lost.

Apparently a few of those patrons (or at least some good imitators) attended the recent American League playoffs in Yankee Stadium. The Kansas City outfielders, after being showered with toilet paper rolls, were inundated by empty whiskey bottles. Again, though, it was New York. Now I really have to wonder what kind of losers those fans would be.

The litany of the marks these clods have left on professional sports is endless. The attack on Yankee centerfielder Mickey Rivers by the Fenway bleacher faithful on the last day of May is one example; the physical abuse suffered by Richie Powers in the Boston-Phoenix triple overtime game in last season's NBA playoffs is another; the 10-cent "Beer Night" crowd's actions after a Cleveland Indians baseball game a few years ago is yet another; and the whiskey bottle which hit NFL official Arman Terzian during the Dallas-Minnesota playoff game last year is still another.

The New England Patriots public image has suffered due to the actions of last Monday night's crowd. Over the years, the sometimes rowdy atmosphere at Boston Garden during Bruins' games would be considered a day in the park compared to last week's Schaefer Stadium.

But to recite what has happened is in itself pointless. How to deal with the offenders once apprehended is more useful.

A few possibly helpful hints:

1. After the people are arrested, make sure that they are prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. Perhaps a new set of laws is in order which would deal specifically with offenses committed at sporting events.

2. Make sure the results of the prosecution are publicized fully. Maybe if the potential troublemakers saw what happened to others spelled out in front of them, they would think twice before acting like a copy-cat.

But maybe the best answer to all this is eluding us. In past years, hockey players have been restrained from going into the crowds at games after abusive fans.

Maybe they should let them go.

Committee favors no fee hikes

By JOHN M. MORAN
Collegian Staff

Each of five proposed fee increases for fiscal year 1978 was rejected last night by the Rents and Fees Committee of the undergraduate Student Senate. The committee will make its recommendation to the full Senate at its meeting tonight.

The committee unanimously rejected the recommendation for a $7 fee increase made Monday by University Health Services. (UHS) The Student Health Advisory Board had recommended that the proposal be approved.

Peter Graham, chairperson of the rents and fees committee, opposed the fee increase, saying in his motion he "would like to absolutely reject the Health Services proposal by a unanimous vote."

The fee hike was turned down because the committee believed there was an unjustified inclusion of a cost-of-living increase, dubious projection figures by Health Services, and the existance of large emergency financial reserves capable of carrying UHS through FY '78.

The committee also did not approve a $5 fee increase proposed by Student Services.

Student Services had proposed the fee for the purchase of a programmable calculator to compute the financial aid applications of those students who must file their aid applications late due to extreme instances of change in financial status.

Student Government Asoociation Co-President Jay A. Martus opposed the increase, citing a memorandum which he said stated current student fees include the cost of such a service and that in effect, if the proposal passed it would mean that the students would have to pay for the service twice.

Currently, 800 students per year submit financial aid applications late.

Rents and Fees voted to recommend to the senate to reject a $6 fee hike proposed by Residential Resource Management for the cost of the Residence Hall Telephone Trust Fund. The committee, in its motion, requested the University Counsel to enter litigation with the phone company concerning a lower differential rate for the phones in dormitories.

Martus stated that he felt the University could get a lower rate and avoid the increase since Residential Resource Management takes care of many of the administrative duties which would normally would be handled by the phone company.

At the senate meeting tonight, Elliot Lees and Marcia Brooks, both of whom are members of the Rents and Fees, will present a minority report on behalf of the five dissenting committee members. They said they felt that the committee did not have enough information to decide on the telephone increase proposal. They had proposed that the committee make no recommendation to the senate instead of recommending against the hike.

A $30 per semester increase proposed by University Food Services (UFS) failed to pass the committee being defeated by a vote of 13 to 1. The motion passed read that the fee should not be increased "until a concrete proposal for an increase in quality and services is presented; further there should be a moratorium on renovations (within Food Services) due to fiscal constraints."

"In good conscience, we cannot support a fee increase where students would pay more money for present quality," said Graham after the meeting.

An increase in International Programs was defeated because the committee felt it had insufficient information to decide if the increase was justified. The committee stated that the burden of proof was on those making the proposal and that such proof had not been presented to them.

Eldridge Cleaver to speak tonight

By JAMES ODATO
Collegian Staff

Eldridge Cleaver, former Minister of Information for the Black Panthers, will speak tonight at 8:00 in the Student Union Ballroom.

Cleaver, guest of the Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP), recently returned to the United States after a seven-year self-imposed exile undertaken to avoid criminal charges here for assault with intent to commit murder, assault with a deadly weapon, and violation of parole.

Black leaders on campus say the sentiments of a large portion of Blacks here is a "negative feeling" toward Cleaver.

Before his flight from the country, Cleaver was a vocal Marxist who preached in favor of a violent end to the American system of government.

Cleaver, author of "Soul On Ice," a collection of essays he wrote while in prison, returned to the US and revealed a radical shift in position by saying and writing that although the US has its faults, it is still the best system of government and is the "most free and most democratic" in the world.

Michael M. Thelwell, former head of the Dept. of Afro American studies and professor in that department, said, "It is difficult to look at changes in Cleaver's political position over the years and reach the conclusion that he has any serious political commitment outside of his own political advantage."

He said he did not believe "any serious Black person" could be opposed to the Cuban presence in Angola because that implies support of the South African presence.

"The man is a hustler," he said.

Cleaver says he had a religious experience which brought him in touch with Christianity and directly affected his decision to return to the United States.

After touring and living in several Communist countries, Cleaver said he even found racism there.

Cleaver has spoken out againt Cuban aid to such countries as Angola, calling certain wars a way for Cuban Premier Fidel Castro to "do away with" Black Cuban militan officers and oppress the Black population of Cuba.

Dr. John H. Bracey, chairperson of the Dept. of Afro-American Studies, said, "Cleaver is a sicky. He represents no major position in the Black movement and has no following. There are lots more important people DVP could have invited."

John J. Kiley, vice-chairperson of DVP and coordinator of tonight's lecture, said the reason for inviting Cleaver was that he was considered by DVP to have "a message of

Homecoming ends with Cole sell-out

By CRAIG ROCHE
Collegian Staff

Natalie Cole brought Homecoming to a close as she brought the audience to its feet last night in the Fine Arts Center Auditorium. In her first appearance at her alma mater since graduation in 1972, Natalie charmed the sell-out crowd with selections from both of her million-selling albums.

While Natalie was able to greet the enthusiastic crowd affectionately, she quickly moved into her standard, ultra-professional act. Clearly showcasing the woman's abundant talents, it also partially disappointed those who had come expecting something extra special in the way of entertainment from her. Natalie opened with "Keep Smiling", a hard driving, up tempo number off of her most recent album Natalie.

Looking every inch of a "Sophisticated Lady," Natalie led her eight member band into that popular number. Dressed in white and sporting a new hairstyle, Natalie was showing her college peers just how far she had gone since she left UMass known as the daughter of Nat King Cole.

At that time she was beginning her singing career with her famous father's name opening doors — her powerful voice keeping them open.

Her third selection was a reworked version of "Que Sera Sera", a song that her father may well have sung to her when it was popular in the Fifties. This version was all Seventies, however, as she opened with deceptively slow phrases before punching it up and taking the tune places Doris Day had never been with it. A more serene and touching side to this young woman was evident as she slowed things down and performed the title cut from her first album, Inseparable, and for me, it was the first time that she pierced my heart. With this song, she dropped the showbiz aspect of her performance and took the audience on one-on one. The song is a masterpiece; it must be a show stopper wherever she performs it — but "Inseparable" had a greater meaning as Natalie sang it Tuesday night, dedicating it to everyone in the audience, and singing it with her heart in it.

There will be an in-depth interview with Natalie Cole by Nasser Ega appearing in tomorrow's Collegian.

This high point was too shortlived, however, as the pace began to quicken and the Las Vegas aspect of her act took over again. Four numbers into her set and she was closing out "the first half of our show" and moving quickly into the final half. Every minute she was onstage, she was captivating and excellent, but she was altogether too brief with her show.

Clever use of a few stage effects, like the totally unexpected magnesium flashes after "Sophisticated Lady", and the totally non-essential strobe lights, were augmented by tasteful, well co-ordinated lighting, particularly in the use of slides projected against the backdrop of the stage. This again seemed to be a touch of the "big time" element we had to settle for when the people would rather have had a more personal, longer show.

Natalie Cole's opening act, UMass' own Reconstruction, would do well to take a lesson from this. They were almost equal to Natalie in their precision, taste, and style. Reconstruction could go places also. Should this happen (and I hope it does) they should bear in mind the way to come across is to 'give the people what they want when they want it.'

Natalie committed the unforgiveable sin of allowing her band, excellent to the person, to go unidentified. Last night at least, she would have not have been half as fine had she not had their backing.

The audience and Natalie were inseparable, and I am certain all left hoping it will be, again, and soon.

SWA, Sparks debate referendum wording

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

Baroque Enterprises head Albert Sparks locked horns with members of the Southwest Assembly (SWA) last night over the wording and set-up of the referendum that will decide whether or not pornographic films will be shown in Southwest's Hampden Student Center.

The student vote has been scheduled for Nov. 15 in Hampden as the result of a unanimous decision reached last week by SWA.

Sparks charged that the referendum requested by Baroque Enterprises, the organization sponsoring the movies, is not the same as the one set forth last week by SWA and said that he would ask the student attorney general to step in. The assembly unanimously agreed that the referendum question read:

"Be it resolved: That the SWA not allow pornographic films to be shown in Hampden Student Center because of the sexist and oppressive nature to the men and women of our community."

"We disagree with the referendum as worded and we'll urge our supporters not to participate in the referendum vote," Sparks said. He said that Baroque Enterprises would like to hold a referendum on censorship rather than on pornography, and that the wording of the referendum should be changed accordingly.

"If the Superior Court is having difficulty deciding what is and what isn't pornography, we doubt if the Southwest Assembly can decide," he said.

President Chris Durkin opposed the change in wording and argued that censorship is "an all-encompassing, wide-open thing." Durkin said that he wanted to keep the bill as it was unanimously voted on last week. He refuted Sparks' charge that Baroque Enterprises had not been consulted about the referendum's wording, explaining that Sparks "had never asked" to be consulted.

Sparks also criticized the set-up of the vote and proposed that the polling take place in Hampshire Dining Commons rather than in Hampden, and be extended from six hours to two days. He argued that only 10 per cent of Southwest's residents frequented Hampden, and that the noon to 6 p.m. slot agreed on by SWA was not enough time.

"Only those who are strongly opposed to or strongly for the referendum would vote," he said. "We want to open it up to all members of Southwest."

Durkin disagreed. "As far as time goes," he said, "if people feel anything at all about it, six hours gives them plenty of time." He said that Hampden had been selected because it was considered "the most central spot" in Southwest.

In other business last night, a proposal to allocate $450 to a Southwest course, "Imperialism: Theory and Practice", for a presentation on United States imperialism was tabled for a week's consideration by the finance and civil liberties committees.

SWA tabled another proposal allocating $220 to help MacKimmie fund a film series on social oppression, to the same committees.

Last week's proposal that SWA contribute $1000 towards last night's Natalie Cole concert in the Fine Arts Center was withdrawn by its sponsors, it was announced.

The assembly voted unanimously to set up an audio-visual budget category of $100 to be used for the repair and maintenance of audio-visual equipment, to be authorized by the executive committee.

OHAG fails to elect treasurer

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

The Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) last night failed to elect a new treasurer after eight ballots.

"I'm sick and tired of you people, you can't get over your own bullshit and I'm withdrawing from the election..." said Scott Caulfield, a candidate for the treasurer post, as he walked out of last night's meeting.

The meeting was abruptly adjourned after the outburst because of the lack of a quorum.

The resignation of Mark Catalogna from the post became effective last night. The only remaining candidate for the office is Jeff Cohen.

After four ballots, the number of candidates running had been cut to two: Cohen and Caulfield. Throughout the balloting neither was able to muster the necessary majority vote to win.

Originally the number of candidates for the post had been seven; four on the ballot and three write-in candidates.

Earlier in the meeting OHAG had decided to reject the votes for all write-in candidates. Anyone who did not have nomination papers in Friday should not be included, said OHAG.

The decision followed heated discussion in which it was determined that the candidates could have speaking time before the OHAG, but not be included on the actual ballot.

The issue in the speaker's presentation before OHAG became salary cuts. One candidate said he would take a $5 per week pay cut if elected.

Several candidates mentioned their concern with the state of OHAG's budget, which is currently $1700 over the figure allotted them.

Commuters ponder aid request

Two representatives from the Amherst Committee to Re-Open the Rosenburg Case requested funds supporting their cause from the Commuter Collective at a Collective meeting last night. The Collective will decide whether or not to grant the request at a meeting tomorrow night.

Julius and Ethel Rosenburg were labor organizers who were electrocuted for their involvement in such cases as that of Tom Mooney, who was jailed for allegedly stealing atomic bomb secrets.

In other action, a Commuter Collective Newsletter will be ready soon for commuter circulation. The newsletter will inform commuters on what is happening with their government, and will include in its first edition an update on the town of Amherst's two recent town meetings.

The Collective decided to require a two thirds vote by members to allocate money instead of the presently used majority vote. This motion was passed in order to give clout to the present freeze the Collective has instituted to save money for next semester's expenses. According to Maurice Chabuz, there is $900 left in the Collective's budget.

Amherst Committee to Re-Open the Rosenburg case spokespersons Paula Fishman and Paul Goodman, in making their pleas for support, explained that the F.B.I. has been subpoenaed by Attorney Marshall Perlin, and will take a stand on the case at a later date. The Rosenburgs' sons, Michael and Robert, have received "only" 6 per cent of the money they need to pay investigators, from the federal government, according to Fishman. "National committees are becoming involved in this case; we're just a fledging committee," she added.

SW bottle throwing case begins

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

The trial of Brian G. Turner, which began yesterday with the prosecution presenting its case, will resume Nov. 2 when Turner testifies in his own defense.

Turner is a UMass student who allegedly threw a bottle from the 13th floor of George Washington Dorm in Southwest on Oct. 11th.

The case is being tried in the District Court of Northampton, with Judge A.J. Morse presiding.

The hearing began shortly after 3:42 p.m. when defense counsel William St. James asked that all witnesses be sequestered from the courtroom until their testimony was required.

Institutional Protection Officer James Morton was prosecuting attorney Frank Collins's first witness.

Morton said that he not only saw the glass object come out of the window but also saw the defendant leaning out trying to replace the screen. Morton was in the parking lot talking with a man whose car he had ticketed at the time of the incident.

Morton said that the object landed approximately 15 feet from where he stood. The glass fragments were then entered into testimony.

Prosecution asked for a description of the individual Morton saw that night. Morton answered that he saw a young dark haired male with a thin face wearing a green short sleeved shirt.

St. James, in his cross examination, showed Morton two photographs of Washington dorm and asked if he could point out Turners room. When Morton did so, the photograph entered into evidence.

Morton was asked if the could swear that the person he saw leaning out the window was Brian Turner. Morton replied that he could not swear it was the same person.

Campus officer Eliot Kabachnick then took the stand. Kabachnick was summoned by Morton to the scene where he determined that the object was flung from the thirteenth floor and that the room was 1309, the room Turner lives in.

Kabachnick entered Turners room where Turner was read his rights and asked what he had seen and heard. Turner was clad in a green t-shirt.

Turner said that he heard a pop down below like a light bulb breaking and that nothing had fallen from his window. Kabachnick, in the presence of Officer Richard Besse, placed Turner under arrest.

Defense questioned officer Kabachnick as to whether objects had come from Washington dorm throughout that weekend including the time Turner was being held in jail. Kabachnick answered yes. His written statement of events taking place that evening was then entered into evidence.

Officer Richard Besse's testimony confirmed that of Kabatchnick's with the addition that Besse recalled something about the defendant asking to be given a lie detector test.

The Prosecution rested its case.

Defense brought forth Turner's high school track coach in an attempt to establish character. Alan Carlson of South Dennis, Mass. testified that Turner was a mature and responsible young adult.

Prosecution tried to impress upon Carlson the seriousness of Turner's charges as Carlson attempted to show how Turner's good behavior during four years on the track team is inconsistent with his alleged vandalism at Southwest.

Court was then recessed until 2 p.m. November 2nd when Turner will testify in his own defense.

Theft of books is one of the costly and unnecessary problems the library faces in serving the UMass community. (Staff Photo by Laurie Traub)

Stolen, mutilated books subject of library exhibit

By DOROTHY A. CLARK

Theft and mutilation of books cost the UMass library approximately $34,500 a semester in replacements and repairs.

Now on display is an exhibit which shows how many of the books in the library must be replaced because of vandalism, according to Suzanne L. Hatfield, a reference librarian and chairperson of the Library Exhibit Committee.

The exhibit was set up by the committee in an attempt to make students aware of what is happening to their resources and to make them aware of the costs involved in repairing and replacing stolen or mutilated books.

"Students find most of the damage and report it to the circulation desk," said Hatfield.

"Circulation and reference people are actively involved in replacing damaged articles," she said.

"Missing pages are brought to the attention of the circulation desk, and may be replaced if possible, but this runs into expenses," said Gordon Fretwell, Associate Director for Public Relations.

"Some people are not aware of the things they could do to report the damage that they see. Most students are concentrating on their own assignments. Most students make reports when they are outraged by the damage which has been done," he said.

"It is easier to replace articles than it is to replace back issues of magazines," Hatfield said. "Articles can be xeroxed, but back issues of magazines cannot be purchased for the newsstand price."

Replacing books can be very expensive. "One page of photocopy may cost $11.15. Staff time cost $8.00, and this does not depend on the amount of damage or the number of pages to be copied," Fretwell said.

"There is also a basic charge of $3.00 plus the charge of number of pages. We try to get the most production for the lowest labor cost," he said.

"If someone steals or mutilates a book, it costs $10.00 in overhead to replace it, even if it is a paperback. Then, money is not available for additional copies and new materials," he said.

"Some books are out of print and can't be replaced," Hatfield said.

"The library exists for students and faculty," said Fretwell. "When a book is stolen it hurts the student body. The faculty has access to other libraries, but typically it is the undergraduate who is hurt the most."

According to Fretwell, the types of books most likely to be stolen are art education books, cook books, and ecology books. The exit control has helped lessen the theft of books.

Hatfield said, "We have open stacks while many universities have closed stacks. The reason for having closed stacks is to cut down on vandalism, but it's hard to say if it is effective."

The library has added more photocopy machines so that students will not underline and write in books. "We can't really say if this method helps, but it may lessen the problem a small amount," Fretwell said.

The library is also using microfilms, and is seeking missing issues of journals from the Universal Serial and Book Exchange (USBE) to battle the problem. USBE is a non-profit organization sponsored by library groups. With USBE, the cost of replacing the book is not so expensive.

"The exhibit has been effective from our point of view," Hatfield said.

"It has heightened the consciousness of others," said Fretwell.

'Video Sidewalk' performers in the Hatch

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

The Byrds, Elvin Bishop and Sha Na Na will be performing on video tape today from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the back of the Hatch.

Today's program begins this semester's "Video Sidewalk," sponsored by the Student Video Project (SVP). And for SVP, this is just the beginning of an ambitious development that could lead to a campus-wide system.

"Farewell to Filmore East", with the artists mentioned above, and "The Nashville Sound" highlight today's program.

Rita Russell, archive and distribution coordinator for SVP, says the group will take about 90 minutes of tapes from their library each week and play them for students over TV monitors at the Student Union.

Officials at the Hatch and Saga Foods, the food management corporation for the Campus Center, have been "very receptive" to the idea, according to Russell.

SVP began the "Video Sidewalk" last semester. It spent $2,300 to rent tapes from distributors and showed them to students during March and April. This year, SVP will be spending $1,000 to rent tapes it will show next semester in combination with student productions.

"It costs $100 to $200 to rent a half-hour tape for seven days," said Russell. "That's where a lot of our money goes."

This semester's "Video Sidewalk", Russell said, is designed to establish an audience. She said the SVP wants to "establish programming on a continuous basis" in hopes that "someday we'll have programming all day long."

"It's done on other campuses," she pointed out.

The SVP has about 160 of its own video tapes, some student-made and some professionally produced. Subjects are mostly "on the entertainment side" as in feature films and concerts, Russell said. However, the project has also collected public affairs tapes, including student-produced tapes of this fall's anti-nuke teach-in and the summer's Toward Tomorrow Fair, both at UMass.

The SVP, a Recognized Student Organization funded by the Undergraduate Student Senate, has a Student Union office.

She said the SVP is hoping to enlarge its library with an increasing amount of student productions.

"Ultimately we'd like to become a production house where students can produce their own video tapes," she said.

SVP is looking forward to the day when the university has a cable television network on campus.

"When UMass finally does get wired for cable, it (SVP) will be an outlet for student productions," Russell said.

Michael Cuddy, SVP productions coordinator, said this is "sort of what the video project is working toward."

"We've already provided all the programming for Sylvan this semester," he said. The Sylvan dorm complex has its own cable system operating from the basement of Cashin House. It is the only area on campus to have such a system.

Cuddy said in the future the university can either patch in to Pioneer Valley Cablevision in Amherst or open bidding to other cable companies in an effort to establish a transmitter for a campus cable system of its own.

Russell said a campus-wide cable system is a "very viable proposition," although "we expect it to take years to happen."

They said exorbitant costs and the need for more students to support the system are contributing factors delaying such a system.

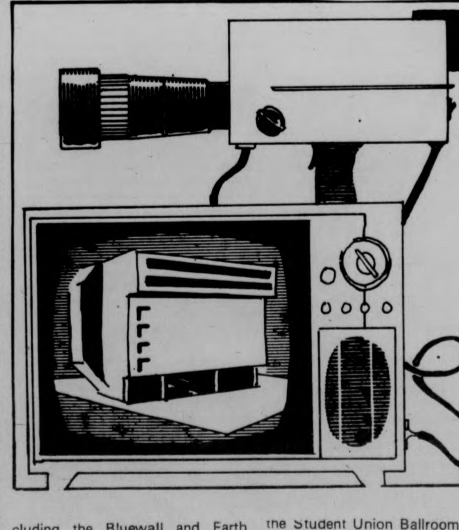
Cuddy emphasized that the SVP is concerned with "producing and promoting video on campus as a tool for students to use" and not "just TV."

The SVP has a studio in room 155 of the Campus Center, where it holds weekly drop-in sessions for students interested in video.

"We need people with ideas," Russell said. "It's easy to train people to run the equipment. It's harder to get people with ideas."

She said they are looking for writers or "anybody with an idea for a program."

The coordinators said the SVP is planning to use areas other than the Hatch to show video tapes, including the Bluewall and Earth Foods.



SVP is helping sponsor a proposal for "a festival of student films, theatre workshops, videotape shows and live music," Dec. 13 in the Student Union Ballroom.

James Schpeiser, who is helping plan the all-day, all-night event, said the proposal will go before the Program Council tomorrow night. He said council members seem in favor of the proposal.

Court O.K.'s Watergate tapes

WASHINGTON [AP] — The U.S. Court of Appeals cleared the way yesterday for broadcasting of the Nixon White House tapes played at the Watergate cover-up trial.

"The tapes played at trial are no longer confidential," the court ruled in a 2-1 decision.

The ruling also permits the sale of the tapes as phonograph records.

Included is the so-called "smoking gun" tape of June 23, 1972, when former President Richard M. Nixon ordered that the FBI's investigation of the Watergate break-in, six days earlier, be halted.

Also among the tapes played at the trial is the March 21, 1973 warning, by former Nixon counsel John Dean, that there was a cancer on the presidency.

The three television networks, the Public Broadcasting System, a news directors' organization and Warner Communications, Inc., a manufacturer of phonograph records, had asked to reproduce the tapes.

Initially, U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell had ruled that could be done, provided the applicants came up with a plan to prevent commercialization or undignified use. Later he reviewed proposals and found them unacceptable.

U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, who presided over the cover-up trial, then denied the applications, saying any such action had to wait until appeals were exhausted by the four men convicted in the case, John N. Mitchell, H.R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman and Robert C. Mardian.

Dukakis: 'No flat rates'

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, flanked by three dozen public officials, businessmen, heads of public institutions and some labor leaders, yesterday repeated his strong opposition to the flat electric rate referendum.

"The broad and diversified group of people who are with me today believe that the flat rate referendum is not in the best interests of the citizens of the Commonwealth," Dukakis said.

"The referendum was placed on the ballot by citizens angered over skyrocketing electric bills," he added, "and there is no question that the referendum, if approved by the voters, would result in lower monthly bills for homeowners and apartment dweller.

"But those monthly savings would be more than offset by increased health insurance premiums, higher food and clothing bills, higher prices for manufactured goods and increased taxes to pay for higher school and public building expenses."

Massachusetts Fair Share, sponsor of the flat rate proposal, issued a counterstatement saying the measure would not hurt the economy.

"Before people make up their minds, they ought to make sure they've heard what Ralph Nader and other consumer advocates say about uniform rates," said Fair Share member Natalie Schneiderman.

Dukakis said passage of the flat referendum, eliminating volume discounts to industrial and commercial users, would hurt the state's economy.

He said Massachusetts industry is already at a competitive disadvantage because of high energy costs and going to flat rates would "undoubtedly cause the loss of thousands of jobs."

However, when the businessmen executives at the conference were asked if they had any plans to leave or expand out of state, none answered in the affirmative.

Ms. Schneiderman said "Earlier this month at a Boston press conference Mr. Nader strongly urged passage of question 7 saying 'A yes vote on question 7 will be a fairer treatment of household users electricity."

HEW seeks abortion appeal

WASHINGTON [UPI] — HEW is seeking to appeal a federal judge's ruling that Medicaid patients are entitled to abortions at taxpayer expense notwithstanding a congressional ban on such outlays, a government spokesman said yesterday.

The spokesman said the Justice Department has been asked to bring the appeal, and has the request under consideration. In the interim, he said, the judge's order will be obeyed.

U.S. District Court Judge John Dooling in Brooklyn last week ordered the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to disregard the legislative ban and continue federal reimbursements to states for Medicaid abortions.

The prohibition on federal abortion aid was enacted as part of the $56.5 billion HEW appropriation for the fiscal year which began Oct. 1.

The bill provides: "None of the funds contained in this act shall be used to perform abortions except when the life of the mother would be endangered if the fetus were carried to term."

Writers find 'stinking fish'

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — Seven dusty volumes uncovered recently at Harvard University's Houghton Library have convinced two British journalists the last czar of Russia and his family did not die the way the history books say it happened.

The volumes — a dossier of sworn testimony and police reports collected by Russian investigators in 1918 and 1919 — show that Czar Nicholas II, Czarina Alexandra and their five children were not murdered by Bolsheviks in a cellar near Siberia 58 years ago, the two journalists say.

But Anthony Summers, a foreign correspondent and investigative reporter with the British Broadcasting Corp. since 1965, said on a visit here that he and his co-author, BBC reporter Tom Mangold, do not believe what some have suggested — that the whole family escaped Russia alive.

They concluded, he said, that the czar was executed by a firing squad, his son probably died of hemophilia, and Alexandra and three of the four daughters were probably killed on Lenin's orders seven or eight months after their supposed murder.

Summers says Lenin had the czarina, a German princess who had married into the Russian royal family, and three of the grand duchesses kept prisoners while he negotiated with the Kaiser for the return of Communists imprisoned behind German lines.

After the Germans were defeated on the battlefield and the Kaiser was removed from the German throne, Lenin had the women sent to Moscow in January of 1919, Summers says. Their trail ends there.

He says he and Mangold came to no firm conclusion about the fate of the youngest girl, the Grand Duchess Anastasia, but he maintains the evidence shows she escaped and was recaptured.

And he adds: "Once you get any of the family out of that famous cellar, then you have to take a second look."

Dozens of women have claimed to be Anastasia, most plausibly Anna Anderson of Charlottesville, Va., who fought a 30-year lawsuit in German courts to get her claims recognized. She lost in 1970.

Summers and Mangold began their work in 1971 for a BBC documentary on which Summers says they expected to spend about two weeks. What they found, he says, was that "there were holes in the evidence, stinking fish, gaps in the information."

Commission to suspend Seabrook construction?

WASHINGTON [AP] — Environmental group and power company lawyers argued yesterday whether the Nuclear Regulatory Commission should suspend construction of a nuclear power plant at Seabrook, N.H.

Anthony Roisman, representing a coalition of environmental groups, urged the commissioners at a hearing to suspend construction to allow the weighing of environmental impacts of managing wastes from the plant.

Thomas Dignan, representing the Public Service Company of New Hampshire, said the power company should be allowed to continue building Seabrook while the commission addresses the court-mandated environmental issues.

The court decision is being appealed and could be reversed, Dignan noted. In any event, he continued, the plant will not create wastes in the construction phase. To halt construction would cost the company money and its team of contractors, designers and laborers, he said.

Roisman said if construction is not suspended now it may well have to be suspended later at greater costs to the company and its rate payers. In any event, the regulations on wastes will have to be developed and applied to Seabrook.

'Nation lacks energy policy'

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — The president of the Central Maine Power Co. said yesterday night that the nation's energy requirements cannot be met without the use of nuclear power.

Elwin W. Thurlow complained that the nation lacks an energy policy to meet its needs because there are "too many people with sponge-rubber backbones in Washington, D.C."

The chief executive officer of Maine's largest electric company made the statement in remarks prepared for delivery to businessmen here.

Thurlow said that while New England currently enjoys substantial energy reserves, shortages of electricity are threatened in the early 1980s.

"The margin of safety between reliable power and potential shortages can only be maintained if we continue to plan and construct for the future and remove the very real barriers that now exist to an adequate energy supply," he said.

"There is no way that I can see that the national energy requirement can be met without nuclear power."

CMP operates Maine's only atomic power plant at Wiscasset and has invested in three out-of-state nuclear plants. It has proposed construction of a second nuclear plant for Maine at Sears Island, a project to generate 1.2 million kilowatts of electricity at a cost of more than $1 billion.

He said the project has been stalled, "not because of safety problems, not because of financial problems but because we ran up against the formidable barrier of bureaucratic ambiguity."

NEWS IN BRIEF

More jurors selected

FITCHBURG, Mass. [AP] — Two more jurors were selected yesterday, bringing the total number chosen to five, in the trial of three men accused of submitting fraudulent auto repair claims to cheat General Motors Corp.

On trial are R. Gordon Butler of New York, former owner of a Lowell Chevrolet agency; Theodore Kemos, former manager of the agency, and George O. Edgerly, service manager. They are charged with conspiracy to commit larceny.

Three jurors were picked Monday, and Judge Henry H. Chmielinski said the selection of 11 more panelists would probably take the rest of the week.

The first time the men were tried, the case in Brockton Superior Court ended in a mistrial. The new trial was moved out of Lowell because of pretrial publicity.

At yesterday morning's session, 51 prospective jurors were considered but more than half were dismissed because they either had read previous accounts of the case or said they would undergo hardship if sequestered for the trial, expected to take up to six weeks.

Father Drinan becomes target

BROOKLINE, Mass. [AP] — To those who do not share his liberal philosophy, U.S. Rep. Robert F. Drinan has become a target, and Republican challenger Arthur D. Mason is the ammunition.

Mason likes to refer to himself as a Jewish war hero who went to Boston College, the "ideal" candidate in the 4th congressional district which is 50 per cent Catholic with strong Jewish pockets and a military base the Defense Department wants to close.

But the real issue in this tight contest is whether Drinan, one of the most liberal members of Congress, has become an anachronism.

"There are areas of great softness in his support, and he has never got the majority of voters to vote for him," says Mason, 35, a lawyer from Brookline who describes himself as a "moderate".

It is true. Drinan squaked by his last three elections with at least two opponents splitting the opposition. Never has he received more than 50.9 per cent of the vote; never has he faced just one challenger.

The Drinan-Mason fight has been an unusual one, laced with ironies and a couple of cries of "foul" from both sides.

In a campaign that has attracted national attention as well as national financing, Mason contends Drinan is a relic of the past, as are the issues that brought him recognition — the Vietnam War and Watergate.

Pot dog

BOSTON [AP] — Lancer, a German Shepherd trained to spot drugs, was routinely sniffing baggage at Logan Airport early Monday when he suddenly stopped at two bags that authorities said contained a combined 90 pounds of marijuana bricks.

Two former Rhode Island men were arrested. It was Lancer's second pinch in two days, following the arrest Sunday of two men and a woman from the Boston area.

"The bricks were wrapped in plastic bags and covered with talcum powder," said Ron Brinn, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Port Authority.

"People think the powder will throw off the dog, but Lancer has been right 100 per cent of the time."

The suspects in both incidents had just gotten off planes from Miami, Brinn said.

Brinn identified the suspects in the Monday arrests as Raymond E. Ashcroft, 30, and Steven P. Maggiacomo, 27, both formerly of Cranston, R.I. but now living in Tallahassee, Fla.

Anti ban-gun money 'legal'

NEWTON, Mass. [UPI] — Unitemized contributions totalling $96,000 to an organization battling a proposed ban on handguns in Massachusetts are legal, a spokesman for antigun control groups insisted yesterday.

Common Cause — Massachusetts said Monday the contributions by two organizations "could be construed as a laundering of funds."

WASHINGTON: The Nuclear Regulatory Commission met yesterday to hear oral arguments concerning a proposed nuclear plant at Seabrook, N.H. Talking before the hearing began are Thomas Dignan, Boston, representing the New Hampshire Public Service Commission (R) and Anthoney Roisman (L) Washington, D.C., representing the Natural Resources Defense Council. Salary hikes under settlement

BOSTON [UPI] — State employes would get salary hikes and bonuses of $1,000 within a six month period under a proposed wage settlement issued by a three member fact finding panel.

The hikes, some of them retroactive to July 1, are now being studied by negotiators for the state and the Alliance, the union representing some 43,000 Massachusetts state employes.

An Alliance spokesman said yesterday the report was "interesting, but it is incomplete.

"The economic recommendations are an improvement over the state's offer, but there is a great deal still to be dealt with at the bargaining table," the spokesman said.

Reviewing the proposal for the state were Administration Secretary John R. Buckley and Labor Relations Director George Bennett.

"It's more than we originally intended to pay," Buckley said.

"It could have been worse, but obviously from my point of view it could have been less money."

According to administration sources, the proposed package is "quite similar" to the recommendations made by mediator Eric Schmertz several months ago.

Generous crowd expected

KEENE, N.H. [UPI] — Some of New Hampshire's top runners will race for the life of John Warner Jr. Sunday.

They will be trying to raise money so the parents of the 16-year-old boy, who has no functioning kidneys, may install the indoor plumbing needed to obtain a kidney dialysis machine.

Warner, of Nelson, received a kidney transplant from his father about four years ago.

But his body rejected it. Now the teenager must be driven to Boston three times a week for treatment — a trip that measures three hours each way.

"Children's Hospital in Boston has promised to install a dialysis machine in his home and to train his mother to operate it, provided we can get running water into the house before winter," said Clesson Blaisdell, a state senator from Keene.

Blaisdell is $1,000 shy of the $2,100 he figures is needed for digging a well and installing a pump. On top of that, plumbing must be installed in the house.

That's where Blaisdell hopes the seven-mile road race through Keene will help.

The race will include by top New Hampshire runners and is expected to draw a generous crowd.

PUCA's complex case

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — The "most complex" case ever before the Connecticut Public Utilities Control Authority began yesterday with Chairman Albert J. Kleban sidestepping a request he remove himself because of alleged bias.

Kleban ordered consideration proceed of the two rate hike cases that could affect consumer pocket books to the tune of $112 million despite a consumer group's efforts to halt them.

At stake was review of an already-granted 1974 rate hike which a state court has rejected, and a new $56.4 million increase sought by Northeast Utilities.

The 1974 increase was for $47.7 million. But company officials say if they are forced to make refunds, it will cost them at least $56 million.

Both cases will be considered concurrently, but the PUCA has pledged not to rule on the current request until the legality of the 1974 increase — upon which the new request is based — is determined.

Northeast Controller Warren Hunt was the main witness yesterday, seeking to substantiate the firm's request for additional revenues.

Kleban refused to disqualify himself immediately as one of three commissioners hearing the cases and asked Alexander Goldfarb, representing the Connecticut Citizens Action Group which made the request, to document the charge.

The chairman said the issues before the commission were "the most complex issue ever to come before a regulatory body in the state of Connecticut."

The State Supreme Court last week upheld a lower court order directing the PUCA to review the rate hike given NU in 1974. A Hartford Court of Common Pleas judge had ruled that increase illegal.

LONDON [UPI] — The British pound, buoyed briefly by buyers attracted by its low price levels, collapsed at the final bell yesterday and posted a record closing low of $1.59.

Even the best news about the nation's unemployment in more than four years failed to forestall another disastrous day for what was once the world's strongest currency.

The close of $1.59 was the lowest in sterling's history, although it dipped even lower during Monday's tailspin. It had opened around $1.59 but then perked up with small buying order to above $1.60 for a brief while. Trading last week had closed at $1.6485.

The latest unemployment figures gave the government some of its best news in more than four years with a report that the rolls of jobless workers declined by more than 78,000 last month.

"If we can maintain this pace, Britain is on its way," said Employment Secretary Albert Booth.

Another unconfirmed report that Britain's prime lending rate — the minimum interest charged to major creditors — may be increased from 15 to 18 per cent, a jump of 20 per cent and the second within two weeks, helped the pound during the day.

A top foreign exchange dealer said "such a move would be completely irrelevant to Britain's economic problem," but the rumor brought some traders who have sold pounds back into the market to cover themselves.

Plenty of factors still operated to keep the pound down.

Nigeria wants U.N. to vote 'nation' invalid

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — Nigeria introduced a resolution in the United Nations yesterday declaring invalid the designation of the Transkei as an independent nation and stating that citizens of the region "remain citizens of South Africa."

Acting in his capacity as chairman of the 18-nation Special Committee on Apartheid, Nigerian Ambassador Leslie O. Harriman said the resolution was cosponsored by at least 25 nations.

The General Assembly was expected to vote on the resolution later yesterday.

The resolution referred to previous General Assembly condemnations of South Africa's policy to create racially segregated black homelands as "bantustans."

Transkei, a country of two million inhabitants and about twice the size of Massachusetts, was the first "homeland" to be granted "independence" from white-ruled South Africa.

Under South Africa's apartheid plans, eight more homelands are eligible to follow the Transkei. Their total land area, and eventually the republic's 18 million black majority, 72 per cent of the population, will have its political rights restricted to homelands.

Luconia abolished

MUNICH, West Germany [UPI] — The flag showing a golden sun rising over a red, white, and blue background will wave no more.

The Republic of Luconia has been abolished and its leaders stripped of their rank.

A court here ruled that four businessmen who founded the republic and appointed themselves president, interior minister, postal minister and justice minister had violated an ordinance banning the unauthorized use of titles.

The court fined the justice minister 1,500 marks $625 but suspended the sentence.

The four Germans said they founded the republic two years ago while drinking beer in a Munich bar.

They said they believed there is a place called Luconia, an uninhabited island in the South China Sea.

He doesn't jump the gun when calling elections

NEW YORK [UPI] — In the CBS office of Warren J. Mitofsky, a man who trusts computers more than political scientists, there hangs a copy of that 1948 newspaper with the headline "Dewey Defeats Truman."

And when the 1976 Wisconsin presidential primary is mentioned, this professional man with a neatly trimmed beard affords himself a brief, smug smile.

That was the night Mitofsky, director of the CBS news and election survey unit, held off for five hours after the other two networks had projected Morris Udall as the winner, then at 2:45 a.m. correctly reported Jimmy Carter would wind up with the most votes.

The morning after both ABC and NBC had named Udall the winner and broadcast his victory statement, final election returns showed Carter had 270,456 votes — 37 per cent; and Udall 263,070 — 36 per cent.

"We're not playing a game to see how fast we can get on the air with the winner," said Mitofsky, a former stastician for the U.S. Census Bureau who hasn't been wrong yet in "calling" more than 400 elections since 1968.

"The only thing our samples told us in that election was that it was going to be close."

Mitofsky's counterparts at the other two networks, who came out of Wisconsin with egg on their faces, defend their systems of projecting elections. And while there are many similarities in the ways the three networks decide an election, there are some differences.

All three will base their decision in the presidential election on a sampling of 3,000 precincts, more or less. But each has picked its own precincts — for sometimes dissimilar reasons — and ultimately a team evaluates the computer printouts and some individual makes a judgement call.

And despite Mitofsky's comment that he's not in a race to broadcast the winner first, his competitors say that's the name of the game.

At ABC on election night the buck stops at the desk of Walter Pfister, the vice president for special television news programs, who thought his team was ahead on the night of the Wisconsin primary when at 9:28 p.m. they flashed Udall the projected winner.

"The guys at CBS can gloat if they want — we gloat about our two-hour lead in the 1968 presidential election — but there but for the grace of God go them," said Pfister.

"When we made that Udall projection almost all our key precincts were in. The decision desk was confident."

In the next hour, Udall's lead began to erode as the rural vote started coming in. Pfister was about ready to back down when at 10:22 p.m. the NBC desk, fussing with computer problems, gave Udall his second premature victory.

"It was a terrible night," said Roy Wetzel, who had taken over as head of the NBC news election unit just two weeks earlier. "We screwed up."

But Wetzel admits they were stampeded into the Udall projection by ABC and a balky computer that was holding up their own returns 20 to 30 minutes.

DENVER: A U.S. Postal worker makes his appointed rounds during the first snowstorm of the year here yesterday. A major storm is moving through the Rocky Mountains. Officials said four inches of snow is expected here. Driving warnings are posted for Colorado, Wyoming and New Mexico. (UPI)

Vermonters dust winter snowduds

BURLINGTON, Vt. [AP] Vermonters are dusting off their winter clothes, following a storm yesterday that brought the season's first measureable snowfall here about one month ahead of schedule.

Nearly one inch of snow was recorded in Burlington, which normally does not get its first significant accumulation until late November, said National Weather Service forecaster Will Sweet.

In higher elevations snow depth ranged up to several inches.

Road conditions were poor, as many Vermont motorists braved icy and snow-covered highways on summer tires.

No major accidents were reported.

Atop Vermont's highest peak, Mount Mansfield in Stowe, transmitter engineers at WCAX-TV recorded three inches of snow.

"It's early, and it's a heck of a lot more than we need," grumbled engineer Ted Teffren.

His view was not shared at Sugarbush ski area in Warren, where a skier made the season's first run a month earlier than usual.

Gerald Cayne, a New York City stockbroker who traditionally is the first and last skiier on Sugarbush's slopes each season, traveled to Vermont to make three trips down the mountain Monday.

"Normally, he doesn't get in his first run until around Thanksgiving Day," said Chan Weller at Sugarbush.

No Vermont ski areas were open, but some operators said they could offer limited skiing soon if temperature remained near the freezing point.

While the snow was early this year, it did not beat the all-time Burlington record for the first significant snowfall of the season, set more than half a century ago on Oct. 10, 1925.

Exploring Nixon's exile

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. [UPI] — Four years ago, 47 million voters gave Richard Nixon their nation's highest honor.

Now Nixon is in utter isolation, almost in hiding, either in his Casa Pacifica home or on a golf course.

The former President has taken not the slightest part in the campaign. He has not given his support to Gerald Ford, the man he personally put in office, nor has he been asked to.

"All Carter needs is for Nixon to endorse Ford or to indicate he is working for his election," says Mrs. Donna Wilkinson, a San Clemente city councilwoman and Republican in this town where the GOP outnumbers Democrats 5-1.

Nixon has recovered his health. He plays golf three and sometimes four times a week, often as many as 36 holes in a single day, zipping around in an electric cart with Secret Service agents never more than a few yards away.

His favorite course is Shorecliffs, a public links on the northern edge of San Clemente.

An aide telephones to say Nixon is on his way. He tees off with no waiting and then "plays through" the golfers ahead of him.

A few weeks ago a group of young boys gathered near the first tee and, as Nixon prepared to hit his drive, one of them called out:

"Hey, Nixon, do you cheat at golf like you did in the White House?"

He acted as if he had not heard the cruel jest. Clubhouse attendants shooed the boys off and Nixon went ahead with his game.

But that moment of humiliation was rare. Not only because of his ultraprivate routine but also because this community seems to have banded together to ensure that privacy.

You walk into the Walgreen's drug store on Avenida Del Mar and the matronly clerk at the cash register is all smiles and friendliness until you ask if she ever sees Nixon.

"No, I haven't seen him," she snaps. "I only saw him once when he was president."

Warren Esterline, managing editor of the San Clemente Sun Pilot, agrees folks are somewhat protective of the town's most famous resident.

"I think the majority think he is a good guy," says Esterline.

"They think he was removed from office improperly, that it was full of politics. It is something they would like to forget about."

The Sun Pilot conducted an informal telephone poll from numbers chosen at random from the directory, asking:

"Are you still interested in reading or hearing about the activities of Richard Nixon?"

The survey produced 310 replies with 54 per cent responding "No", 43 per cent "Yes," and 3 per cent refusing 'comment.

Esterline says he feels that many of those who said they did not wish to hear any more about Nixon really meant they didn't feel he should endure further exposure in the media.

B. Patrick Lane, an attorney and the town's Republican mayor, says he doesn't believe people shield Nixon, that San Clemente treats him any differently than would other sections of the country, or that it is unusual that he is never seen around town.

"I think many people feel that he made a grave mistake but that he has paid a terrible price for it," says Lane. "There are those who defend him very strongly, but I have heard equally the reverse.

"And I don't think it is strange that you don't see him on the streets in view of the office he held and the manner he left it. It isn't as if this were his home town, that he delivered papers as a boy. He simply bought property on the south edge of town. We seldom saw him when he was President.

"You would hardly expect him to come down to the beer bar and arm wrestle with the boys."

Although it is impossible to get information from Nixon's office about his routine, visitors agree he is working long hours on his book of memoirs and preparing for television interviews with David Frost.

A reporter for the Wall Street Journal did manage a brief chat with Nixon at Shorecliffs not long ago, and the former President said he was working on the book every day.

"Writing is the toughest thing I've ever done," Nixon said.

There is speculation about what Nixon will do when the election is over. Many Nixon watchers feel he will emerge from his cocoon and attempt to take an active part in public affairs.

Maine may assist beano

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — The Maine Lottery Commission is seriously considering taking over supervision of beano games as a way to raise more dollars for the state treasury, Lottery Director George Orestis said yesterday.

Orestis said the commission is studying the Massachusetts system, where the state gets a percentage from the games run by churches, lodges and charitable organizations.

Beano is played in most of Maine's larger cities and towns.

It uses game cards and is similar to bingo.

Orestis said under the proposal, the commission would supervise the games and provide the assistance to the groups running them.

No decision has been made on what the percentage the state would take, he said.

Beano games in Maine are now licensed by the state police.

A spokesman for the Massachusetts lottery, David Ellis, said the state takes 5 per cent of the receipts, some of which goes for administrative costs.

Ellis said the profit to Massachusetts was $4.2 million last year on gross beano and bingo receipts of about $102 million.

He said the revenue reported annually to the state is 10 times greater than it was four years ago when the games were simply licensed.

Churches and civic groups running the games in Massachusetts are delighted with the new system, Ellis said, because they too are making more money from the games.

Massachusetts also runs a weekly lottery, instant winner games and a daily numbers game, which produce far more revenue than the beano take.

UMass junior's job nets prime rib for 25

When Robert Leslie, a UMass junior, took a job as publicity assistant at the Hinsdale Race Track in Hinsdale, N.H. he wasn't aware of all of the fringe benefits the job had to offer. He found out in a rather dramatic way last Friday night when he and 25 dorm floor neighbors had prime rib dinners and drinks at the race track clubhouse — all on the house.

Joseph Sullivan, Jr., general manager of the track, was the host of the group, who live on the twenty-first floor of George Washington dorm in Southwest. "It was great," said Leslie, "everybody kept asking each other, 'when is the bill going to come?' "

The feature race of the night, with the fastest dogs, was christened the "George Washington Twenty-first Floor Feature Race." Another high point of the evening was when Mike Ognibene won $100 — a pleasant way to celebrate on a Friday night that was also his nineteenth birthday.

PROFS DO CARE is the word from Indiana University, where the Daily Student recently conducted a poll of 90 profs. The revelation is that "The majority considered that watching students learn is the most satisfying aspect of teaching on a university level."

Some professors said their biggest enjoyment comes from conveying their enthusiasm for a subject to students. And one English prof confided that "I learn as much from the students as they do from me."

There are also those who consider lecturing more of an entertainment than a chore, the study found. One Slavic languages prof said that "We're all to a certain extent exhibitionists. A really good lecture is one where the instructor really gets involved with the material and its transmission, which is, to a certain extent, performing."

On the other hand, a physics prof deplored having to "teach big classes because more time is spent on showmanship and trying to make the class interesting to such a vast number of people."

Still, some I.U. profs are satisfied with being just a part of the community: "I'm an intellectual, I like to think" is the way a business law prof put it.

How about it, UMies?

MEANWHILE, a headline on page one of the Miami-Dade (Fla.) Community College Catalyst, over an SG and Dean's Department coffee hour, shared this gastronomic intelligence "Dean's Coffee Successful."

Like, good to the last drop?

WOMEN ARE APPRECIATED at Texas Tech. The University Daily, there, recently informed its readers that a high school basketball player had become the first women in Tech history to receive an athletic scholarship when she signed a letter of intent.

The renewable scholarship pays her tuition and fees. The five-foot-eleven athlete was captain of her high school team. In 1974, she received the "Most Valuable Player Award"; in 1975, the "Most Valuable Offensive Player Award."

With this scholarship, Tech joined most of the other universities in the Southwest Conference in granting athletic scholarships to women.

And what has UMass done for its female athletes lately?

Seven fishermen die at sea

PROVINCETOWN, Mass. [AP] — The town lowered the flags to half-staff Tuesday in mourning for seven fishermen, the latest to die at sea in the three and one-half centuries that men have been going down to the sea from this tiny port.

Veterans in the closely knit fishing community, mostly of Portuguese descent, described the disappearance of the Patricia Marie as "the most tragic fishing accident here since 1908," when 17 went to the bottom with the schooner Cora McKay off Newfoundland.

Relatives were pleading with the Coast Guard to resume the search for the bodies of the missing crew members for a "decent burial, at least." The Coast Guard called off the search after 23 hours.

The body of William King, 46, captain of the 65-foot vessel, was found three miles off Nauset Beach Monday.

Only an oil slick marked that spot, where the Patricia Marie went down while returning Sunday night in company with other boats from scalloping off Chatham, 30 miles down Cape Cod.

The missing were identified by their families as Ernest Cordeiro, 45; Robert Zawalick, 23; Morris Joseph, 47; Joseph's son, Elton, 19; Walter Marshall, 55; and Richard Oldenquist.

"It's bad enough losing them," said Paul Joseph of his brother 'Mott' and nephew, Elton. "At least bring the bodies in so we can give them a decent burial.

"What surprises me is that they're giving up so soon," said Joseph, a contractor. "We feel there's still hope. They could still be floating on a piece of wood."

'Mott' Joseph had been a fisherman since he was 15. His father is a retired fisherman; his uncle, also a fisherman, disappeared at sea 30 years ago.

"Mott didn't want his son to be a fisherman," said Joseph. "He didn't believe in young men going fishing even though he started young. He thought it was too dangerous."

But Elton, who was planning to be married in a year, had wanted to make some money.

In bars along the fishing pier, fishermen could only guess what happened to the boat they called "the best equipped boat in the harbor."

"The boat must have been loaded to the scuppers," said Steven Zawalick, 30, whose brother was among the crew.

"The way it sounds, the captain must have been in the wheelhouse and the crew down below. They must have hit a big swell and rolled over. Nobody had a chance to get out."

Other vessels reported 10-foot waves, heavy rain and winds of 30 knots.

Crewmen reported the Patricia Marie disappeared from sight and from their radar screens in seconds.

Electric chair 'not answer'

MADISON, Wis. [AP] — Theodore Bernstein, an electrical engineering professor, doubles as an after-dinner sepaker. His topic: the electric chair, its origin, history and use.

"There were a number of botched hangings in New York in the 1880s, and people began to look for something better," the University of Wisconsin professor relates.

"They thought of shooting, the garrotte, the guillotine and other things but they were all too messy. They thought of lethal injections but no doctors would do it."

Then, with the rise in the popularity of electricity, people began being accidentally electrocuted and it seemed quick and easy.

"There was a big political thing over how legal electrocutions should be done between Thomas Edison and George Westinghouse," says Bernstein. "Edison was against capital punishment but said if it was done it should be done with Westinghouse's alternating current because it was more dangerous."

Westinghouse was against electrocutions with either system, his AC or Edison's DC direct current, Bernstein says.

"There was no word for electrocution at the time, and Edison wanted it to be called Westinghousing," he reports.

Bernstein gives his lectures several times a year to engineering groups and university seminars. His main interest is electrical and lighting safety, but he began studying the electric chair because people in his audiences continually asked about it.

He noted, however, that some people walk out of the lecture because of the subject.

Indeed, Bernstein himself is beginning to find the subject discouraging now that a Supreme Court ruling has reopened the way for use of the electric chair.

"I am very much opposed to capital punishment for personal reasons," he says. "If they start executions again, I will probably stop my talks. It wouldn't be interesting any more. It used to be of historical significance, but now it's getting too close to home."

Bernstein credits a Buffalo dentist, A.P. "Old Spark" Southwick, with spreading the word of the electric chair and calls him "the father of the legal electrocution."

The first legal electric execution was in 1890 when a New York fruit peddler was electrocuted for killing his girl friend while both were drunk, Bernstein says.

Did you know that... 25,000 people in the U.S. are killed by handguns each year?

But surely most of those are criminals shot by citizens defending themselves or their property...

Not all! Seventy-two per cent of all hand gun murders are among family, friends and acquaintances. And 40 per cent of those killed by hand guns each year are children and teenagers!

The DVP and Cleaver: Who is raping whom?

By NKRUMAH OLINGA

If certain black people did not exist, the white world would have to invent them, and indeed, there is an argument that can be made that it does precisely that. What, for example, would white Rhodesian and South African racists do, without an Idi Amin Dada at whom to point as the inevitable consequence of black rule? They, of course, conveniently forget to mention that Amin was the creation of the British military, and that he could not have come to power over the hapless Ugandans without the active support of the Israelis and the connivance of the British.

Eldridge Cleaver, similarly an invention of white racist fantasy, has been fostered on the black movement of this country by elements of the white hippie press, the lunatic fringe of the white literary underworld and the so-called "new left."

Now, through the efforts of the Distinguished Visitors Program, Cleaver is being paid $2700 of the students' money to come to this campus to do what? This is the question that the DVP must be made to answer publicly. Rape is, after all, not a victimless crime, and in this case I am afraid that it is we the students who are the victims.

Has the DVP taken leave of their collective senses? Did they ever have senses to take leave of? What can they possibly have in mind, except a gratuitous insult to the entire black community of this campus? Is there no way that they can be removed from office for their poor taste,. bad judgement, and abuse of a public trust and waste of our money? At least there should be mechanisms by which they can be made to pay back the funds being so blatantly misused.

Cleaver suddenly realizes that all that was wrong with 'Fascist America' was Nixon... He should explain that to Craemen Gethers and Earl Brown.

The activities of the DVP is long overdue for a close scrutiny from the student body at large. Last year I and a number of black students approached them for assistance in bringing a number of speakers from Southern Africa to discuss political developments there. The amounts involved were small, the speakers legitimate and bona fide political representatives of black liberation movements; and the timeliness and significance of their subject obvious.

The DVP declined assistance. It was not, they said, that the program was not valuable, nor was the price exhorbitant. No, it was just, they explained, that the program seemed to be thoroughly planned, and it was their policy to participate in all planning of DVP programs.

So now they have planned, and the result of their planning is Eldridge Cleaver?

Let us examine the stranger wonderful career of our next "distinguished visitor."

Cleaver began his public life as a petty stickup man and rapist. Hardly an auspicious beginning to a distinguished career. Actually, in retrospect, that might have the high point, for since that time, it has been a steady moral decline. While serving time in jail Cleaver wrote a book detailing his career as a rapist. For reasons explicable only in terms of the perverted moral and literary judgement of the white avant guard, the book was widely praised and Cleaver the rapist becomes Cleaver the spokesman for black liberation, at least according to the bourgeois radicals of the new left.

But that at least was relatively harmless; a black hustler ripping off the white hustlers is fair enough. If Cleaver had stopped there it would have been harmless and even a little funny.

But unfortunately for a number of young black men, he did not. Aided by much adoring publicity in Ramparts Magazine, Cleaver emerges in his next incarnation as a "revolutionary" leader of the Black Panther Party. This organization soon loses any seriousness it may have had, and becomes a kind of fantasy extension of white racism. It becomes a kind of travelling theater group specializing in revolutionary fantasy, the cowboy syndrome in black face, its symbol is the black male, and the automatic rifle; its costume is black beret, leather jacket, tight jeans and motorcycle boots; its program; liberation of the black community and its strategy; armed conflict with the police and army; its philosophy something caaled with a straight face, "Revolutionary suicide."

Well, as can be expected it is not too revolutionary, but for many poor brothers it is suicidal. The sheer irresponsible rhetoric, articulated by Cleaver, calling on black people to become the vanguard of the armed struggle, is to do something they have neither the arms, the training or the numbers to do proves very destructive to a lot of dedicated but misguided brothers, many of whom are still in jail, some of whom are dead.

Cleaver is arrested and with his usual responsibility to his allies and associates jumps bail, leaving the dummies who put up the bond stuck for many thousand dollars.

In his next incarnation he is the revolutionary leader in exile, accepting the sanctuary of such revolutionary countries as Cuba, Algeria and North Korea. In keeping with this role he issues many statements attacking "American imperialism, American fascism at home, and Capitalist exploitation in general."

However, in each of these countries the reality of actually making a revolution with the sacrifice and discipline required is very different from talking about revolution to college campuses, on American TV, and to audiences of wealthy radical chic white folks. He soon wears out his welcome and the patience of his hosts in Cuba, Algeria and Korea and ends up insFrance, among the only kind of people who go for his hustle: the western bourgeois.

Then comes the vision, like Saul on the road to Damascus, Cleaver has a vision in a blinding flash of light and sees, on the face of the moon, the faces of Fidel, Mao and finally, Jesus. In his final incarnation Cleaver becomes a born-again Christian and sees that he was all wrong. America is the freest country in the world, the oppression of blacks is not so severe, and he wants to return home to spread the word.

Suddenly he realizes that all that was wrong with what he used to call "Fascist Amerika" was Nixon, and now that Nixon is gone he, and all of us, can get fair trials and justice. He should explain that to Craemen Gethers and Earl Brown while he is here, surely it will comfort them.

So while others are dead and in jail, Cleaver the Christian patriot is running around loose, being defended by a committee of conservative types who used to denounce him at every step, attacking his former hosts in Cuba, Algeria, and Korea, and collecting our money paid to him through the courtesy of the DVP.

What can such a person teach us? We do not believe that Cleaver is a sell-out as a recent article in the Collegian suggested. To sell-out, one must have at some point have believed. Clearly the only thing Cleaver has ever been committed to is his own survival and his own hustle. And obviously his commitment to that is still as strong as ever. He seems also to be a fairly committed rapist, because with the aid of the DVP, that is clearly what he is doing to us, the students. The only question is, why is the DVP holding our legs apart? They should be indicted or at least recalled from office, as accessories to rape — ours.

In support of Susan Saxe

To the Editor:

In response to his editorial on October 22 on Susan Saxe, I find it indeed ironic that Rick Gureghian seeks to destroy the same judicial process he wants to defend from "self-proclaimed revolutionaries" like Susan Saxe. In claiming that the hung jury in her case is "a subversion of justice," in suggesting that the jury's verdict was faulty because "a majority of Mass. citizens definitely saw differently," in passing judgment on her without hearing all the evidence the jury heard, Gureghian seems to suggest not only that he can second guess the jury but also that the whole judicial process should be bypassed for some kind of mob justice, a trial by majority opinion.

Shall we put the issue of her guilt or innocence as a referendum question on the ballot so that "justice - and her guilt - will prevail?" After all, as he says, "a man died because of her, and that alone should determine the verdict." By that logic, all our Presidents who sent soldiers to fight and kill are guilty of mass murders, the directors of the C.I.A. who allowed operatives to aid the fascists in overturning Allende's government in Chile, a process in which 50,000 political prisoners were killed, who also had operatives tied to the recent bombing of a Cuban civilian plane in which 73 died, Nelson Rockefeller who allowed the murder of 43 unarmed men at Attica by state troopers, and on and on.

Now I happen to believe that these men I mentioned are in fact guilty of murder while Susan Saxe is not — for the simple fact that they are in positions of leadership and power to dictate policy, while Saxe and the rest of us who object to such fiendish sacrifice of lives for political ends, are not. What differentiates them from Susan is that they knowingly engaged in actions which would result in the massive loss of life, for ends which tied directly to political aggrandizement and preservation of wealth.

Susan on the contrary had no such power. She and the rest of us who objected to our genocidal war policies in Vietnam and our interventionist policies in Santo Domingo, Bolivia, Cuba, Greece, Chile, etc. as well as to racist and sexist justice at home did not have the power by abstaining from action to change those murderous policies. As a result, those of us who felt and feel that our representatives were and are committing "genocide in our name" felt morally compelled to acts of civil disobedience to protest, and to try to bring the issues to the American people's consciousness. Whether or not Susan was actually involved in robbing the bank it is clear that the murder of the policeman was 1] not intentional and 2] not condoned, planned or done by her. I therefore would find it a travesty of justice if Susan were found guilty of murder while those in positions of power responsible for mass murder are not even brought to trial.

In any case, I find Mr. Gureghian's statements false and irresponsible. He portrays Saxe as a woman who sought to destroy the judicial process, which is simply untrue: The Declaration of Independence makes it clear that there are times when the people are justified in disobeying the law of the land if governmental actions threaten their rights. Many of us felt that to be the case with the forced conscription of soldiers to fight in a war [Vietnam] that was not in our national interest and violated nations' rights to self-determination.

Gureghian's comments are irresponsible because they suggest the subversion of the principle of trial by jury and the substitution of trial by press. His comments make it less likely that Susan can get a fair re-trial, and it is my understanding that even the responsible right in this country wish to protect civil liberties. Mr. Gureghian has perhaps unwittingly allied himself with the Ku Klux Klan, the Birchers, and other such radical subverters of the American judicial system.

A benefit potluck dinner for women to raise money for Susan Saxe's retrial will be held Friday evening at 23 Pleasant St. in Northampton.

Frat noise bothers others

To the Editor:

As I sit here reflecting upon the hours of sleep I've lost and the amount of energy I've spent, I feel as though something ought to be said outloud for a lot of people to hear. I live in a residential area that is by and large composed of people like myself going to school, paying our way, trying to create some sort of decent life for ourselves off-campus.

The fraternity and sorority system house some chapters in this area. Friday night and Saturday night parties and noise are common and as far as I'm concerned, fine. It's when this sort of thing continues into the week that I get

The fraternity and sorority system house some chapters in this area. Friday night and Saturday night parties and noise are common and as far as I'm concerned, fine. It's when this sort of thing continues into the wek that I get upset. When there are people running around outside in the streets at 2 o'clock in the morning on a Tuesday or Wednesday night, screaming and yelling, I get mad. I have a right to sleep, to have it quiet at 2 a.m.

Calling the police has yet to yield effective responses. On one outstanding occassion, people in the neighborhood called the police a total of 16 times. Only twice did the police respond. They never did talk to the people involved.

My real question is, why can't the frats and sororities be restricted to one area where they are all together? The trustees just paid off the bonds on eight acres of land with the students' 364,000 dollars. Why can't those acres be used to put the rest of the stray frats and sororities with the rest in Fraternity-Sorority Park? Why must Amherst residents have to put up with this? Why should the children of this neighborhood be threatened by the cars that speed by on their way to the frats? Why should we have to put up with verbal abuse?

I would like to add that not ALL of the frats and sororities are offensive and that it is probably a small minority that gives all of the Greeks a bad name. I am not opposed, in theory, to the Greek system; but I would think that it would be beneficial, on all sides, to have them located all in the same place — Fraternity-Sorority Park.

Now that cold weather is coming around, I don't have to be as concerned, but I really do dread the warmer months in the spring. I hope some change will come about in this volatile and explosive situation.

More to be pitied

Halloween is upon us. For once, let's take the time to say a good word about monsters who, in the words of Russell Baker, "are more to be pitied than feared." Really, they're a decent lot.

Take Frankenstein. He's a harmless imbecile. His desires are few — the occasional cigar, some violin music, and a change of his comically undersized clothes. Unloved, this poor beguiled prometheus is treated as an instrument of scientific discovery, the realization of a mad doctor's monstrous dream, a victim of the principle that anything goes in the quest of knowledge. Ridiculed and harassed by frightened lynch mobs, Frank turns on them. But there is no silencing his critics and in the end Frank dies, a broken, despondent misfit.

Count Dracula is a victim of cruel circumstance. He's an addict in desperate need of a fix. He is a lonely monster who spends the better part of his day in somewhat cramped quarters. He has no family to speak of, a blood relation or two perhaps. The benefits of a Christian upbringing are alien to him. He shys away from the cross.

He looks pale, has buck teeth, and suffers from terrible allergies — garlic bread particularly bothers him. His only solace exists in going out at night and painting the town red. A couple of bloody Marys or Janes and he's a new man.

The Wolfman has much the same problem. Most of the time he's a genial chap, but when the moon is full he stalks the countryside in search of Clearasil. Of course he gets mad when he realizes all the drugstores are closed for the day. Grin and bear it he is told. But he will not bite the bullet, that is until he is shot by a silver one. And the poor guy (usually Lon Chaney) is invariably shot by some no-name no-gooder who can't act worth his salt and who will only ever be heard from again doing American Express Travellers Checks' commercials.

It is a pitiable situation.

Consider the plight of the faceless mummies. Having been out of circulation for a long time naturally their first thoughts turn to women. Unfortunately they aren't the best looking monsters (who would fall in love with a body cast?) and, for the most part, they lack the social graces. Even the strong silent types need companionship. It's enough to unravel anyone. They are bandied about by insensitive archaeologists turned entrepreneurs who wish to exhibit these timid creatures for private gain. Should fortune favor them and provide an escape they are sure to be hounded to a sticky death in the LaBrea Tar Pits, or a murky ending in a waiting swamp. Their lot is a sad and foreseeable one.

So you see all of these monsters are a gentle and good-natured bunch. They don't ask for much, save some compassion and maybe a treat or two come Halloween. Always though, wherever they go, their reputation precedes them and they are scorned and hated. Still there is time for you, dear reader, to open the camera of your heart, drop in the film of understanding, and set the light meter of your love for these long-suffering creatures at infinity.

the Blue Laws

Beyond religious preference

By PAT BAKER

The issue of Sunday Closing Laws (or Blue Laws) will appear as a referendum question on the November 2 ballot. As Massachusetts Secretary of State Paul Guzzi's packet of voting information states: "This question is not binding" on the legislature.

Either way, however, the question is compelling, and the consequences go beyond simple religious preference or indifference.

The so-called Blue Laws originated around 1655 in the Eastern colonies. They were primarily observed on the "Sabbath Day."

Judge Alvin Rottman in Hartford, Connecticut handed down a ruling last month to "update" these laws and to allow for as much "normal" business as possible on Sundays. To quote the Boston Globe, Judge Rottman felt that the present "Byzantine of special interest exceptions has completely displaced whatever original pattern or rationality that may have been contemplated in the original laws."

Although religious precedence may be losing ground in the Blue Law battle, there are a couple of economic and social rationales that should be considered before we abolish the laws.

Proponents of the amendment (those who want to abolish the Blue Laws) feel that an extra working day would provide more jobs — allow more people to work or more workers to work more.

History documents a different story. Consistently workers have fought for shorter work weeks. The struggles for children, women and slave-wage workers were carried on because the legislation for shorter weeks protected workers and their jobs. Double shifts, overtime and double jobs are not, for most workers, a matter of choice but a decision based on economic necessity. A seven day business week may force many workers to look for those jobs — because they are there.

Those working to abolish the Blue Laws feel that an extra day would allow more businesses to engage in business and allow new stores to take advantage of an extra day. This, perhaps, is what we would like to believe; but the Richdales, the Cumberlands, the Store 24's are testimony to the fact that it is monopoly who is prepared and will fill up any business gap created by that extra day. Small businesses may not be able to expand operation an extra 14 per cent if an extra day appears. Those businesses who choose not to extend hours, in turn, may well lose some of their normal business activity from the regular week.

For some time now people have toyed with the idea of a four day work week, perhaps more leisure, less chaos. A seven day business week thwarts this idea and may eventually make it impossible of the average worker to ever have hope of any leisure.

Proponents of the amendments argue that some people simply want to work days, buy commodities on extra days and engage in whatever aspect of business that has become a compulsion to their lives; workaholics, spendaholics, alcoholics alike. It may be too much to presume that there are simply some people who have to be forced to relax. Legislation or the law should not have to dictate the idea of leisure, family time or fun time, but in protection of the worker sometimes these crazy laws make sense, or at least sense out of nonsense.

In reference to the opening of liquor stores, well I don't know that I've ever been in a place where I could not get a drink at a local bar on a Sunday. And if a bar can't satisfy, then a liquor store certainly won't.

Walking through Boston Common Sunday morning, scuffing leaves, stones, wrappers, carrying the Sunday paper and passing by rows of silent benches, sleeping snorers, local pigeons is too good to give up for traffic lights, horns, and the usual scuffle. Hours of self-indulgence in quiet, music, papers, pictures, big meals, beaches, mountains, parks or bed should not be surrendered to the interests of profit.

The country needs Carter

Gerald Ford's accidental Presidency has taken on added lustre the past few months, indicative of his meteoric rise in the national polls: His surge has dumbfounded even the harshest critics; where once a full-term of his own was considered a crude joke, it is now taken as common gospel among the heartland voters who distrust Jimmy Carter's smile, religion, and off-the-cuff sincerity.

But throughout Ford's dramatic comeback has been the gnawing thought among the more discriminating American journalists that Ford's rise is not so much a barometer of his ability, but a reading of voter discontent with the public utterances of Carter. And foremost among the righter-than-thou's casting the first stone is the President himself.

But it is Carter who has brought trouble to a once-unbeatable campaign, allowing himself to be caught in a public vacuum that has lately begun to demand forthrighteousness and honesty from the candidates with that very same public having yet to reach the maturity to accept it.

Voter intelligence has yet to prove itself capable of warranting the vote. They demand honesty, and integrity, but shun it when it becomes sensationalized in print. On the other hand, they accept an average man, of less-than-average intelligence, in a job of demanding proportions. That ability, compassion, and honesty distinctly separate the two is of little consequence; Jerry Ford is perceived to be a nicer guy. He pats dogs, has family discussions in public, looks warm and grandfatherly curled in front of the fireplace with his favorite pipe, and talks in cliches understood by most Americans. That he is clearly unfit to hold the office of President of the United States is of secondary importance.

It is inconceivable that a man schooled in the politics of negativism could be perceived as capable of being President. He is a former minority leader of the House, the spokesman of the Republican party under Richard Nixon, his only job being to obstruct and polarize the machinations of a top-heavy Democratic Congress. His leadership abilities are thoroughly intertwined with his past performances, his record 50 plus vetoes as President simply underscores the fact that Ford offers no leadership, no direction; only obstruction as it is the only brand of politics he knows.

Jimmy Carter differs. He offers leadership solutions, decries the absence of a coherent foreign policy in a chaotic and sometimes turbulent world. That he offers no stand on issues is ludicrous. His stands are more than just the pat answers that seem to symbolize the Republican ethos. He views each problem in its complex manner, realizing that there are no simple solutions to unemployment, inflation, and a world traumatized by hostility. Rather, he professes a need to view each separately, not just in a patronizing manner that symbolizes Ford's myopic beliefs, but in a way that says, "There are no simple solutions, and until we start realizing that, the problems will be compounded, not abated."

On November 2nd the politics of this country will be determined for the next four years. It is not so much that the country will be imperiled if Ford is elected; we have suffered through other perilous periods, and hopefully, will continue to weather such political storms. But with Jimmy Carter, there is a chance to at least start a reawakening in this country, to its problems, and its crisis. A vote for Jerry Ford will simply continue our wayward course. A vote for Jimmy Carter may well save this country.

Armed with a pen

By MARSHA KAZAROSIAN

First they want us to swallow McGovern, now they want us to give up our only chace of survival in this cruel world. Exactly how much do the left-wing radicals expect the American people to endure? If the average American surrenders his handgun, he surrenders his only means of defense.

If the handgun bill is passed, consider the precarious predicament of the man on the street. People will be forced to tote their double barrelled shotguns wherever they venture. Those left-wings just don't realize how cumbersome a double-barrel can be, especially if it is carried with a briefcase, pile of books, or a load of groceries. These heavy guns are also difficult to aim accurately. And the kick-back of the double-barrel can send the average female clear across the street after she fires it. Double-barrels can't fit in the purse or pocket, you know.

They say that a hefty percentage of these shotgun deaths are crimes of passion or accidental firings. But why should we suffer our taxes for the safety of a select few? People who's children are killed accidently by guns are fools anyway. I've had my children trained by the age of three to load and properly fire a shotgun. If kids learn early, accidents won't happen. They may as well take away our cars.

If they ban our handguns, how will the family man keep the peace in his abode? Imagine berating a sinful wife without the opportunity of firing several warning shots in her direction from the handly family gun. How else could he get the point across? The gun is irreplacable in family spats.

And what will the children have to play with on a rainy day? I can recall many times when my children have crept into my room and pulled our rusty gun from the drawer. How adorable they were: pointing it, swinging it; just like Mom and Dad. I can safely say that gun has kept them out of my hair on many a bleak afternoon.

Consider all those poeple who will have to resort to talking out their problems instead of reaching for the gun. It's so much easier to solve the argument with a well-placed bullet or two in the temple.

And how many of you readers have spent a quiet Sunday afternoon picking off a few squirrels or an occasional cat? Target shooting such as this does wonders for calming the nerves of the average person. How could they possibly expect us to shoot at cats and squirrels with a magnum?

Also, think of the excitement it would deprive the average thrill-seeking punk? If that bandit manages to get a gun, to stick someone up with, he knows he won't have a reason to shoot his victim, because his victim won't have a gun to threaten him with. He can take the loot and not a single bullet will have to fly. Maybe even, no one will be killed. For lack of adventure, these would-be bandits may even revert to finding a job. Think of the rising unemployment rates.

Lastly, consider the tax money we would have to dish out to save these mere precious lives. I say the people of Massachusetts have gone too far. Next, they'll want my rifle, then my bazooka. Let me say this right now. No one is getting my Gattling gun.

Food for thought

To the Editor:

I found Gary Cresswell's letter in response to the question of nutrition standards irresponsible and mininformative. Unlike he, who was "bemused" by a previous letter, I am dismayed but not surprised by the line of reasoning which he put forth.

Gary stated that nutritionists at the dining commons see to it that "adequate quality is provided at all meals," and that at the same time the dining commons are "geared toward quantity." Right there is his major contradiction, for in any system of mass production, quality suffers.

I do not know of another way to serve such large numbers of people as expediently as do the dining commons. However, I never once kidded myself about the suffering quality of the food served.

I am a former Nutrition major, and as a student in that department I was continually frustrated by the irresponsible and all too conservative "facts" presented in class.

Concerning the question of white flour products vs. whole grain products, there is no longer a controversy. Evidence undeniably leads to a correlations between introducing into a society refined carbohydrates [i.e. white flour bread, pastries, etc.] and the rise in cancer of the colon in that population. To suggest that white flour products are possibly even more nutritious than whole grain because a few vitamins have been added is a distortion of the facts. Vitamins and minerals are not the only things stripped from the whole grain; the bran and germ of the grain and their essential functions are never made up for in the process of "fortifying" white bread.

Surely rhetoric abounds on this campus. Gary Cresswell's is no less distorted than anyone else's. One last thing; let's not discount the effect that proper and vital nutrition, as well as improper nutrition, has on the mental alertness of a person. There are countless nutritional planes [and therefore, I believe, mental planes] on which to exist. Why settle for "adequate" or "rather" well as Gary Cresswell seemed to propose?

GSEU clarifies spending

To the Editor:

In the Collegian's coverage of the Oct. 18 proceedings of the Graduate Senate you report that "the senate allocated $1,000 to the G.S.E.U. to help finance debts reportedly totaling $10,000 in their bid to represent graduate student employees." Since these figures might suggest that the G.S.E.U. has been spending money with reckless abandon, we wish to clarify our present financial position.

Our present debt is slightly less than $1,500, not $10,000 as reported. Lawyer fees constitute the bulk of this sum. Since it has been Union policy not to initiate a dues structure until we achieve recognition from the administration and actually enter into contract bargaining, we have had, to date, to operate on a shoestring budget. Several "discos", the sale of buttons, T-shirts, and personal donations have provided us with our operating funds.

However, since we are presently in the midst of hearings before the State Labor Relations Commission [which, incidentally, have been going very well], we expect to rapidly incur several more thousands of dollars in legal expenses. In this context, we are very grateful for the financial support given us by the Grad Senate. But since this is not enough, we also initiated a campaign asking for a $3 contribution from all Grad employees and sympathetic supporters. Additionally we have a book sale planned for early November.

Hopefully, through these means, we will manage to finance our continuing progress toward a recognized mass-based Union of graduate employees. The faculty is on the verge of accomplishing this. With the support, financial and otherwise, of grads on campus, we are certain that the success of the G.S.E.U. drive will not lag far behind the success of the faculty unionization effort.

Why don't smokers give us a break?

To the Editor:

Yesterday, about 11:00, while sitting in the back of the Hatch, a casual glance around the room took in amazingly, about 10 cigarettes. Now this in itself would not have been so amazing were it not for the fact that this was noted in the section reserved for non-smokers.

Due to the abundance of yellow cards on the tables requesting no smoking, one would have to be either blind or off in Never-Never Land not to realize this.

This being so, why were these people smoking? The fact that they were only serves to reinforce my already strongly held belief that the majority of people who smoke are extremely selfish and inconsiderate. Your dependence on this disgusting and irritating [to say the least] habit, is so strong, that as long as you have your little pack of cancer sticks clutched in your hot little hand, you won't hesitate to infringe upon my right to a little clean air and a pair of clear eyes once in a while.

No one questions your right to smoke, you are allowed to smoke almost everywhere you go. I can except this in some, indeed I am very tolerant in most situations. But there are other situations where the right to breathe smoke-free air must prevail. I can't count the number of times that I have watched people light up right in front of a no-smoking sign — in crowded buses, stuffy auditoriums and classrooms, not to mention hospitals.

For God's sake, give us a break and use your heads! The air in auditoriums and buses is little enough as it is, without having to exchange it for smoke. Is it really necessary to chain smoke in class? You have the 15 minutes between classes to send up in smoke if you wish. If your excuse is nervousness, rest-assured, your classmates won't bite you, really,....unless of course, you put out that butt. In it's proper place, not on the floor. You see, cigarette butt and package litter is another pet peeve of mine, but that's another story.

Everytime I have to wait for a smoking friend at the top of the stairs, or see those cigarette ads featuring Winston "naturals", Camel "independents" and Virginia Slims "liberation" images, my first reaction is to laugh. But then I think again and my thought is 'How stupid you are and look, with that burning, smoking weed poised, between two yellow stained fingers.'

One final note, I would like to ask the Hatch and any of the professors who lecture to please either enforce or emphasize the no-smoking rules in the areas where they apply, and this, as I look down at the ash and burn-scarred carpet below my feet. In the no smoking section — of course.

DVP explained

To the Editor:

In response to Irma McClaurin's article of last Friday, October 22, entitled "A Protest to Eldridge Cleaver".

The Distinguished Visitor's Program is financed and operated by the undergraduate students of the University of Massachusetts for the purpose of keeping the university community sensitive to the world in which it exists. In accordance with this purpose, it seeks to bring to the campus those persons whose experience in international and domestic affairs, the sciences, the humanities and the arts qualify them to interpret, explain, and raise questions about life in all its demensions. Furthermore, The Distinguished Visitor's Program seeks to stimulate critical thought and debate by presenting a balanced range of opinion with respect to a given issue. — excerpt from the DVP Constitution

Women falsely generalized

To the Editor:

I would like to take issue with Charlotte Allen's commentary on "Reverse Sexism" that appeared in the Collegian on October 20.

I am curious as to how Ms. Allen came to so many false generalizations about women. Certainly she did not take a random sample of her peers. Her statements: "many women have to tap extra energy in order to cope with men on any level" and "Lots of women have to work at being nice to most men." are ludicrous! Any woman who fits Ms. Allen's categories is certainly insecure and non-liberated. Many of my friends and acquaintances are men, yet I am in no way intimidated by these fellow students and co-workers, nor do I have to call on reserves of energy to be nice to them.

Perhaps Ms. Allen should relax and try to be friends with a man or two. She might be pleasantly surprised. Quite a number of men in this community are "liberated", and that is why I cannot understand her entire paragraph concerning last year's "Women and Violence" conference. She stated that " ... concerning the subject, it was necessary to exclude men from the conference, or the purpose of the afternoon would have been defeated."

Granted, it's a good idea for women to get together and share their feelings on such subjects, but it seems to me that anyone interested in this topic should have been allowed to attend. The purpose would not have been defeated if some genuinely interested men would have come away with a better understanding of women's reactions to personal violence; yet Ms. Allen followed that absurd paragraph with a non-sequitur: " ... men and women have to teach each other about the manifestations of sexism ... and alleviate the problems."

What irked me the most about Ms. Allen's commentary was her blatant hypocrisy. She readily admitted that a man who is disqualified from a job for the sake of hiring a woman is the victim of prejudice [nor reverse sexism], yet she fully condoned the hiring of women and Third World people at the expense of a better qualified white male. I can only take this contradiction to mean that prejudicial attitudes are fine, as long as they serve your own purpose.

For this reason I am against Affirmative Action when it results in lowering job standards to increase the number of women and Third World people.

Ms. Allen stated that "It's a shame that a law has to be created to 'guarantee' equality in employment practices, but we [meaning women?] have to start somewhere." This very law hopefully will prevent the hypocrisy of the Affirmative Action program, which is trying to rectify past centuries of discrimination against women and Third World people by discriminating against white males now. This law, as I understand it, will eliminate the phrase and the practice of "reverse sexism" for it will prevent discrimination on the basis of sex, race, color, creed or national origin.

Actually, I believe that the purpose of Ms. Allen's commentary, "Reverse Sexism" was to refute the phrase. Fine, but it's a shame that her reasoning was wrong. She condemns the phrase, but not the practice.

interest for most of the UMass community."

"DVP does not necessarily endorse Cleaver's positions," he said.

Kiley said that at the original meeting, when it was decided to invite Cleaver, the two Black members of DVP were not present.

The decision received a considerable amount of criticism, he said, and another meeting was called to hear a motion filed against it. This motion was not passed, he said.

"No one I've spoken with wants him here," said Johnetta B. Cole, professor in the Afro Am. Dept. "Considering his court problems, I see his new position as naked self-interest."

Cleaver has been on the lecture trail since August 13, after a Philadelphia insurance dealer paid his bail on the basis that he had similar religious beliefs to Cleaver.

He spoke yesterday at Clark University in Worcester and is to speak tomorrow in Hartford at Trinity College.

Cleaver served nine years of a 14-year sentence in San Quentin and Folsom prisons, much of the time in solitary confinement because of his 1958 convictions for assault with intent to commit murder, assault with intent to rape, and assault while armed with a dangerous weapon.

He was parolled in 1966 and became an editor with Ramparts magazine as well as a leader of the Black Panther movement. In November, 1968, he fled Montreal for exile in Cuba to escape the charges he now faces. All charges stem from an Oakland confrontation between Black Panthers and police in which 17-year-old Panther treasurer Bobby Hutton was killed and Cleaver wounded.

In exile, Cleaver continued to vocalize his opinions about the "racist" American system of government and advocate a violent Black attack on repression and racism.

His support of Castro and Cuba, where he thought he would not find racism, faded when he began believing that country to be as discriminatory as any.

He went to Algiera, where he stayed until 1973. He set up a Black Panthers office in Algiers, but in 1971 he was expelled from the party by its highest official, Huey P. Newton, because of alleged ideological differences.

and Fees, proposed a motion at the close of the meeting that the committee recommend to the senate that it veto all the proposed increases. He said that such increases were in effect "taxation without representation."

The motion was defeated by a vote of one for, ten against, and two abstentions. Allen will make a minority report on behalf of the motion to the senate when Rents and Fees delivers its recommendations.

Other members of the committee said in debate that they opposed the motion on the grounds that it would appear that the committee had not considered and debated each individual proposal but rather had issued a blanket rejection. This they felt would eliminate the credibility of the committee as an effective instrument of the senate.

BU gets Roosevelt papers

BOSTON [UPI] — The anniversary of Theodore Roosevelt's birthday was marked Tuesday with the world's third largest collection of the former President's papers donated to Boston University.

The papers, some on display at the University's Mugar Memorial Library, are a gift of BU alumnus, Rev. Paul C. Richards, an antiquarian book dealer.

Almost 700 unpublished handwritten letters spanning the years 1881 to 1918 are part of the collection. Also among the papers are more than 100 original manuscripts of Roosevelt's articles, books and speeches.

In addition to family correspondence, letters are included to and from William Jennings Bryan, Andrew Carnegie, King Edward VII, Felix Frankfurter, Edward Everett Hale, Rudyard Kipling, and Kaiser Wilhelm II.

The contents of the papers include Roosevelt's writings and thoughts on such subjects as natural history, ranching, hunting, civil service reform, naval history and Abraham Lincoln.

The first, second, fourth and fifth drafts of Roosevelt's formal acceptance as the presidential candidate sent to the 1904 Republican National Convention are also included in the documents.

The earliest manuscript is the original draft of his article "Fight Between Ironclads," an account of the famous naval battle between the Monitor and Merrimack.

Photographs and three original recordings of Roosevelt's speeches are among the memorabilia.

Richards, a member of the school's Board of Directors of the University Friends of the Libraries, began collecting Roosevelt's papers in 1959. His collection was reportedly the largest privately owned, exceeded only by the Library of Congress collection and that of the Theodore Roosevelt Association at Harvard University.

Sense of sharing stressed in today's activities

By KIT WALKER
and ROB HENEREY

Today the moon is in Capricorn, and at 9:07 a.m. she forms a harmonious sextile to the Scorpio sun. This should bring our sense of sharing down to earth a bit, and direct it into some kind of discipline. We may find we have to work to heal ourselves, and that until we do that, we can't really have a healthy effect on others. Also that sharing involves a certain responsibility, namely, caring — and if we're only out for ourselves, with no loving care for the other person, then it's not sharing, but stealing.

At 10:20 a.m. Mercury in Libra forms a 45 degree semi-square to Neptune in Sagittarius. At this point we may be confused and nebulous about our goals — but from here on in, our minds should gradually come into focus, if we bear in mind serving a higher purpose. If our goals are selfish we may find a disillusionment in store.

The evening and in fact, the next 24 hours, will revolve around Mercury, the planet of communication and rational analysis. The Sun, the key to 'purpose', is in Scorpio, the sign of partnership productivity. The Moon, our key to reflecting the purpose through our daily feelings and changes, is in Capricorn, the sign of working to establish a social identity. So we're in a stage of disciplining our moods to work towards expressing what, together, we desire. Working for the team, so to speak. Meanwhile our minds, our Mercury, have to go through some changes.

Mercury aspects bracket the night, one with Saturn, the planet of backbone, at 8:27 p.m., and one with Jupiter, the planet of expansion, at 8:00 a.m. Mercury is 1-5 the circle ahead of Saturn and 5-12 the circle ahead of Jupiter. The 1-5, or 'quintile', means that the faster planet can easily call forth and uniquely express the talent of the slower planet. The talents of Saturn are a disciplined self-assurance, and a patient ability to persevere and build. Since Saturn's in Leo, and Mercury's in Libra, tonight's a good time to call on a quiet inner strength of heart to help us keep our mental balance and to express something peaceful and beautiful.

The 5-12 aspect in the morning, or 'quincunx', means the faster planet must decide what it itself serves the slower planet. So, since Mercury's in Libra and Jupiter's in Taurus, the question is how to separate a balanced viewpoint from the insecurity of indecisiveness, so that we can better expand our earthy resources. If we exaggerate to compensate, we can expect disagreements.

There will be four Moon aspects in between. Around 11 p.m. it'll feel good to begin organizing our dreams. But at the same time, someone else's attachment to the safety of the past may force us to take a stand for the Truth that lies deep in the center of the present. Around 12:30 a.m. the energy will be there to take the initiative and explore a new path in our shared struggle to transform our lives. Then around 1:30 a.m. we can consciously act to leave irresponsible, selfish or exaggerated feelings behind.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, October 27 — Born today, you are one of the spiritual "growers" of the world. Never satisfied with your own character development, your own basic nature, you are ever searching, attempting, seeking, in an effort to improve the inner self. Few are aware of your struggle, for you are exceptionally reserved about it, going about your business in ways that belie to all observers any inner turmoil you may feel. You have a need to serve others and would do well in those fields that fall under the heading of "social work." On the other hand, your own dissatisfactions could prove a drawback in such work, for it could rub off on those who are already dissatisfied enough.

One who deals as well in abstract terms as in the concrete, you should be able to add something of value to anything in which you become involved. You will only have to take care that you don't allow a certain natural depression of spirit to lessen your enjoyment in what you do and, in the process, blunt your talent. It is quite possible that without professional guidance as to how to harness your emotional responses profitably to the purpose of your career, you could fail, in spite of your tremendous abilities.

Imaginative and quick to see ends in beginnings, you should have little difficulty discovering practical applications for what may initially appear to be impractical ideas. Your genuine concern for those with whom you work should make your relationships on the employment scene more conducive to productivity than might at first seem possible. Indeed, productivity improves with those relationships, so it is important that you continually seek to strengthen them.

Thursday, October 28

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Prove yourself worthy of your reputation for being an "idea man." Come to the rescue of one hampered by a lack of imagination.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Consider the question of benefits of a material nature before committing yourself to a new project.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You would do well to withdraw peaceably from the present situation on the home front. New challenges arise late in the day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Your problems are not unique. To think of them as special to you may be to prolong finding a solution indefinitely.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 19) — Unless you are in good physical and mental shape today, you cannot hope to meet a challenge from the opposition during afternoon hours.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Considerable disappointment may make this a day you would prefer to forget. Even so, you would do well to remember where your error lay.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Plans for a new project may have to be changed in a hurry. Make your peace with an old enemy and begin at once to work for joint profit.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Suspicion makes this a particularly difficult time for you. A feeling of mistrust where an old friend is concerned causes you suffering.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Analyse the present situation on the home front before you attempt to do anything about it. Otherwise, you could make matters worse.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Courteous behavior is the key to success in personal relationships today. Don't hang back when it comes to expressing your thanks.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — An old acquaintance may take up more of your leisure time than you have to spare. Ask for a rain check for latter-day activities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The appearance of livelihood may fool another into being careless with your material goods. Reveal your financial situation -- for your own good.

Patriot fullback Jess Phillips bulls his way past Oakland Raider defenders in early season action Schaeffer Stadium. The Pats backfield has been outstanding so far. UPI

Patriots to reach playoffs? Just remember the letdowns

BOSTON [UPI] — The temptation is so strong to predict the New England Patriots will reach the playoffs, the more impulsive persons among us might even reserve plane tickets for a mid-January flight to Pasadena, Calif.

And why not be optimistic, even giddy, in assessing the Patriots' chances of participating in post-season play for the first time since entering the National Football League?

Here's why not:

The Patriots have let us down more times than a department store elevator. Each year since 1966, their last winning season, the Patriots have promised great things but delivered disappointment. At least the awful seasons, such as last year when they were 3-11, were easier to take because the fans got early warning of the impending failure.

But who among the Patriots' faithful does not still wear the scars of 1974, does not smart at every replay of Bob Windsor's career-ending catch that capped the team's last important win of the season? Who does not remember the hope of 1972, when sophomore Jim Plunkett was supposed to be even better than he had been the previous autumn in fashioning a 6-8 record?

No, we won't be caught up in this Spirit of '76 or these young Patriot upstarts. We will shrug off the consecutive wins over Miami, Pittsburgh and Oakland as a mutation or blame Swine flu for weakening the opposition. We will point to the Baltimore and Detroit losses and say, "See, those are the real Patriots."

We'll talk about the Buffalo win as if it were a loss — citing sloppy play, five fumbles, missed extra points and a disorganized foe.

Under no circumstances shall we look at the second half of this schedule, which shows three tough games against Miami, Denver and Baltimore and four supposedly easy contests against the Buffalo, the New York Jets, Tampa Bay and New Orleans.

We will keep from checking AFC opponents schedules which show that Houston still must play Baltimore, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh twice and that the Bengals also must face Oakland Los Angeles and the Steelers.

Instead, we will force ourselves again to look at those scars of 1974 and reminisce about six losses in the last seven games. We will recite the litany of injuries to key personnel and expect the worst to happen again this year.

We fully will expect any affliction that strikes suicidal Steve Grogan, from beri-beri to a toppling goalpost.

We're ready for your second half swoon even if we don't know how you will accomplish it. Maybe your flight to Miami next Saturday will be hijacked to Cuba where you will be detained until February. Maybe you will win the remaining seven games, only to have some college superspy learn that Grogan is bionic and force you to forfeit the victories.

Michigan still on top; BC lands 18th spot

NEW YORK [UPI] — Top-ranked Michigan's impressive 35-0 victory over Indiana last week caught the fancy of UPI's coaching board, too, as the unbeaten Wolverines received 38 of a possible 42 first place votes in the weekly balloting.

Michigan collected a total of 416 points while the Wolverines' "well-oiled machine" rolled toward a Rose Bowl invitation with its seventh straight victory.

1. Michigan (38) (7-0)
2. Pittsburgh (3) (7-0)
3. UCLA (1) (6-0-1)
4. Southern California (5-1)
5. Maryland (7-0)
6. Texas Tech (5-0)
7. Georgia (6-1)
8. Ohio State (5-1-1)
9. Nebraska (5-1-1)
10. Missouri (5-2)
11. Notre Dame (5-1)
12. Florida (5-1)
13. Oklahoma (5-1-1)
14. Arkansas (4-1)
15. Oklahoma State (4-2)
16. Colorado (4-3)
17. Texas (3-1-1)
18. (Tie) Alabama (5-2)
18. (Tie) Boston College (5-1)
18. (Tie) Cincinnati (6-0)

"I'm glad we don't have to play them the next two years," said Indiana coach Lee Corso of the awesome Michigan alignment.

Michigan's remaining regular season schedule has games against Minnesota, Purdue, Illinois and Ohio State. Woody Hayes' Buckeyes (5-1-1) rate the only chance among the four of stopping the Wolverines.

Pittsburgh, also 7-0, received three first place votes along with 372 points and third-rated UCLA, 6-0-1, registered 334 points while picking up the other first place nomination.

The Pitt Panthers humbled Navy, 45-0, as Tony Dorsett set an NCAA rushing record by breaking Archie Griffin's offensive career mark. President Ford was impressed by the performance, too. The president met with Dorsett Tuesday during a campaign swing and congratulated the Heisman Trophy candidate on his football statistics.

Southern California was elevated two notches to fourth place and Maryland made a similar surge from seventh to fifth place in the rankings. Texas Tech moved from ninth to sixth and Georgia climbed from 10th to seventh place. Ohio State remained eighth this week; Nebraska, third last week, skidded to ninth after losing to Missouri, which vaulted six rungs to 10th place.

Notre Dame led the second 10, followed by Florida in 12th place, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Oklahoma State, Colorado and Texas. Alabama, Boston College and Cincinnati were in a three-way tie for 18th place. Oklahoma, upset by Oklahoma State, slipped from fifth to 13th place.

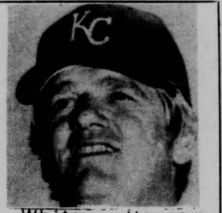
Nicklaus top money winner

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Jack Nicklaus, although sitting out last week's Southern Open, has retained his money-winning lead on the PGA tour with earnings of $266,438.

Ben Crenshaw, who had a chance to overtake Nicklaus in the tourney at Columbus, Ga., won only $924 by trying for 25th place and remains second in total earnings for the year with $257,758.

Hale Irwin is a close third with $252,718 while Hubert Green, who finished second in the Southern Open, is next with $225,656.

Completing the top 10 are Al Geiberger ($194,821), J. C. Snead ($192,645), Ray Floyd ($178,318), David Graham ($176,174), Don January ($163,622) and Jerry Pate ($150,727).



Whitey Herzog, manager of the Kansas City Royals was named the UPI's American League Manager of the Year. He got 14 votes as compared to 10 for Billy Martin.

Where are they now?

UMies now in pro football

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the second in a four-part series on former UMass athletes now active in professional sports.

The pro football season is half over now, and the midway point sees three ex-UMass football players currently active within its ranks. At the beginning of pre-season training camp, the various NFL rosters listed four UMass veterans among their members, but one was cut just prior to the opening game. The athletes are all on NFC teams, and Profiles on them follow:

Possibly the greatest receiver in UMass history played for the then-Redmen in the early and mid-1960's. In his three varsity seasons here, tight end Milt Morin was named to three consecutive all-Yankee Conference teams. Morin also did the UMass placekicking during his final season (1965).

Morin set several records which still stand in the UMass books, including most touchdown passes received in a game (two, which he did twice) and most yardage gained on passes received in a game (181). He also ranks among the leaders in most passes received in a game (nine).

Upon his 1966 graduation, Morin was chosen by the Cleveland Browns of the NFL in the collegiate draft. He spent ten excellent years with them, and was named to the NFL All-Pro team several times. He was a starter for the Browns almost since his arrival in training camp, and he held the job through last season.

However, Cleveland is on a rebuilding kick, and decided to drop Morin in training camp this year. The 32-year-old then chose to retire from pro football all together. He now resides in Hadley.

Coach Vic Fusia also saw another one of his men go on to stardom in the pros. A man who made a big mark on pro football in more ways than one, Greg Landry, is still plying his trade with the Detroit Lions.

Landry was the prototype of the scrambling quarterback in pro football, a mold into which many signal-callers are now shaping themselves with success. (Witness Steve Grogan) At UMass, Landry set and still holds a bevy of records, including most rushing attempts in a career (485 in 27 games), best seasonal passing percentage (.623) and most total offense in one game (396 yards). He ranks second in most career yards gained rushing (4632), most career yards gained passing (3131), most career passes attempted (445), most career passes completed (242), total offense in one season (4763), and best career passing percentage (.544). He was also named to three All-Yankee Conference teams.

Steve Schubert

Landry is in his ninth year with Detroit, and is having a healthy year thus far. He has paid the price for his daring on the field to the tune of three knee operations. However, he once again is the starting Lions QB, as long-time backup Bill Munson retired during training camp. Landry led Detroit to the playoffs in 1971, and also set a record that season for most rushing yardage gained by a pro quarterback.

Current coach Dick MacPherson has watched two of his fine wide receivers latch on with pro teams. Steve Schubert, class of 1973, is with the NFC Chicago Bears.

Schubert was all-Yankee Conference, all-New England, and a Kodak All-American in his senior year here. Upon graduation, he signed with the New England Patriots and spent the season with a minor league team. He made the Pats the following year and played in ten games, mostly on specialty teams. He did manage to catch a touchdown pass against the Minnesota Vikings, though.

Schubert's pro career looked bleak in 1975, as the Patriots cut him. But he hooked on with the Bears, and got into 12 games. He was again used mostly on punt and kickoff returns squads, but did catch five passes good for 68 yards.

The 5'10", 185-pound flanker also ranks high in the UMass record books. He is second in most passes received in a season (45), most passes received in a game (nine), most touchdown passes received in a season (nine), and most career yards gained on passes received (1424). Schubert is now 25 years old.

The man who holds virtually all of the UMass receiving records ahead of Schubert is Tim Berra. The diminutive flanker caught 99 passes in his stay here, gained 1486 yards on those catches and 922 of that yardage in one season. He also caught 62 aerials in the 1973 campaign. He received 15 touchdown tosses in his career, with 12 of them coming in '73. He also made all-Yankee Conference in 1973.

Tim Berra, the son of Yankee coach Yogi Berra, graduated in 1974 and was drafted by the AFC Baltimore Colts. He spent two seasons with them before being cut, and is now on the injured reserve roster of the NFC New York Giants. He has yet to see action this season.

Next Week: The pro basketball players.

Erving packs arenas

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — The New Orleans Jazz, who set the National Basketball Association attendance record with 26,511 fans for a game last year against Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and the Los Angeles Lakers, believe the NBA's new "Doctor" may help them break that record.

The Doctor agrees.

The Doctor, of course, is "Dr. J," Julius Erving, who joined the NBA this year in its merger with the American Basketball Association.

Late of the New York Nets, whom he left in a $6 million deal involving the Nets, the Philadelphia 76ers and himself, Erving said his signing has already helped the 76ers financially.

"I think a lot of season tickets have been sold at home since I've been signed, and you know, that's money in the bank," Erving said.

The Jazz sold 18,000 tickets by midday for Tuesday night's game against Philadelphia and expected to finish close to the record. They said there are 40,000 seats at the Louisiana Superdome which are "basketball viewable" and they set up giant-screen closed-circuit television for upper-level fans.

"If we do 30,000 tonight, we'll have an accurate idea of what we can do in terms of giant crowds," said Tom Willingham, sales manager.

During the exhibition season, the Jazz sold more than 12,000 tickets for a game with the Nets — even though it was announced a week before the contest that Erving would not play.

Is there a Doctor in the house? Ex-UMass basketball star Julius Erving, the new "six million dollar man" will now be dazzling basketball fans with the Philadelphia '76ers.

Owens seeks return

PONTIAC, Mich. [UPI] — Fullback Steve Owens, who retired before the season amid reports he did not get along with ex-coach Rick Forzano, has indicated to the Detroit Lions he would like to try another comeback next summer.

The 1969 Heisman Trophy winner has not played since receiving a knee injury on Thanksgiving Day in 1974. He sat out last season and said his knee caused him to retire this year prior to the start of the regular season.

"He has indicated he would like to come back next year," general manager Russ Thomas of the Lions disclosed Tuesday. "He talked with Tommy (interim coach Hudspeth) two weeks ago."

The fact Detroit is even interested in the possible return of its one-time 1,000-yard gainer lends credence to reports Owens and Forzano, who has since resigned, did not get along.

The former Oklahoma All-American is back in Norman, Okla., where he works the Sooners' radio games.

"It would be tough for him to come back now — we've played seven games and he would have to get into playing shape,"

Minutemen invade Westfield

There are some new elements for the UMass soccer team to deal with when the Minutemen visit Westfield State tonight for a 7:30 match.

Of prime importance is the astroturf that UMass will play on for the first time this year.

"We're going to bring three or four different kinds of shoes and try them all before the game to see which one grips the field best," said coach Russ Kidd. "If it is raining, then the condition of the field will become even more important."

Coach Kidd announced Monday that he was making some changes in his lineup for the Westfield game. Michael Parsons will shift from his customary fullback position to a forward spot, on account of the desperate need for more offense. Taking his place a fullback will be Pat Veale or Mark Vassalotti.

"I was hopeful during the first half of the season that Parsons would be selected as an All-New England Fullback; however, now I don't think he's got a prayer with our record," said Kidd.

Another change will move Joel Mascolo up to the front line and Steve McCauley from sweeper into the halfback spot vacated by Mascolo.

The lineup changes will need adjusting to, but coach Kidd has confidence in his personnel. "We had a good hour scrimmage yesterday using this setup and they moved the ball well," said Kidd.

Perhaps the greatest task the Minutemen must cope with is trying to stop Westfield forward Allie Goncalves. "He's basically a one man team for them," noted Kidd.

The Minutemen will be bolstered by the return of fullback, Ed Niemiec. "If anyone can slow down Goncalves, Ed's the man," said Kidd.

BOOTER BANTER: Westfield is currently ranked second in the Division II ratings, and seventh overall...Amherst high alumnus John Bassalo is a starter for Westfield...Dave Tagliavini will be the third forward (with Mascolo and Parsons)...The Minutemen have no injuries to report...Mark Hanks will start in goal...Westfield is coming off a 4-2 victory over Western New England on Monday....

Heinsohn to drill Celtics

LEXINGTON, MASS. [UPI] — Tommy Heinsohn plans to be more drill sergeant than coach until his Boston Celtics shape up.

"This is like going back to Buzzards Bay all over agin," said Heinsohn, suggesting his team is as out of condition as it was the first week of training camp.

"Dave Cowens missed part of the preseason because of back problems; Sidney Wicks came to us overweight and still has some pounds to lose; and Curtis Rowe hasn't worked out much because of a knee injury," he said.

"Because we have the two new guys (Wicks and Rowe) along with Freddy Saunders (a free agent who edged Glenn McDonald out of a job), we have to go over all our plays three more times. It's not the knowing of the plays but the execution of them that we have to work on."

Brutality detracts from pro football

Those of you who saw Sunday's football game between the Chicago Bears and the Dallas Cowboys on CBS were provided with an example of what physical, hard-hitting, punishing football is all about.

A look at the rosters exemplifies the size that these teams possess. For instance, on the Bears: Wally Chambers, 6-6, 250, Ron Rydalch, 6-4, 262, Mike Hartenstine, 6-3, 256, and for the Cowboys: Ed "Too Tall" Jones, 6-9, 265, Ralph Neely, 6-6, 2255, Harvey Martin, 6-5, 252.

The linemen fought an intense battle in the trenches; however, some of the most staggering contact was provided by the defensive backs and members of the "specialty teams". The tempo was set early when Dallas running back Robert Newhouse came out of the game limping.

The Cowboy defense was obsessed with trying to stop Bear running back Walter Payton, the league's leading rusher. They played a swarming, gang-tackling brand of defense that led one to believe that Payton would not last the afternoon.

In the second quarter, Bear middle-linebacker Dan Rives left the game holding his forehead. He was administered emergency treatment on the sideline and went back into the game during the next series for the Bear defensive team.

The first-half injuries were indicative of some of the heavy hitting that was going on, however, in the second-half the game turned into an exhibition of a test in brutality. Some of the punishing hits appeared to be carried out with the intention of inflicting injury. This statement is all conjecture on my part, of course, but an analysis of the individual contact involved in four second half injuries, provides fairly strong evidence.

The injuries occurred in a sequence of one for Chicago, then one for Dallas. The Cowboys took the kickoff and shortly thereafter turmoil broke loose. On a play run around the Dallas left end, Cowboy tackle Ralph Neely pulled out of the line and attempted to block Bear cornerback Virgil Livers.

Neely, at his size, shouldn't have had much trouble in preventing the tiny 5-9, 176 lb. Livers from making the tackle; however, for some reason, Neely smashed Livers in the jaw with his elbow. Livers was forced to leave the game, but returned later.

On the next play, the Bears retaliated. Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach was blitzed and roughed up by Bear defensive end Mike Hartenstine (6-3, 256 lbs.) Again, the amount of roughness seemed to be excessive, resulting in a broken bone.

In both of these cases, a gross mismatch in physical size combined with wild methods of contact led to injury. Injuries were not just perpetrated by players who enjoyed size advantages. After the Staubach injury, it was the Bears turn again to suffer misfortune and my earlier feeling about Payton not lasting came true.

Dallas safetyman Cliff Harris rushed Payton as he was being tackled by two other Cowboys and pounced onto his legs. Walter suffered an injury to his right ankle and like Staubach was lost to his team for the remainder of the game.

Later in the game, Dallas wide-receiver Golden Richards was knocked flat on the sideline after catching a pass. Two men from the Bear secondary were guilty of this action.

These four examples certainly show that the hitting in this game was overdone. Good, hard hitting, clean football is a pleasure to watch, but when brutality starts developing, it becomes a game of counting the injuries, instead of the touchdowns.

The UMass field hockey team overcame winter conditions yesterday as they won their fourth straight shutout, defeating Plymouth State, 1-0.

The winning goal was scored by Cindy Hartstone seven minutes into the first half.

The Minutemen followed their usual pattern, slowing down in the second half after a strong first half. "We were mostly in control the first half, but we didn't play together well in the second," commented coach Judith Davidson.

Coach Davidson felt that the blustery weather contributed to the lackluster second half. "A day like today really gets to the players, especially when it's so cold they can't hold onto their sticks," she said.

Although Plymouth is not one of the stronger teams that the Minutewomen play. Davidson felt that they were no pushover: "They played a weak first half, but they had a very good goalie and showed some nice passing."

Coach Davidson was pleased with the play of center halfback Karen Zimmerman and sweeper Gayle Hutchinson, as well as goalie Kathy Gipps, (she stopped Plymouth's, 15 shots on goal). The penetration time (inside the 25 yard line), shows further the domination of Plymouth by the Minutewomen, 10 minutes, 7 seconds, to Plymouth's 3 minutes, 17 seconds. The Minutewomen also took 22 shots on goal as compared to Plymouth's previously mentioned 15.

The Minutewomen will play their final away game of the season when they travel to Smith College Thursday night.

Women eye Easterns in NY

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

In the aftermath of its narrow defeat at the hands (or should I say feet?) of Middlebury College in last Saturday's New England cross country championship, the women's harrier team has spent the weekend and the early part of this week preparing for the Eastern Championship which will be held Saturday at Albany (NY) State College.

Far from being discouraged, the Minutewomen are looking ahead eagerly to this meet, with their attitude probably being best summed up by Julie Lafreniere when she said, "If Middlebury goes there I want to go and get them this time."

Middlebury won't be the only hurdle UMass will have to clear. Penn State, an eastern cross country power and defending NCAA champ, is as strong this year as in the past. With the improvement they've shown, it's not inconceivable that the Minutewomen could run with the Nittany Lionnesses.

A key factor will be the physical condition of the women, particularly Johara Chapman, who was severely hampered by an ear infection in the NE race. Everyone else appears to be healthy, including Debbie Farmer, who is coming off an arch strain and who ran well on Saturday, finishing with a time of 19:07, 40 seconds better than her previous best time. There's a good chance she will be moved up to the travelling squad for this meet.

On Saturday, Middlebury had outstanding performances from its whole team which were, according to its coach, the best of the year by far. UMass ran well, but the women all felt good, and felt they could've run a little better. If they can improve on their times from the New Englands, the women will be right in the thick of the team battle, since it is unlikely that Middlebury can equal its last performance.

UMass will probably stick with the same lineup that ran in the NE meet. Lafreniere, Chapman, Maggie Crowley, Jane Welzel, Sue Swartz, Anne Bradshaw and Farmer will most likely be the squad that makes an assault on the "best of the East."

Apart from the runners who have been singled out up to now, several other harriers showed considerable improvement in the NE meet. Bradshaw ran sixth for the team and bettered her time by 41 seconds. Monica Scott ran her best race of the season and finally broke the 20 minute barrier. Her time of 19:18 was 49 seconds faster than her previous best. Barbara Callanan improved her time by 15 seconds, but her story was the saddest of an otherwise brilliant season which is still not close to being over. The freshwoman runner from Scituate had shown constant improvement all year, and had reached the point where she was in the top five runners for the team. Then, in the Brandeis Invitational, she sprained her ankle after the race was through. This unfortunate accident caused her to miss enough practice time to hamper her in the team's most recent outing. Fortunately, she has a lot of time ahead of her here at UMass.

The women harriers will be attempting to rebound from last weekend's performance, when they participate in the Eastern's this weekend in New York. (Staff Photo by Stuart Eyman)

Gridders straddle upcoming bowl bid

The jury is still out, but within the next three weeks it should definitely arrive at a verdict concerning the 1976 UMass football team.

With a little more than half of the season completed, the Minutemen have managed to compile a 4-2 record behind some often inconsistent play, that has seen the Minutemen look awesome at times and futile in others.

Why have the Minutemen been riding on the tracks of a shaky roller-coaster this season? There has to be some deep underlying reason why the Minutemen have been unable to put together back-to-back consistent games, halfs or quarters.

So far, it most certainly has been a perplexing year for the Minutemen gridders. With a couple of breaks here and there, the Minutemen could very easily be undefeated. If only the Minutemen had been able to maintain their 13-point lead against the mighty Harvard Crimson, or if they were able to play more consistently against an 0-6 UConn team, UMass would be in great shape heading down the backstretch, seeking that elusive playoff-bowl game. But I suppose it's easier said than done.

Now, I am not saying that UMass should be considered a top power in Eastern football circles, at least not yet. Presently, the Minutemen have had to fight, scratch and come up with some last minute heroics to defeat Rhode Island and Maine teams that don't even come close to the Minutemen when it comes down to individual talent.

Then there was the BU game that was played in an ocean of rain, in which the Minutemen soundly thrashed the hapless Terriers. But, as things are turning out now, UMass' thrashing of BU seems to be old hat, as everybody is having field days against the Terriers, even an anemic Holy Cross football team.

As of now, the Minutemen are in a little trouble, although there is no great reason to hit the panic button yet. The gridders have been fortunate to say the least, that they have been able to defeat their weaker opponents with their off-and-on attack. But what will happen when they run up against Rutgers this Saturday or UNH and BC in November. They certainly won't be able to get away with inconsistency then.

UMass football coach Dick MacPherson philosophically reflected on his team's play after his forces lost to UConn on Saturday.

"Before this game we were winning but struggling as we were going. We just weren't blowing out anybody in these games and we certainly didn't blow UConn out today," he said.

Where does the problem lie? Is it in the offense? Is it in the defense? Or is there more than just a physical problem?

Except for the Harvard game when quarterback Jim Kubacki ran very successfully against UMass, the Minutemen's defensive game against the run and pass has been very effective. Even with the injury to cornerback Todd Holt, defensive backs Ron Harris and Vic Jefferies have been solid in defending against the pass.

Offensively, the Minutemen have been able to move the ball with authority at times, but the offense's one setback is its inability to put the ball in the end zone once they get inside the opponents 20-yard line.

It's amazing how quarterback Brian McNally can pass for 389 yards and lead the offense to 25 first downs while picking up 462 total yards, and still have only six points up on the board to show for the effort.

But you can't pin the entire blame on the offense because they are making the most of what was a serious problem. The offensive line is relatively inexperienced, with the exception of veteran center Dave Williamson. Because of injuries and eligibility problems, MacPherson was forced to make some changes.

The new makeshift line was opened some good-sized holes for Rich Jessamy and Bill Coleman, but once in a while their inexperience surfaces in the way of breakdowns.

The next three weeks will be key to the 1976 UMass football team. A strong showing will be needed against Rutgers, Holy Cross and UNH. If this talented team can tie all aspects of its game together, the Minutemen may finally land that bowl bid.

Cleaver speaks in SUB

By SPENCER VIBBERT
Collegian Staff

Former Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver, recently returned to the U.S. after nearly eight years of self-imposed exile addressed an animated crowd of 1,000 last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

The 41-year-old author of Soul on Ice spoke for more than two hours to a politically sophisticated and often hostile crowd, defending his contention that the U.S. is "with all its faults the freest nation on the face of Planet Earth."

Having returned to the U.S. voluntarily to answer charges stemming from a 1968 shoot-out in Oakland, California, Cleaver, freed on bail Aug. 13, is currently engaged on an extended lecturing tour. Calling it a "tragedy" to "cling to an old idea in the face of information that indicates the idea is inadequate," Cleaver challenged his youthful audience to give up "sloganeering" and find "American solutions for American problems."

Cleaver denounced the goverments of Cuba, Algeria, and North Korea, countries he lived in during exile which he called "racist" and "dictatorial." He said in visiting many of the governments he had sought to emulate in the sixties, he found "minorities trapped inside; people denied the political machinery to bring their wills to bear on the decision-making process."

A question and answer period following his speech brough cries of "sell-out" from substantial numbers of black and white students in the audience, many of whom said a "racist, capitalist system" existed in the U.S. At one point, answering charges that he made a "deal" with the CIA and-or the FBI Cleaver shot back, "I make deals with no one ... maybe you'll have to wait 'till I'm hung by my neck on a tree to find I don't have to deal."

Earlier in the day Cleaver reiterated to a largely black audience in a Campus Center seminar room that he had returned to the U.S. to face trial for charges of murder and assault which he had originally avoided by flight because "I now think I can go to court and be exonerated."

At one point, tempers flew when UMass Prof. Max Roach demanded that the meeting be called off, criticizing black colleagues and students for "misrepresenting". Cleaver in the campus press. Roach shouted obscenities at an older white male in the audience who demanded unsuccessfully that the meeting with Cleaver continue.

At a press conference prior to his evening speech, Cleaver contended that, upon his return, there had been "a concerted effort by the Black Panther Party to discredit him."

"For about six months I had a very difficult atmosphere in which to function in ... I wasn't allowed to see the press ... I couldn't respond to the charges made against me. People get up a drum-beat of accusations. ... but where there's a will there's a way, and there's a limit to how long you can fool people just on the basis of rumor and the reiterations of rumor." According to Cleaver, Party leaders were unsuccessful in finding any proof that he had "sold" them out.

During the course of his evening speech the former revolutionary, dressed in a wide lapelled light brown suit, condemned President Ford's refusal to meet with expelled Soviet writer Alexander Solshnitsyn, the use of prison camps in Senagal, as well as the

Bromery addresses Senate

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, at an Undergraduate Student Senate meeting last night, said he would support the deposit of the $1.1 million in Student Activities Tax Fund money to the Student Federal Credit Union, if such a move were legal.

In other business the Senate approved both the nomination of co-chairpersons for the Senate Finance Committee and a report on rents and fees.

Bromery said such a move may be legal but that he is not sure.

Also discussed was the Wellman document, which formalizes the process by which policy decisions are made by the Administration.

In times prior to the adoption of the Wellman document recommendations made and passed by the Student Senate "could get lost in the maze somewhere or somebody can just leave it on a desk and months later it would disappear," said Bromery.

He referred to rules which, under the present governance process, forces officials at each level receiving the recommendation to respond within a certain amount of time.

For example, the Board of Trustees, after receiving a recommendation from the Student Government Association, would have seventy days to respond. After that time, if there has been no action on their part, the recommendation automatically goes into effect, according to Bromery.

Speaking on the University budget, Bromery said that each year after receiving the funds allocated it by the state, only two or three million dollars are left to make programatic changes, with the remainder of the money going towards tenure, construction, and other bills.

However, he added that he was "optimistic" in looking to the year ahead. "We've been through the bottom of the budget crunch."

Responding to questions from members of the Senate, in reference to the unionization of faculty and students, he said, it could create and "adversary relationship" as develops between labor and management. Furthermore, he mentioned that there are very few examples of universities where the students are unionzed and while some have worked out, he couldn't be sure of the results if student unionization evolved here.

After the Chancellor spoke, the Senate took up the business of the meeting. Scheduled to be voted upon were six recommendations concerning rents and fees.

The first dealt with an increase in overseas educational programs and the recommendation to not endorse it was passed without argument. The other recommendations, also refusals to endorse fee hikes in areas such as Student Health Fees, the Residence Hall Telephone Trust Fund, Food Services, and Student Services, were also passed by the Senate.

After heated debate, the Senate voted 27-20 to accept the nomination of Michael Lorigan and Paul Wong as co-chairpersons of the Finance Committee. Acting Finance chairperson, Karen Kelly was the other nominee for the post.

Kelly was rejected by the Senate last week as the nominee for SGA Attoney General.

Steinecke gets journalism award

By ROB GALVIN
Collegian Staff

The nation's number No. 1 high school journalism teacher has UMass to thank for the honor.

William Steinecke, 54, of Frontier Regional High School, was named the 1976 winner of the award by the Newspaper Fund, a Wall Street Journal-sponsored program, which supports journalism education.

The UMass endorsement came from Dr. Dario Politella of the Journalist Studies program here, who said that he had heard of Steinecke's work at the school through a term paper written by one of his students last year.

Politella said that after leaving the Greenfield Recorder, Steinecke established the journalism programs at both Turners Falls High School and Frontier Regional. At the latter, he is also the adviser of the school's newspaper, the Sugarloaf Sentinel, as well as a literary magazine and the school yearbook.

Steinecke's journalism students also have a page, in the Greenfield Recorder, specifically for their work, according to Politella.

In his nomination, Politella wrote "In an area that is a journalism desert, Bill has labored unremittingly to turn his students on to journalism, not only as a career possibility, but as an outlet for leading responsible lives.

"By inflicting journalism programs into two high schools, he has achieved what no other single missionary for high school journalism has achieved in New England," said Politella.

Steinecke becomes the first New England teacher to be honored, and the second, by the nationwide competition, to be selected from the northeastern quadrant of the country, since the award's inception in 1960.

Politella said that most of the winners have previously come from the Mid-West and the Southwest. He said he hoped that this prestigious honor would spur more parts of the northeast to develop programs of their own.

While he knew of his nomination, Steinecke was unaware of his selection until Oct. 15, when a surprise presentation was made to him at a special assembly, celebrating National Newspaper Week. There was television, radio and newspaper coverage of the representation.

Steinecke received an engraved plaque along with a $1,000 check to be used to establish a Journalism Learning Center at Frontier Regional.

Commission reports bugs in Hampden

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

The Hampden Snack Bar has roaches, but there is no health problem. The University's Environmental Health and Safety Commission has acted on reports of roaches in the areas where food is prepared, according to George Reed of the commission.

"There is some problem down there," Reed said. "The whole building has problems. It is not an overwhelming problem, though.

"Chemicals are not the complete answer. The Snack Bar whould be kept cleaner. Human errors and neglect are to blame," Reed said. He visited the building Tuesday.

The description of the roaches at the Hampden Snack Bar, according to Reed, fits that of the German cockroach, which is the smallest, most difficult to control and the hardest to get rid of.

"Roaches can be brought in from anywhere and are a continual problem that food services in general have," said Reed. "It is not unusual for food establishments to have them from time to time. If proper measures are taken, they (the roaches) can be controlled to a certain extent."

"There are large cockroaches present in the steam lines of some of the dining commons. These may be Brown Bandits, Orientals or American cockroaches. They are attracted to warmth and humidity."

Reed said he will contact William H. Gordon, professional technician at food services. Gordon said Monday, "The exterminators try to spray at least once a month. They have to come in at night and are paid overtime. Physical plant works very hard to control any type of pests. Whenever there is a report of roaches, the Physical Plant exterminators are called in to fumigate the place in question."

Reed said, "Perhaps they should shut down serving pizza for a month. The heat from the pizza oven attracts roaches and the sink is right next to the oven. Caulking behind the sink would help."

Shirley Stafford, the assistant foods manager, whose office is in Hampden, said the Snack Bar was sprayed on Saturday at 4:30 a.m.

"The snack bar will be sprayed once weekly on Saturday. The sprays do not kill the roaches immediately," she said.

3 week search continues for Williamstown girl

By MARK HORAN
Collegian Staff

Cynthia Krizac, subject of "Missing Girl" notices all over this campus and New England, is still missing three weeks after she left her Williamstown home for the local library.

According to Lee Ann LePlante, a Williamstown resident and a student at UMass, Miss Krizac, nicknamed "Rocky", called a girlfriend on Oct. 7 to see if she wanted to go to the library. The friend replied that she had too much work and could not go. At approximately 8 p.m. Krizack set out on foot, by herself, for the library about a half-mile away.

Police believe she never made it to the library. She has not been seen by her family since.

Williamstown police say they have absolutely no leads. According to LePlante, Krizack was a happy, well-adjusted, well liked girl as well as being a good student. There is no evidence that she wanted to run away. Kidnapping is a possibility, but no ransom requests have been received. There is no evidence of foul play.

LePlante has distributed notices all over the campus. The notices list as "things to look for" a book she was carrying, "Young Man Luther" by Erik Erikson, and her clothing. Krizack was wearing blue jeans and a sweater, the color of which is unknown.

LePlante said it was important that Amherst area residents are made aware of the girl's identity because there is a chance she had a boyfriend in the area.

LePlante is only one of many Williamstown residents actively taking part. Residents have been organized in search parties and last weekend volunteers went to local and state police throughout New England distributing notices. A North Adams printing firm has donated the notices.

Police ask that any citizens who have any information related to the missing girl to contact their local police department.

CC Music Room fight continues

By ROBERT FALETRA
Collegian Staff

The drive to save the Campus Center music-study facility will take on new steam tonight.

In three weeks, more than 2,000 students have signed a petition to keep it at its present location.

According to Stuart Belkin, a student senator and employe of the music room, this is one-tenth of the student population.

Opponents of the proposed move will meet tonight at 7:30 in Room 902 of the Campus Center to discuss what to do with the petition. A committee will be formed and its course of action planned. All interested are welcome to attend.

The petition calls for: the repair or replacement of all tapes and headphones, that the music and study rooms stay open and at its present location, that student workers keep their jobs and that the newspapers and magazines that were present last semester be brought back. Belkin said, "The Undergraduate Senate, the Commuter Collective and the Student Government Assn. co-presidents have all given their support for the petition demands."

Collegian interviews this week turned up claims and counter claims:

Belkin claims "there are over 250 broken tapes and 35 broken headsets, while an inventory is taken every day of broken tapes and headphones and a supervisor picks up the inventory nothing is ever done about it, he claims.

Dudley Bridges, head of the Campus Center Building Operations, said "There is a man in the audio-visual room fixing tapes every day." In response to this, Belkin said, "then, why is there an increasing amount of broken tapes stacked in the music room?"

Bridges said, "Some new headphones have been purchased and more are on the way." In response Belkin says, "Then why is it that there is never more than eight working headphones at a time?"

Dean of Students William F. Field says, "Belkin has never even been up to my office to discuss the music room." Belkin responds "That's true, but I did speak to Chancellor Bromery and Bromery said, 'What are you trying to do, create an issue?' "

In reply to whether he planned to move the music room, Dean Field said, "The system in use now is outdated and if the music room were moved then a new system would be used with an increase of at least 14 headphone jacks." Field said he asked Thaddeus Debrowsky of the audio-visual room what he thought of the current system. Debrowsky, he said, told him the present system is outdated and that a system of portable cassette decks could be implemented instead. This, Debrowsky said, would be far better than the present eight track system and it could be kept up at a fraction of the cost of the present system.

Bridges added, "15,000 dollars was spent over the summer to rewire the system now in use."

Field said, "The Board of Governors decided that the newspapers and magazines in the music room last semester weren't worth it so they were stopped, but if students show an interest in them then he would bring it up at a meeting of the board.

The petitioners, said Belkin, will not settle for relocation of either the music room or study lounge.

James Veneris

Former POW talks favorably of China

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

Jim Veneris lives in China.

A prisoner during the Korean War who settled in China, he has lived there 23 years. Back in America on a six-month visit he spoke to about 100 persons at the Campus Center yesterday.

How did it all start?

Veneris said he was very impressed by the treatment given the American POWs by the Koreans and Chinese. In fact, when the peace agreement which settled the conflict in Korea was signed, including the option for all POWs to be free to go to the country of their choice, he and 22 other chose to live in China.

Veneris said that because Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R-Wisconsin), had a lot of power at the time that Veneris made his decision, he and the others were given dishonorable discharges from the Army.

"The Chinese are friends, not our enemies. They are fine people," Veneris said. "When we were prisoners, we were issued pens and paper and envelopes right off so that we could write home to our families. One boy, he was 27 years old, started to cry. He didn't know how to write. They took him down to headquarters and when he came back four months later, he was so happy. He knew how to write."

Veneris said that there were many cultural groups in the POW camp, and that the POWs were allowed to celebrate Christmas, Thanksgiving, the Chinese national holidays and St. Patrick's Day.

"While I was in the POW camp, I dreamed of becoming a sergeant and being able to call the roll," Veneris said. "I'd call: 'DuPont, Eisenhower, MacArthur, McCarthy, Truman.' You see that it is a small handful of people who cause wars, while the masses are the ones who suffer.

"When I got to China, I had four choices," he said. "I could work in a factory, go to the countryside and live in a commune, I could go to the university, or I could not work at all. I went to the factory. I eventually learned to read and write Chinese."

At the time, Veneris married but his wife later died. He then went to the university and graduate.

"I wrote a 3,000-character thesis." After graduating from the university, he went back to the factory and eventually remarried.

"I am just an ordinary worker in China." Veneris' job is to recycle old cloth shoes, eventually making them into paper which is exported.

A question session followed Veneris' brief speech. Here are some of his comments:

"Mao Tse-tung was the elected leader of the Chinese people and he was the most revered man in China. The Chinese people will turn their grief into a spiritual force which will make China bloom."

"The government of China is not separated from the people, it is a government of the people The society is developing as long as the struggle continues, it (the society) will grow."

UMass lab researches Dutch Elm disease

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

Research for acure for Dutch Elm disease is being conducted at UMass by the Shade Tree Laboratory.

Dr. Francis W. Holmes, director of the laboratory, said, "The chemical now being used is not exactly a cure, we can't say this early. But there is hope."

The Shade Tree Laboratory, located across from Franklin Dining Commons, was established in 1935 mainly to conduct research on shade and ornamental trees, and insects and diseases related to these trees.

The laboratory also performs other services such as conducting research projects, extension plans of work, Control Service studies, and resident teaching. The Control Services analyzes tree samples for the Dutch Elm disease. In 1975, the laboratory received 3,453 samples of the disease.

The chemical, benomyl, was discovered in 1967 by Professor Eugene Smalley in Wisconsin. Different forms of it have been used in previous experiments. Benomyl is insoluble.

In 1972, Dr. Edward S. Kondo, a Canadian researcher, made several salts which would allow benomyl to dissolve. The Shade Tree Laboratory is now using benomyl phosphate in its experiments.

"In 1975 we treated eight trees on campus with benomyl phosphate. After the symptoms appeared, the disease in the eight trees was stopped," Holmes said.

"During the early spring of 1976, we were not sure of the outcome. Four of the eight trees died, two showed more symptoms of the disease and two remained healthy. This was a controlled experiment and all of the control trees died," he said.

Dutch Elm disease is caused by a fungus that is carried by the elm bark beetles. "The disease attacks all species of elm trees, but especially the American or White Elm.

"The beetles lay eggs only on dying Elm trees," he added.

Pinkham receives vote as JS director nominee

By CHAS O'CONNOR
Collegian Staff

David R. Clark, English department chairperson, has offered the job of director of the Journalistic Studies (JS) program to Lawrence D. Pinkham, JS faculty member, following a recommendation from the JS committee.

The JS committee unanimously nominated Pinkham in a letter to Clark, Tuesday. Pinkham has not responded to Clark's offer.

The letter to Clark also said "the Committee wishes to make it known that it is undertaking an urgent re-examination of the relationship of Journalistic Studies with the English Department."

That "urgent re-examination" follows a recommendation of the long-range planning committee of the English department that recommends that in five years' time the program will have the same number of faculty and relatively little growth.

The committee's recommendation also favored "retooling" present or future members of the English department to teach journalism courses.

Dean Jeremiah M. Allen of the College of Arts and Sciences, in a letter to the English department, said he could not support the recommendation, citing a student-faculty ratio in the JS program as being 20-1 as compared with an

UMass has support for former offenders

A unique program operating from the University Without Walls, (UWW) provides ex-offenders, from area jails and correctional institutions, a place of support and direction. The program is known as 'Project Re-entry' and has Recognized Student Organization status as the educational opportunities for ex-offenders.

Thomas Chalmers, director of Project Re-entry said he hopes to reach the people in the community who don't know of the existance of the group.

"We are an advocacy group, providing support and direction to the student upon entering the University from the institutions. It provides a positive direction for the past offender. Instead of carrying the stigma of being an outcast, the experience gained can be used in constructive ways," said Chalmers.

"We have video-tapes of the jail environment, the educational process, the court system and human service support systems which can give the outsider an insight on the perspective of the prisoner. Some of our students are working in Belchertown State with the handicapped, others are involved with legal studies and other advocacy areas. This puts the experience of incarceration into a positive working relationship with the community," said James Gorman, assistant director of the Project.

The Project Re-entry Program is funded by $12,000 grant from the Department of Mental Health, division of drug rehabilitation.

The money provides an avenue of opportunity for presently incarcerated people to part-time study here at the University and sets them up with full time admission slots upon release, said Gorman.

Prisoners from Berkshire, Hampshire and Franklin counties have or will be connected with the program in the following months, he added.

"We have been working within the system getting to know the various ins and outs of the various offices of UMass and have a good handle on what a students' needs are once entering the University. Thus we can help the person adjust to the gradual re-entering to society providing workshops, peer support, and regular rap meetings," said Gorman.

He also explained his plan to establish an advisory board, constructed by people from the courts, the jails and the University.

"This would continue the education of the people who have direct relationships with the ones incarcerated, thus providing them with a point of view familiar to the inmate and his environment."

The Project office is located in the UWW office on North Pleasant St.

dictatorship of Ugandan President Idi Amin.

In reconciling his travels around the world with his earlier espousal of Panther Marxist-Leninism Cleaver maintained, "For someone who spent a long time criticizing the United States working for change in the United States it was very painful and very difficult to begin to see that on all those points the United States was the most advanced, the freest country on the face of the planet Earth. Although the United States had its faults, although the United States had oppression inside its system ... the approach that we were using was ill-conceived, that the rhetoric we were using was inapplicable, and that the solution we had been advocating was not desirable."

The question directed to Cleaver ranged from the economic and the political to inquiries about his conviction for rape in the 1950's. Through the course of the event, applause went back and forth from the podium to the questioner's microphones. One Black student walked the length of the hall to forcibly remove a white student from a microphone the latter was using to address the speaker.

Throughout his visit to the University Cleaver called for a renewed emphasis on democratic politics as a means of achieving social goals.

"I say to Blacks in America that the most important thing is to organize around a political program that makes common cause with other Americans ... whites, Chicanos, Spanish-speaking people, women ... We need to attract enough support to gain power ... I don't see progress being made in any other way."

overall ratio of 9-1 in the English department.

The letter read in part: "Journalistic Studies is attracting students at something like twice the rate of the rest of the English department, and it has probably reached the saturation point. I cannot support the recommendation."

About one-third of English majors here are also journalism majors. There are 89 faculty teaching English courses and six teaching journalism.

The English department's long-range plan includes no hiring of journalism instructors between now and 1981. The JS program now has five faculty and a sixth instructor, Arthur B. Musgrave of the English department, will probably retire in 1980, according to the recommendation.

According to Pinkham, the "urgent re-examination" of the JS program will include: creation of a job placement program, projection of a new major, a graduate program, a structured internship program, and a "current curriculum."

"I feel it's scandalous that they (the long range planning committee of the English department) have proposed the plan that they have," Pinkham said yesterday.

"We desperately need relief from the student-faculty ratios that exist. We've had to resort to big lectures and we've only got a handful of courses. Ralph (Whitehead) is teaching a course on the campaign and the media which has 138 students. At any other institute of higher learning that would be a joke.

"When I came back here (in 1972) the notion was that we were to become a separate department. The depression hit and we decided to wait it out."

Pinkham also said that the English department made plans for the journalism program without consulting anyone from the program itself.

Benomyl phosphate is injected into the trunks of the diseased trees.

"We don't know with the present knowledge when the use of benomyl phosphate will work. Benomyl slows the growth of the fungus, but it does not kill it. The symptoms of the disease are killed."

Previous experiments for a cure of Dutch Elm disease have used DDT, burning the diseased trees and burying dead trees.

"DDT controlled the disease because it killed the beatles which carried the fungus. DDT is a persistent insecticide, and the trees must be sprayed in spring before the leaves come. But DDT was banned because of its persistence.

"The problem dead or dying trees is that the wood is moist. Sometimes oil must be used to help the burning process."

Carter, Ford

Feeling victorious

[UPI] — New York gave Democrat Jimmy Carter a hero's welcome as tens thousands poured into the streets to cheer him yesterday but President Ford said he has the momentum going that will bring him a "Truman" upset victory election day.

With six days left, Ford and Carter shifted their nonstop campaigns to the populous East Coast. Both were elated at the crowds who swarmed them in the final stage of their fight for the presidency.

Seeking the state's 41 electoral votes and hoping to nail down the backing of Catholics, liberals and labor, Carter received the biggest reception of his 22-month campaign as his motorcade rolled down Fifth Avenue and into garment center for a rally.

Police estimated that 10,000-15,000 lined Fifth Avenue as Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, standing in an open limousine moved 20 blocks down the parade route and another 60,000 to 70,000 crammed three blocks in the midtown garment center.

With genuine wonderment in his voice, Carter said, "This is an absolutely unbelievable outpouring of confidence."

New York reporters said it was the biggest presidential campaign rally since John Kennedy appeared there in the closing weeks of the 1960 campaign. Carter holds a nine point edge in the state according to the latest New York Daily News poll.

Ford was equally elated as he campaigned on Atlantic City's famed boardwalk and in Philadelphia in sunny but chilly weather.

A crowd of about 1,500 crushed around Ford on the boardwalk — about two dozen were pushed over the roped area — and the President shouted, "Jerry loves Jersey and I mean it from the bottom of my heart.

"There are nine states where we are a point or two ahead of Carter or a point or two behind," Ford said. "They are the key to victory."

HIGHSPIRE, Pa.: Independent presidential candidate Eugene McCarthy purses his lips as he fields questions from the news media yesterday on a campaign swing through Pennsylvania.

News in Brief

Ex-senator acquitted of lying

ORLANDO, Fla. [UPI] — Former Sen. Edward J. Gurney was acquitted yesterday of lying to a grand jury — the last of seven charges filed against the one-time member of the Senate Watergate Committee in an influence-peddling scheme.

A jury of eight men and four women deliberated an hour and 18 minutes before finding Gurney innocent of the charge that he lied under oath in 1974 when he said he did not know until the summer of 1973 that money collected by fundraiser Larry Williams was paying field office expenses.

Gurney hugged and kissed his two grown daughters after the verdict was read and then grinned broadly.

But he was grimfaced as he spoke to reporters from the steps of Orland's federal building. The Justice Department "blackened my name, besmirched my character and ruined me economically," he said.

Ferry captain tipsy upon crash

NEW ORLEANS [AP] — The captain of a Mississippi River ferry packed with early morning commuters was "almost legally drunk" when his craft collided with a tanker, killing an estimated 100 persons, a coroner said yesterday.

"This ferryboat captain had been drinking," said New Orleans Coroner Frank Minyard.

"He was almost legally drunk, and this, coupled with the fact that he was at the end of his shift — the drinking and the fatigue — in my judgment, impaired his judgment and ability to handle his vessel."

Minyard said the autopsy on Capt. Egidio Auletta, completed yesterday, showed a blood alcohol content of .09 per cent.

"That is just a tad under 0.1 ... which is the legal definition of being drunk in the State of Louisiana," he said.

Pre-trial publicity causes problems

MADERA, Calif. [UPI] — Three young men from the San Francisco area, accused of kidnaping 26 children and their driver from a school bus, fought yesterday to get their trial moved out of the rural county where the children lived.

Defense attorneys brought in scores of newspapers, radio and television scripts, tapes and films in an effort to show that the people of Madera County were so heavily bombarded with publicity in the case that a fair jury cannot be chosen here.

James Schoenfeld, 24, his brother, Richard, 22, and Fred N. Woods, 24, all well-to-do young men from the San Francisco Peninsula, entered pleas of innocent to the 27 charges of kidnap and 18 charges of robbery in connection with the bizarre hijacking of a school bus near Chowchilla, Calif., last July 15.

California county may be shrinking

LOS ANGELES [AP] — The chipping away at the nation's most populous county has begun with a proposal on the Nov. 2 ballot to create the first new county in California in 70 years.

Both principle and economics are involved in the move to create Canyon County, which would slice away nearly one-fourth of Los Angeles County's land and one per cent of its population.

Los Angeles County has about 7 million residents.

Other efforts with similar motivation are in various stages of development in other parts of the big county, including the heavily populated San Fernando and San Gabriel valleys. And county officials, concerned over a dwindling tax base, fear passage of the Canyon County initiative would boost other separatist movements, though no on is talking about its chances for passage.

Handgun hazard

BOSTON [UPI] — Handguns represent a major health hazard responsible for an average 63 deaths per day and are likely to be seven times more deadly than cancer, a group of Massachusetts health care officials said yesterday.

"In the years between 1966 and 1972, more people in this country died from handgun injuries than died in the Vietnam War," said Massachusetts Health Commissioner Jonathan Fielding.

He and other area health officials met at Boston City Hospital's emergency room to endorse a Nov. 2 ballot referendum banning the possession of handguns.

Meanwhile, Westwood Police Chief Francis Abbate, opposed to the referendum, lashed out at Boston Police Commissioner Robert J. diGrazia's appeal for gun owners to turn in their firearms voluntarily over a three day period.

Abbate said every major police organization in the state is opposed to the question, adding he resented diGrazia's "eleventh hour political dirty trick of trying to deliberately confuse the public."

Fielding said 63 persons in the U.S. die each day because of handguns and the weapons cause more deaths among males than "infections and parasitic diseases combined."

Kennedv criticized

BOSTON [UPI] — The Republican challenging Sen. Edward M. Kennedy yesterday attacked the liberal Democrat for voting to slash the defense budget, a theme used with success in a tight congressional race in the state.

Michael Robertson told a news conference Kennedy's votes contributed to the "steady outflow" of defense installations in Massachusetts, including the shutdown of the Watertown arsenel, the Boston navy shipyard and Westover Air Force base.

"It's his kind of attitude over the last 14 years ... that has caused this whole problem," said Robertson, 41, president of the world's largest family-owned curtain manufacturing firm.

Robertson, a selectman in his hometown of Berkley, faces an uphill battle against Kennedy who has raised seven times as much money for the campaign as his challenger.

"People that we elect to go to Washington kick around the military establishment," Robertson said. When the Pentagon makes cuts in the name of efficiency, it "tends to lean toward its friends and against its enemies," the Berkley Republican said.

While Robertson said he favored a national defense "second to none," he said

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

Sniffles continue

BOSTON [AP] — Researchers who said two years ago that vitamin C might relieve common colds now conclude that the drug does not significantly ease symptoms of the sniffles.

The team of doctors, who were among the first to confirm the cold-curing powers of the vitamin, say now their earlier assertions were wrong.

"We do not believe that vitamin C has widespread usefulness as a cold remedy," the doctors concluded.

The new study was directed by Dr. John F. Coulehan at the University of Pittsburgh Medical School. It is to be published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The virtues of vitamin C have been debated since Nobel laureate Linus Pauling said in 1970 that people who took large daily doses of the drug would have fewer colds. He also said the colds they did get would be less severe.

To test that theory, Coulehan and his associates experimented with Navajo boarding school students in Arizona.

Fathers' rights

BOSTON [AP] — Fathers of children born out of wedlock have new legal rights under legislation signed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The measure seeks to assure that fathers have a say in the eventual adoption of the child. Although they always have been eligible to adopt the child, state officials say they seldom do.

Usually, welfare officials have found the mother — who may or may not be a welfare recipient — signs the release to give her child up for adoption. The father, if he was identified, was not consulted.

However, the new state law will require welfare officials to get a release from the father, if possible.

Working on work

BOSTON [UPI] — A special task force appointed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is putting the finishing touches on a multimillion dollar plan which could put thousands of welfare recipients to work on a voluntary basis.

Under the plan, between 1,000 and 5,000 recipients of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program could be put to work by a yet to be created private nonprofit corporation.

Though the program would be completely supported by state and federal funds in its initial stages, developers of the plan say they believe the major elements can become self supporting within a few years.

The people must be fed

By ETHIOPIAN STUDENTS
IN N. AMERICA

The problem of famine and destitution has variously been explained, and its causes has been advocated to be a result of the drastic change in the physical and meterological phenomenan, disruption in the demographic argument. Demographers look at the problem from the point of view of rapid population growth, essentially in the third world, in comparison to food production. Convinced by their narrow and one sided conclusions, they warned of possible holocaust resulting from this so called trade-off between population and food production.

Indeed, it is desperately urgent to sound the alarm — but not because eternal laws of nature make it impossible to feed the globe's population. The alarm must be sounded because the economic and social system of a class society condemns untold multitudes to privation, degradation and premature death. The alarm must be sounded because the economic and social system of capitalism and imperialism prevents the urgent needed full mobilization of the potential social surplus and the attainment of rates of economic advancement that can be secured with it. The alarm must be sounded because the system of exploitation and plunder negates the rational and meaningful utilization of social surplus.

In the era of imperialism famine is not a result of absolute want, rather whatever its incidental origin, is developed from the policy of throw away prices which the profiting classes launch against the laboring masses. Only the oppressed people of the world are vulnerable to famine and hunger. It is against this background that famine, hunger, malnutrition, disease and all the other ills of a class society must be seen. It is also against this background that the poverty and destitution of people throughout the world must be seen.

As a social scientist once wrote, "what at one pole is the accumulation of wealth, at the other is ... the accumulation of poverty, suffering, slavery, despotism, ignorance and moral degradation." The essence of class society is this very connection.

Famine in History

Even though some times it would seem so, hunger is not a problem endemic to the contemporary world, not a calamity of today's impoverished masses alone. Hunger has affected in an almost identical manner the oppressed classes throughout history. Hunger is an unquestionable phenomenan in a CLASS SOCIETY WHERE THE EXPLOITATION OF ONE BY THE OTHER IS A GOVERNING PRACTICE.

A recorded 450 famines were known in Europe between 1000 to 1850 A.D. In periods of extreme famine, cannibalism was practiced and merchants traded in human flesh. In feudal times the inhabitants of towns besieged by the famine ate wild grasses, roots and barks of trees, and like some animals, practiced a kind of collective hibernation. They spent four or five of the coldest months of the year in a semi-lethargic state, sleeping most of the time, making the least possible movement and only taking care of their most urgent needs.

In the 18th and 19th Century, when colonialism dedicated to the lofty task of forcefully introducing its economic-social practices and thus disrupting the existing social relations, millions were forced to perish. Half the population of Madras, Mysore and Hyderabad in India died of starvation. In 1868 more than 300,000 Algerians died for the same reason. In the same century 100 million people also starved to death in China.

In Ethiopia, as else where in the neo-colonial Third World countries, famine, poverty, malnutrition and deprivation is the sickening reality. It was estimated that in late 19th century a quarter of a million people lost their lives. This same period also witnessed the loss of millions of heads of cattle. The situation in the present century, though quite drastically changed for some countries, is still the same for the majority of the colonial and neo-colonial countries. The perpetuation of famine during this period of monopoly capital is because the structural integration of these societies to world imperialism has given rise to the condition of immobility and 'under developingness'. This relationship has also resulted in the creation and ascendence to power of a wasteful and subservient class within this neo-colonial countries, which more than any thing has been the chief agents in the perpetuation of hunger, ignorance, unemployment and general backwardness.

The Situation in Ethiopia

In Ethiopia, since the outbreak of the famine, hundreds of thousands have died and twice as many left homeless. The then Emperor has shown total indifference. In fact there was a total cover up of this human tragedy, until Ethiopian students, other progressives and the international progressive media exposed it.

Today the situation, though not as grave, is still bad. The current anti-people military junta though has propagated a major campaign against the famine, has in fact done very little to better the condition of the starving masses. In its bloody attempt to suppress progressive forces, particularly the Eritrean freedom fighters, hundreds of thousands of people, whose houses were bombed, whose farms were destroyed were made refugee in neighboring countries. In the Sudan alone there are over one hundred thousand refugees, under conditions which has no parallel in present day history.

Finally we appeal to all progressives and humanitarians to come to a Fund Raising Night. The Fund Raising Night will be held at the UNITARIAN CHURCH OF NORTHAMPTON, 220 MAIN St. on Friday, the 29th of October at 6:00 p.m. There will be slides, speaker and an Ethiopian Dinner will be served. Donation will be $2.50 (including dinner). Tickets will be sold at the door. For information call 739-8978.

For all you skeptics

By RANDY GINZIG

There's less than a week to go until America decides who will lead the country for the next four years, and by now most of you are probably thinking: 'who cares?"

It's been almost two years now since a dozen or so Presidential hopefuls opened their campaigns only to have their hopes whither away as the primaries passed. As of August there were two, and these are the products of party compromises and back-room deals.

Most of the students reading this are voting in their first presidential election and may have already voted by way of absentee ballot. Many are so disgusted by the manner in which this campaign was conducted that they have looked to minor party candidates to fulfill their needs. Others, like myself, had hoped to place our first presidential ballot with the conviction that we were taking a positive step in helping to move this nation in the direction it was meant to go. Yet over the course of the campaign we have become so disgusted by mudslinging, rhetoric, evasion of the issues, and the final realization that neither of these men have a progressive yet practical vision of America.

Nevertheless, if you live in America, it's your duty as a "conscious" citizen to vote. Granted that your one vote will not swing the state of Massachusetts. Let's face it, as long as the government is giving you something, you might as well grab it.

For all you skeptics, remember that this nation was founded under the premise of government for the people and by the people. It's not supposed to have any more power than we convey to it. So although neither candidate may satisfy your needs, it's better for you to let yourself be heard than some hick out in Idaho who couldn't care less about "that Eastern college elite".

The candidates do offer different spectrums in many areas. Before voting consider these facts:

—If you don't like surprises, then vote for Ford. With Jerry, you may not like what you're getting, but at least you know what you're getting.

—If you're pro abortion and for gun control, here's peanuts to you.

—If you think mom and dad are paying too much in taxes, turn to the elephant. Ford and the Republicans definitely want to cut taxes, but in the process would cut out or curtain many government services.

—Don't believe that Carter will cut down the government bureaucracy. With all the services he's proposing, chances are that the government and it's price will continue to grow. Look at the record in Georgia for evidence.

—Dole is Droll. Senator Dole has consistently voted for big business interests and corporate-sponsored legislation, as well as defending Nixon even after Pat gave up on him. Women, chances are you wouldn't want to take this man home for dinner, so would you want him to be a breath away from the presidency?

—The Legislative branch of government will be overwhelmingly Democratic. A Republican President could check some over anxious legislation. On the other hand a Democratic President and Legislature could pass some progressive measures that have not been able to get through.

—Reports from aides and journalists covering Carter say that nobody knows what makes this man tick. It seems as if Carter wants to take single-handed control of the government and shape it into his concept of what it should be.

So, if you're satisfied with the way things are, your logical choice is Ford. If you feel like you want to change, realize that in Jimmy Carter you're taking a gamble that may not be for the better in the long run.

That's it in a nutshell.

Smoked out

To the Editor:

On Tuesday night I tried to enjoy the movie "Blazing Saddles." However, I was having a hard time paying attention to the movie because pot and cigarette smoke surrounded me.

I think that I as a non-smoker have a right to enjoy the movie without coughing and wheezing all night. I also believe that the smokers have a right to smoke if they don't irritate anyone by doing so.

The only solution to this problem is to have a smokers and a non-smokers section in the CCA or the SUB or wherever a movie on campus is shown. That way we will all be able to enjoy a good movie.

Election interest

To the Editor:

In response to Michael Roberts commentary, Peanuts for Thanksgiving, I would like to say that if the election of a president from the two major parties were the only consideration on the ballot, I, too, might not vote. However, there are third party and independent candidates on the ballot and if there is ever going to be a viable Third party-Independent candidate for the presidency in an election, the time is now to show support for such alternatives.

Also, there is an unequivocal polarity between candidates seeking office on local, state, and federal levels. The referenda, alone, should provocate interest in this election.

Although your interests will not be represented after the election, the statistics of your vote mav generate enough hope in future candidates to actively represent you.

As I see it, the only poor choice on the ballot is for the major party presidential candidates.

Express your ideas on Tuesday. Please vote!

Sunday Coffee House

To the Editor:

I want to give my compliments to the Sunday evening Dickinson Coffee House. The music and people made a usually depressing time of the weekend mellow, full of easiness and well worth living.

A Halloween story

"Hi there kiddies, want some candy?"

"What are you supposed to be?"

"Supposed to be? I'm a witch!"

"A witch? Far out."

"Yea, and I'm going to turn you into a frog!"

"Yea?"

"Boil you in oil!"

"Is that right?"

"How about if I cast an evil spell over you?"

"How about if you go bother someone else.?"

"You mean you're not scared?"

"Not really."

"But I'm a witch."

"And I'm a Umie."

"Now you're trying to scare me."

"I hate to disappoint you but things aren't the same anymore."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean witches and ghosts and goblins and all those things just don't scare people anymore."

"You mean I'm obsolete?"

"Afraid so."

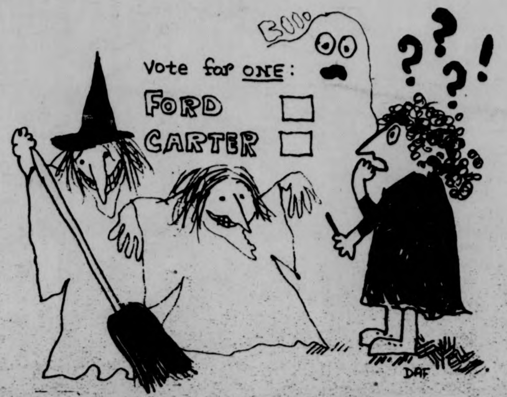
"And I don't scare you?"

"Sorry."

"Well what does scare people these days?"

Things that are a lot more real."

"Like what?"



"Like living in southwest for example. Now that's scary. Or finding melie bugs all over your plants."

"Melie bugs?"

"Or being a senior."

"Wait a minute, what about haunted houses or zombies?"

"Oh, we've got plenty of zombies around here."

"What about poisoned apples?"

"Oh, you've heard about the food at the dining commons."

"I'm afraid I don't follow you?"

"It's just not a good time to be scared. Everyone's too frightened."

"So what do I do?"

"Go home, put yourself in a nice hot cauldron, read up on a few spells and get some sleep. Try again next year."

"That's all I can do?"

"Well, there is one thing..."

"Is it really frightening?"

"Very."

"What is it?"

"You could show people this years voting ballot. Now that's scary."

Sacred Cows and Golden Calves

By JAN VAN TOL

Though the event may have gone unnoticed, UMass was brutally assaulted by sarcastic slurs and caustic remarks the other day in a column by M. R. Montgomery appearing in the Boston Globe (Oct. 11). Now Mr. Montgomery is the Outdoors Editor for the Globe, and it was not unreasonable to expect that at some point he might choose to comment on some of the UMass wildlife. But while we realize that not everyone likes UMass, we were stunned by the ferocity of the attack.

In a slanderous, slopwork column entitled "You probably didn't realize it, but...", Mr. Montgomery classified UMass — as well as fishsticks, dog breath, and Meldrim Thomson — among "a dozen things you could live without". Such wicked calumny may sound humorous to assorted knaves and idiots, but progressive people realize that there are certain things that are sacrosanct, that are beyond the scratchings of a writer's pen, that should be beyond the slimeslings of shameless satirists. And it is doubtless that the University of Massachusetts is one of these.

We were delighted, therefore, to read a few days later the spirited response of a Mr. Paul J. Smith of UMass-Amherst. Rightly upset by the unwarranted defamation of the Commonwealth's most cherished institution, Mr. Smith warned that "journalists ought to be wary about satirical comments concerning... positive efforts," fearing that "someone might take (them) seriously." Indeed, "there is a time and a place for satire" and "there is a fine line between good satire and bad taste". Bravo!! Thus chastened, it is improbable that Mr. Montgomery will again soon stir away from the birds and bees which constitute his proper beat.

But Mr. Smith made several points that all writers should take to heart. Journalism, like revolution, is an ongoing process in need of critical self-examination. We of the Collegian too must constantly ask ourselves, have we been too funny today? Are we still firmly balanced on the fine line between good taste and bad satire? Have we been wary about satirical comments concerning positive (read progressive) efforts? Or quasitheologically speaking, are there Sacred Cows??

We have cogitated at length on the matter, and feel that a few examples illustrating subjects that are clearly beyond the pale of mordancy will be helpful. The following individuals-things are untouchable:

—Pope Paul, who is always in the forefront of progressive efforts, should never be satirized. Consider the fate of Earl Butz. Clearly the Pope has some communication with Heaven.

—Jimmy Carter. Ibid.

—The UMass budget. The paltry $124 million sum requested for fiscal '78 is indisputably reasonable. Any suggestion by Governor Dukakis that it is fiscally irresponsible is absurd, non-progressive, and should be satirized. Do we want to become the educational Mississippi of the '70's over a few million dollars here or there?

—Susan Saxe. It is commonly known that it is not Susan Saxe who is on trial; it is progressive movements such as lesbian liberation and anti-imperialism that are being persecuted by the Federal government. While many concede that her participation in a bank robbery was in poor taste, her commitment to the above movements clearly proscribes any non-constructive comments regarding her case.

—The Equal Rights Amendment. Surely it is unquestionable that women are entitled to pay alimony, have equal draft rights, enjoy common restrooms, and get trenchmouth?

But just as there are Sacred Cows, there are Golden Calves. Golden Calves are things-people which everyone worships, but which are actually falsely idolized. These may be savaged at will.

—Phyllis Schafly. Ms. Schafly is the leader of the reactionary "STOP THE ERA" movement. And is that any wonder, she being white, wealthy, and heterosexual, all of which it is not chic to be?

—General George Brown, who is cheap. It is absurd to say, as does the General, that giving 2.2 billion dollars to Israel is a burden; it is an act of compassion. It is also progressive since Israel (which used to worship golden calves) now is a Sacred Cow.

—Opponents of Affirmative Action. If you can't lead women to proper standards, bring the standards down to them. Social justice demands it. (Charlotte Allen's column, 20 Oct.).

—Richard Nixon. The more savaging the better. The schmuck deserves it, and always will, right?

—John F. Kennedy. Anyone who can't keep the lust IN his heart ought not to be President....

We are confident that with these illustrations as a guide, all future Collegian columns will be dignified and tasteful, and will ridicule only appropriate things.

Altruism

We're nearing the edge of All Hallows Eve and I don't know about you, but, a magic is already pervading the sphere of my local surroundings. Tonite, as two of my friends were studying with the window open, a little bird — no taller than 3" - flew in.

Traditionally, (magically speaking) this would represent a message of some sort. We didn't keep it long enough to decipher any sort of message but brought it outside for its freedom.

After we thought about it for a while we realized that it probably came inside because it was so cold out. So, we bundled up and went outside to find it and bring it back into the warmth. We heard it once but never found it.

Later, I was thinking about if we had caught it and brought it inside. The magic might have been reversed because of the act of capture. Nietzsche said, "the bite of conscience is indecent."

As I was being bitten I remembered the story of Abraham Lincoln and altruism. As Lincoln was riding with a friend in a coach, he remarked that he thought there was no such thing as a real altruistic act. (disinterested benevolence). The listener was shocked at this and proceeded to enumerate many acts of kindness that didn't benefit the doer. Then, the travelers spied a pig at the side of the road that was hopelessly entangled in a wire fence.

Lincoln had the coach stop so he could get out to untangle the poor creature. His friend was surprised at the contradiction to what Lincoln had just said and inquired. Lincoln answered that what he had done was a very selfish act. If he had not freed the pig, his conscience would have bothered him so badly that he couldn't have slept for nights.

While we were out looking for the bird, another topic of conscience came up - voting next week. Most people I know are planning to vote on the ballot questions, but are still unsure about the presidential race.

In this country, voting is dictated mainly by conscience, not regulated pressure. Regarding the presidential race, I don't think it's apathy as much as antipathy that will keep voters away from the polls.

Halloween is one of my favorite holidays. I like the whole idea of being able to dress absurdly and act foolishly. There is no limit to the imagination during the celebration of All Hallows Eve; especially on this campus.

It seems only fitting that an act of social conscience should follow the acts absurdum. The only conscience involved in Halloween is whether or not to commit acts of destruction — internal or external. But the conscience is the main factor in the act of voting.

I have no recommedations for your conscience and won't expound on any of my views on the issues. I only recommend that you vote; after of course you've had your mystical transformation back from the creature you were on Halloween.

Part Time Parents

If you are a student-parent whose child-children do not live with you — but who visit — read on.

For Financial Aid to create such a category, we must give them an estimate of the number of part time parents, both women and men, on campus, and the expenses involved in part time parenting. Without knowing how many people are involved, Financial Aid cannot create the category. Without the category, part time parents cannot get extra money.

Call Barbara Pridham at 545-0812 — or fill in form below and drop off in box marked "Part-Time Parents" at the Commuter Collective, Room 404, Student Union — or look for the table on Campus Center Concourse today.

Bluebird Forecast

The keyword for the day is teamwork. The Sun, the key to monthly purpose, is in the partnership-productivity sign of Scorpio. The Moon, the key to the shifting reflection of that purpose in our mood changes, is in Capricorn, the sign of working to establish a social identity. With patient discipline, we can make our partnerships more productive. However, it's a high pressure situation for Mercury, the planet of analysis and communication. Mercury's in Libra, the sign of balance and partnership, about to go into Scorpio around midnight, and it makes a couple of testy aspects today.

At 8:00 a.m. Mercury was 5-12 of the circle, or 'quincunx', ahead of Jupiter, the planet of expansion, in Taurus, the sign of personal productivity. At 5-12 the circle ahead, Mercury, the rational mind, must decide exactly which of its behavior-patterns are useful in terms of expanding personal productivity. And then it has to eliminate the useless, which in this case could be Libran indecisiveness. But exagerrating either our indecision or else a compensating stubbornness just invites challenge, instead of working toward a shared goal.

The last aspect to go into in any detail is tomorrow morning's Sun 'parallel' to Uranus, the planet of the truth that sets us free, which is, like the Sun, in Scorpio. So tomorrow morning at 6:41 is keyed to the theme of the next few days. Our Solar purpose is about to renew its connection with Uranian truth-and-freedom, in the sign of partnership productivity. We may feel like being rebelliously independent and self-willed, when the truth is that we've got to sacrifice whatever it is that keeps us apart. Otherwise our partnerships will produce nothing. Let's focus on transcending our own inner rebellion, though, before we ask it of anyone else.

Minor changes through the day and night may go like this: Around 2 o'clock p.m. — feelings of being un-loved may produce shyness or depression. Around 9 tonight, if we're impulsive, draw the line between real sharing needs and selfishness. From 9 p.m. to 3 a.m. let's make sure our visions lovingly include others and work toward practical goals. From 3 a.m. to 6 p.m., if we're awake, should be mellow and understanding, a good time for practical decisions. Otherwise, deep sleep could be especially refreshing.

At 6:07 a.m. the Moon goes into Aquarius. Around 7 a.. our mental motives may be suspect unless we're tuned into humanitarian, progressive values.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Thursday, October 28 — Born today, you are inclined toward hot-headedness, particularly in your dealings with those who for one reason or another don't happen to agree with you on any given point. It often matters not at all to you whether the opposition has logical, sensible reasons for failing to support your ideas, decisions, or actions; you are usually concerned only with the whether or not such support was forthcoming -- and if it was not, you may not be able to keep your anger in check. Easily upset emotionally over trifles, you are inclined to waste considerable time, effort and energy getting into and then out of spiritual depressions.

Concerned for the future, especially for your own particular future, you nevertheless may arrive at that moment when the future becomes the present and be quite ill-prepared for either. Though you look forward always and with great expectation to the results of your efforts, when those results come into view, you are often ill-at-ease with them, not knowing how to receive either material or spiritual benefits with grace and understanding. Only experience can change things for you in this regard; pure knowledge cannot.

You are one of those highly dutiful individuals who feels first and foremost the sense of his own responsibility toward himself and those who are dependent upon him. Take care, though, that you don't carry such a sense too far, for if you do, you may become subject to charges of interference as you attempt to force others to be as interested in and as demanding of their own enterprises as you are.

Friday, October 29

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Unless you can hold your temper and your tongue in the face of opposition today, you can prepare for real failure late in the day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Express yourself in such a way that others cannot doubt that you know what you're talking about. Cite facts and figures confidently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Maintain your present relationship with a sibling. The need for new friends presents itself strongly late in the day.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Jealously guarding your position on the employment scene may have an effect quite the opposite of what you hope to achieve. Relax!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — An exaggeration of another's importance may not gain you the entry into society you hope for. You would do well to stick to the facts.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Maneuver a friend into the position that will do you the most good -- but be tactful about it. New doors are opening for you now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Correct procedure is vital to the present operation on the home front. Don't expect miracles even with such precision, however.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Subordination to your own principles is more important to your happiness than anything else. Don't be surprised by an evening visitor.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — The competition stiffens late in the day. Don't slacken your efforts just before you gain your second wind. Time yourself well.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Possession of material goods enables you to call the shots today. Do so -- but don't take advantage of another's misfortune.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery; don't be annoyed with the young for attempting to follow in your footsteps.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The existence of prejudice in those close to your heart may surprise you. Employ logic and a sense of compassion to gain your ends by evening.

Female booters start growth

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It's funny how a team can get started.

The sport of soccer is growing by leaps and bounds across the United States, and it is a popular varsity sport here. However, women could only participate here in it within the intramural program prior to this year. But now soccer has been organized into a club sport on campus mainly through the efforts of three people.

Upon arriving on campus to finish her doctorate, sociology graduate student Jerri Mulvaney-Huseh found, to her dismay, that UMass did not field a varsity women's soccer team. When she attended the University of South Florida at Tampa, she played the sport and wanted to continue her soccer participation at UMass. So she went to head soccer coach Russ Kidd to see what could be done.

Kidd had received similar inquiries from several interested women last year about soccer; so the two got together and called a meeting for all potential female booters to try and organize a club. And that's just what happened.

About 25 women came to the meeting, and plans were drawn up for practices. While the women were on the field, they found that Stockbridge soccer mentor Bob Snow needed some extra people to practice with his men, so the two groups got together and had a few informal games together.

"The scrimmages worked out really well," said Mulvaney-Huseh. "Since I'd rather play and not coach, Bob sort of took the team under his wing during practices."

In fact, the practices worked out so well that the women played their first game a week ago against Mount Holyoke. The squad tied the Lyons, 1-1, which is particularly impressive considering the fact that Mount Holyoke has fielded a team for a few years.

"We have about 12 or 13 women who come to practice on a regular basis," said Mulvaney-Huseh.

"The regular procedure for a team to become established is first through intramurals, then as a club, and finally as a varsity sport," explained Kidd.

The women hope to become a recognized club next spring, and field a varsity team by next fall.

The women's soccer club is suffering the usual growing pains of a young squad including lack of uniforms, transportation, and the like. ("Maybe we'll soon buy similar colored T-shirts" — Mulvaney-Huseh.) However, the women's lacrosse team began in this same manner, and the Gazelles had a fine season last spring in their first year as an organized varsity team.

The club hopes to play inside this winter, but before the snows come, it will be playing a game a week. Yes today the women took on Mount Holyoke on the fields behind Boyden.

To the sports editor;

To the Editor:

Judy Van Handle's sports commentary "Violent fans deserve penalties" suggests that sports fans who display violent behavior be dealt with through full legal prosecution and by ostracism. These measures tend to deal with the problem of fan interference after the crime has been committed rather than offering solutions which would eliminate the problem before it occurs.

The severe prosecution of individual offenders is fine, but what about those who are more discreet and don't get caught? Ostracism will make a few reconsider, but will it really affect the inebriated bottle thrower during next week's game when passion is at its peak? Maybe the ego will wrestle the id's bottle from the hands of some, but I don't think this will work with all offenders.

For the sake of preventative measures I would recommend that owners of stadiums and arenas:

1) Build a retaining wall between the first rows of seats and the field or court, high enough to prevent fans from jumping out onto the field without injury. (Watching someone break a leg would perhaps make another "look twice.")

2) Use a mandatory detection device which would confiscate all glass and metal excluding items such as car keys which a fan would hesitate to throw away.

3) Make sure all containers used by concession stands be made of Styrofoam or a similar light substance in order to cut down on throwing range and speed of flight.

I think these methods of prevention would greatly reduce the possibility of a fan interrupting a game or a player being harmed. As for Judy's suggestion that players be allowed to take personal revenge by going into the stands and kicking asses; well, if I were a player, insulted and bombarded by partisan fans, I would think more than twice about jumping into a crowd of hostile people wielding only a leather glove, a football helmet, or even a hockey stick. Strength in numbers usually wins in the end.

Danny Ozark, NL Manager of Year

NEW YORK [UPI] — Danny Ozark, the low-key leader who led the Philadelphia Phillies to their first title since the 1950 whiz kids, yesterday was voted the UPI National League Manager of the Year.

The 52-year-old native of Buffalo, N.Y., who took over the Phillies in 1973, was the choice of 10 of the 26 UPI baseball correspondents from around the country who participated in the annual survey.

Bill Virdon of the Houston Astros finished second with nine votes, followed by Sparky Anderson of the two-time World Champion Cincinnati Reds with five votes and Danny Murtaugh of the Pittsburgh Pirates and Joe Frazier of the New York Mets with one each.

Ozark, whose Phillies survived racial problems, the special problem of Dick Allen and a late slump during which a 15½ game lead on Aug. 24 dwindled to three games, summed up the season with a simple statement: "We stayed with the guys who came out of spring training."

That he did is a tribute to his faith in his players because the Phillies had a rocky season and appeared likely to blow their huge one-time lead before they righted themselves and won 13 of their last 16 regular-season games. During that period, as well as during other crises, Ozark seemed to remain "above the bickering" and his tactics paid off in the end.

Close observers of the Phillies agree that Ozark's greatest accomplishment was with his pitching staff — a staff which was suspect in the spring because of the question mark status of potential big winners Steve Carlton and Jim Lonborg.

Foxboro approves Schaefer search

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — The Board of Selectmen, reacting to violence during the New England Patriots' last home game, have voted to institute personal searches for liquor and to restrict beer sales at Schaefer Stadium.

The Board approved a proposal Tuesday night to allow security personnel to ask a patron to submit to a search when entering the stadium.

It also approved a measure to abolish the sale of beer in the stands by vendors. Beer will be available at concessions in the stadium's concourse areas.

Before the change in the stadium's liquor license can become law, a public hearing on the proposal must be held. The hearing is scheduled Nov. 4.

In a related matter, police chief Daniel McCarthy resigned.

"I've had 35 years as a policeman but I can't take any more," he told the board.

Two persons attending the Oct. 18 game died, victims of heart attacks. State and local police made 49 arrests on charges of fighting and other disorderly conduct.

Field Hockey

Finale at Smith

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

Hoping to raise their record to 8-4, the UMass field hockey team will play its final away game of the season tonight at 8:00 at Smith College.

The Minutewomen now have a record of seven wins and four losses, following their 4 straight shutout victories. Plagued early in the season by a chronic "second half slump," they have made a mid-season comeback starting with their 4-0 trouncing of Worcester State on October 15. Beginning with that game, UMass has outscored their opponents, 9-0. Although they still have a tendency to play a weaker second half, the Minutewomen have been able to fall back on their strong defense, especially goalie Kathy Gipps and sweeper Gayle Hutchinson.

Coach Judith Davidson is mostly concerned about how the cold weather will affect play: "I'm not familiar with the Smith team, except I know that they usually give UMass a good game. But, the weather does concern me, especially since we'll be playing at night and it will be colder than it was for the Plymouth State game."

Asked what improvements she would like to see in the play of the Minutewomen, Davidson replied: "What I'd really like is for everyone to stay in the game for 70 minutes. If someone makes a mistake, she should get back into the game instead of letting it affect her for the rest of the game."

Following tonight's game, the Minutewomen will ready themselves for a home contest against tough Springfield College Saturday morning.

Dolphins ready for gridiron tilt vs. nicked Pats

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Chuck Fairbanks seems less concerned with the physical condition of his New England Patriots than the improving health of the Miami Dolphins.

The Dolphins, 3-4 this season, will have some key defensive players returning to the lineup Sunday at Miami when the Patriots go after their sixth win in seven games.

"We'll have our hands full with Miami," said Fairbanks Wednesday. "I know they've been having problems, particularly on defense, and that they have been forced to play defenses they're not accustomed to.

"Now they're in a better situation because much of their personnel has returned and they'll be able to play the defense that's best suited for their personnel.

Tough set tonight

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegain Staff

The women's volleyball team faces Mt. Holyoke in their second home match of the season tonight in the NOPE gymnasium. The match will start with the JV's at 7 p.m.

Mt. Holyoke, 7-1 on the year, is a perennial tough foe for the UMass spikers. However, UMass coach Diane Thompson insists Mt. Holyoke's record is deceiving.

"They haven't had a tough schedule," Thompson said. "With the exceptions of Smith and Springfield, they've only played easy schools."

UMass, 6-9, has been gaining strength as the season progresses. The spikers sweep of the tournament at UMaine-Orono last Saturday was a convincing example of their improvement.

"We have reached our peak," Thompson said. "Now it's just a matter of how long we can keep it going."

The teams late success was accredited to, among other things, the move of setter Pat McGrath and spiker Diane Mandradous from JV to varsity by Coach Thompson.

"I think those two have added a lot to the team," she said.

Despite recent wins, Thompson is concerned about the lack of enthusiasm in her players.

"Their attitudes are fairly good, but they're not putting out in practice the way they should," Thompson said. "Practices this week have not gone very well.

"They think they are in the home stretch, but we still have about 12 matches to go."

Thompson said that conditioning drills would be the cure for the spikers lackluster attitude.

JV volleyballers edged by Berkshire

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The women's JV volleyball team lost to Berkshire in three games last night despite the sparkling performance of returning Kathy Shinnick.

Shinnick, usually the team's fastest player, was in the infirmary for four days prior to last night's match because of leg problems. Although her movement was hampered, Shinnick "played very well," according to coach Diane Thompson, throughout her team's 5-15-, 15-9, 9-15 loss.

Thompson said the JV's missed Pat McGrath and Diane Mandradous, who have been moved to varsity. However, the two did travel to Berkshire last night seeing minimal action.

The JV's did not look poorly, Thompson said, "but like the varsity they suffer from a lack of confidence."

Despite their loss, the spikers were complimented for their good sportsmanship after the game by the officials.

Westfield nips UM

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

WESTFIELD —Allie Goncalves scored the game's only goal at the 30:50 mark of the final period to give Westfield State a 1-0 home soccer victory over the UMass Minutemen, in a game played under the lights last night.

Goncalves, who controls the entire Westfield attack, was throttled for most of the evening by an aggressive, hustling quintet of Minutemen fullbacks led by Eddie Niemiec.

The scoring play occurred when Goncalves reacquired possession of the ball after having had his original attempt at setting up a play disrupted. He intercepted a UMass clearing pass and drove a left-footed shot past unready goaltender Mark Hanks.

The Minutemen tried in vain for the third straight game, actually the whole season, to set up a structured offense. They had flashes of potency but never could get untracked enough to apply even a moment of pressure on Westfield netminder Kim Shea.

Joel Mascolo, who played an inspired game for UMass, had the two best scoring chances in the first half. His problem seems to be that he just doesn't have a strong enough shot to beat a sharp netminder who can play the angles.

Actually, the Minutemen don't really know how good their opposing goalies have been because they simply haven't tested them. They had only nine shots at Shea last night and none were really what you might label as testers.

As time was running out in the first half, UMass was awarded a free kick from in front of the Westfield net; but time ran out.

The only real scoring chance for the Minutemen in the second half occurred when Tony Biladeau was sent in by Andy Moore but shot wide of the Westfield net.

Goncalves was the whole story for Westfield, as the halfbacks searched for him constantly to set up the offensive pattern. If he had a chance, Goncalves would break for the net and attempt to get behind the UMass defense. In the second half Michael Parsons was switched back to defense, after starting the game at forward. He keyed heavily on Goncalves and prevented him from getting any kind of a long pass and breaking in on net.

Goncalves appeared to be listless about midway through the second half, but he caught his second wind just in time to score the only goal of the game. His game winning shot came from among a midst of players and Hanks in the goal might have been screened.

"We still have the same problem, we can't buy a goal," said a somewhat dejected UMass coach Russ Kidd. "Our defense contained Goncalves very well; I thought for sure that the game would go into overtime."

Lackluster offense restrains booters

The records of all the sports teams at UMass were printed in the Collegian this week and at the bottom of the list was the varsity soccer team.

Going into last nights game with Westfield State, the booter's record stood at 2-7. What had been an outlook of optimism with an all-veteran group, has turned into a disappointing season for coach Russ Kidd and his team.

Kidd inherited the team, which was 3-9-1 last year from Al Rufe, who wanted to devote his time to his position of UMass Financial Manager of Athletics. Last year, 16 of the teams 23 players were new to the team, but this year, most of the team had some varsity experience.

The team started out well in the early part of the pre-season, defeating Eastern Connecticut and a touring team comprised of All-Stars from the Southern England Amateur League, but faded quickly as it lost to Brown's B team, Amherst and Williams.

The team dropped its first two games of the season to Bridgeport and Maine before edging Keene State, 1-0 on Bob McChesney's penalty kick. The booter's other win was a 3-0 whitewash of Boston University, but losses to Vermont, Harvard, Rhode Island, Division II Worcester Polytechnical Institute and UConn, destroyed the season. After last night's game in Westfield, the team faces Boston College, Springfield College, New Hampshire, and Tufts.

Coach Kidd was obviously right when he called it the "biggest and toughest schedule in the 46-year history of UMass soccer."

Despite the tough schedule, Kidd was confident that his team, led by the defense, would have a respectable year. But so far, this has not been so.

Why?

Well for one, the goaltending and the defense, which has to be the mainstay of any successful soccer team, has been good, but the front line has not been consistent in scoring goals, which is what you need to win ball games.

"Our defense and our goalies are playing super, but I'm upset with our front line play," said Kidd. "It's tough on the goalies and defense when the forwards aren't scoring," he added.

The team, which has been shut out three occasions this year, has not scored more than two goals in any of its games this year.

Part of the problem, as Kidd stated, lies with the front line. Individually, they are good ballplayers, but they have not blended together, along with the defense, to mount a consistent scoring attack in any of the games this year.

I'd give my right arm for someone who can put the ball in the net," said Kidd.

Two things the team isn't lacking in is hustle and attitude. Despite constantly having to fight to get back in each game, the team has refused to roll over and play dead.

Take last Saturday's UConn game for example. According to coach Kidd, it was anybody's game for the first 72 minutes. But UConn, who is now ranked fourth in the country and first in New England after its big 3-2 overtime win against Brown, took advantage of UMass mistakes, along with converting a penalty kick, to down the Minutemen, 3-0.

"UConn's such a good team that you can't make a mistake against them or they'll take advantage of it," said Kidd.

To try and add more scoring punch to the front line, Kidd has moved co-captain Mike Parsons, whom Kidd rated as a pre-season favorite to make All-New England fullback, to the front line. Kidd has also moved Bob McChesney, who was the team's second leading scorer last year, to halfback.

Hopefully, these changes will work for the better and the team can salvage something out of its last four games.

Women's Tennis

Brandeis at NOPE

By PATTY AMERO
Collegian Staff

In their final home game of the season, the UMass women's tennis team faces Brandeis University of Waltham this afternoon.

The match, at the North Physical Education building courts at 3 p.m., was rescheduled from an earlier match that was canceled.

UMass will not be at full strength against a Brandeis team which Coach Ken Rubin said should give the netwomen "a very good match."

An injury and an illness have weakened the singles' lineup for the team. Number one singles player Jennifer Ranz is sidelined with a sprained ankle she received during a match last week, and fifth singles player Martha Awiszus, who is undefeated on the season, has the flu.

Susan Boissevain will play in the number one slot vacated by Ranz, and Caron Tsapatsaris will fill in for Awiszus.

In another change in the singles lineup, Carolyn Mooney moved from the third spot to the second. while Dawn Minaai moved down a notch to the third position. Kathy Sullivan will remain the number four singles player for the team.

The doubles ordering will remain the same as last week. Captain Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt are in the number one position, and Jeanette Flynn and Leslie Howell remain the number two pairing in doubles.

Since the competition will consist of five singles matches and two doubles, Rubin said he is hoping the singles will win at least three out of their five matches.

"Brandeis is strong on the top and weak on the bottom, and we're balanced throughout the line, so hopefully we'll pick up points at the bottom of the lineup," Rubin said.

"It definitely hurts that we lost our number one player," he said, "but we'll just have to go in with this lineup and see what happens."

"Since this is our last home match, we'd really like to win," he said.

And the candy man is everywhere constantly pushing as the Commodores sing it "Sweet Love." From the day we were hooked on baby food to the cigarettes some of us somehow still smoke, we've been riding high on the good ship lollipop.

LOLLIPOP, LOLLIPOP. O
LOLLY, LOLLY, LOLLY

"You wanna have your dessert tonight? You eat your salad now, young lady (young man).

Gues what mamma, there's "sugar in your (salad) bowl." Mayonnaise, most salad dressings, and even some of the most commonly used salt contain sugar.

SUGAR PIE, HONEY BUNCH
CAN'T HELP MYSELF
I LOVE YOU AND NOBODY ELSE
(Four Tops)

Some of us sincerely believe that we can't help ourselves. We've been junk food junkies in search of a quick high, ever since Gerber Baby Foods and company turned us on when our mothers turned us off (Lactose, milk sugar, is only 15 per cent as sweet as the sugar found in most baby foods.) Today a lot of us can't even start the day without the Candy Man having his way.

For example sugar is the main ingredient in General Mills' Breakfast Squares and all of Carnation's Instant Breakfasts. It is the second ingredient in Birdseye's Awake and Coca Cola's Bright and Early (imitation orange juice); all Hi-C "fruit" drinks (water is the main ingredient); Quakers 100 per cent Natural Cereal; Eagle Brand Milk; Carnation's Slender; Vita Crunch Granola; Pillsbury Food Sticks; Kellogg's Frosted Pop Tarts; Pet Heartland Natural Cereal; Toastems and many more.

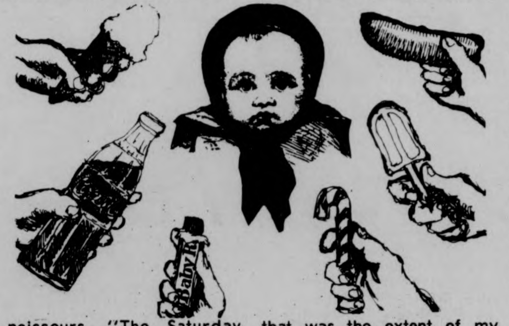
There is a "good amount" of, as Eddie Palmieri would say, "Azucar Para Ti" in all brands of packaged bacon, Birdseye's Orange Plus, Aunt Jemima and Hungry Jack pancake mixes, Zwieback Toast ("ideal for teething babies") and even such "non-sugar" cereals as All Bran, Raisin Bran, Special K, Product 19, Kellogg's Corn Flakes, Rice Krispies, Wheaties, Cheerios, Total, 40 per cent Bran Flakes, 100 per cent Bran Post Toasties, and Rice, Wheat, and Corn Chex.

It is quite clear that even those of us who are hip to the hole in the doughnut can be easily jammed very early in the morning by the invisible but ever present sugar, sucrose, dextrose, levulose, malt syrup, corn syrup or the insidious "natural sweetener." So is it hopeless? Not quite.

Perhaps the group most vulnerable to the sugar hype is children, especially on Saturday morning as a captive audience of cartoon connoisseurs. "The Saturday Morning Massacre" is not just a question of the effects of viewed violence but the violence of commercials aimed at hooking kids to Sugar Orange Crisp and company. Nevertheless, as Esther Satterfield reminds us:

LOOK, LOOK TO THE CHILDREN

Yes, especially the children of Washington D.C., who successfully fought back. Apparently, the Kellogg's company not content with their "trick or treats" on television decided to push their "junk" inside the school system.



"The cereal company, makers of Sugar Frosted Flakes and other sugar-laden breakfast treats, spent some $200,000 (dollars) last year in the Washington D.C. area to convince children to eat more breakfasts.

The Washington D.C. board of education reports that by the end of the school year, however, even fewer children were participating in the school breakfast program than before the "stick up for breakfast" campaign began.

The board reports that in October of 1975, almost 19,000 school children took part in the free breakfast programs. In November, when Kellogg's began its campaign, the number of children participating shot up to some 22,000 kids, but after that it began to decline rapidly; by last June, the figure was down to little more than 17,000 free breakfast eaters.

"Stick up for breakfast" may, in fact be a severe setback to Kellogg's image. The only cereals served in the D.C. school breakfast program are from Kellogg's and all of them are sugar coated.

As a result, at least one D.C. Board of Education member has introduced a resolution banning all pre-sweetened cereals in future school feeding programs.

The end result of Kellogg's breakfast ad campaign may not exactly be — in Tony the Tiger's words — G-R-R-Reat".

I wish I had been so cool. But I had no support. As far as anyone cares to remember there was no better Baseball Picture Card flipper than Mrs. Garden's tubby offspring. And that was the extent of my athletic prowess. Of course, I rarely ever missed a Saturday Dodger game at Ebbets Field. But my exercise was limited to pitching empty soda bottles at the umpire. And if I could hardly walk, much less run the bases, that didn't deter my eating habits because among other inducements around, sporty people at Amstar (Domino Sugar) shot right into my sugar craving veins as well as my Walter Mitty baseball fantasies.

(LNS-CPS) "You want your weary bones to have strength, energy, stamina, don't you?" asks a young woman in a baseball uniform holding up a bag of Domino sugar on your TV screen. "Well, besides plenty of sleep and exercise and all that stuff, you should have sugar. Sugar! Mmm! Bet you didn't know that. And not just any old sugar you never heard of."

Domino, she reminds us before the commercial is over, is also the "official sugar of major league baseball."

The Federal Trade Commission finally moved against that ad but the damage to many of us had already been done. Domino was not selected as the "official sugar" of the major baseball leagues because of its superior quality and nutritional value (in fact sugar contains no vitamins, minerals or proteins, only calories) but because of the cash it dropped on the leagues.

Amstar had a good head start with most of us. We could believe that ad because for one thing we've always associated sugar with sports. Have you heard of Sugar Ray Robinson, or more recently, Sugar Ray Leonard? How about "Cookie" Rojas, who can hardly start a game without a lollipop in his mouth?

But it's just not sports, it's everything. Our music, our comedy (like Sugar Dap Willie, the sugar daddy himself) and even our poetry is filled with references to sugar.

Even our sex lives can't seem to make it without sugar. When was the last time you tried to express your love without using words like Honey, Sweetheart, Sugar, Sweetie, Dulce, Candy, Sweetie Pie, Honey Bunch, etc., etc.

THERE IS SOMETHING,
THERE IS SOMETHING
WE CAN DO
WE DIDN'T COME THIS FAR
JUST TO GIVE UP
OH NO, OH NO, OH NO.
(Gil Scott Heron)

There's a lot we can do but the first step might be simply to Read the Label. In the next sugar article the Salsa-Soul Research Team will be looking at the historical, political, and economic reasons for sugar. Till, then it might not be a bad idea to simply "Kiss your Sugar Goodbye!"

LENNY
by Julian Barry
Reviewed by Donna Scott

Now for the first time in this area a stage production based on the life of Lenny Bruce, the controversial comedian, is being presented by the City Studio Theater for two weekends, Oct. 28-31 and Nov. 4-7, at 8 p.m. Tickets will be on sale at the Theater Box Office at 25 Main St., Northampton. For further information call 584-3978.

Lenny, well directed by Mark Cuddy, as his honors thesis is the two-dimensional legend brought to life through scenes built around Bruce's monologues. It is from Lenny's viewpoint that the other characters in his life function in the play. The play is the story of Bruce's early success in the fifties up to the time of his death. It revolves around his words, actions, his family relationships, his subsequent marriage and divorce from a stripper named Rusty, the birth of his daughter, the harrassment of narco squads, and his arrests for alleged obsenity. He is cast not as a saint or a sinner but as a traditional man born ahead of his time in his quest for human rights. In his obsession to do his material his way he brings destruction to himself and those close to him.

The theater and audience are transformed into a nightclub setting complete with jazz music that was so much a part of Lenny's life. The action crosses from nightclubs, hotels, his family's home, and even within Lenny's mind on stage in a continuous even flow.

Michael Rusk is Lenny Bruce reincarnated. His fluent delivery of monologue and interpretational characterization bring Lenny to life. Rusk, like Lenny, is great at impersonations. Before joining this production he has performed at The Theater Lab of Boston, The City Stage of Flint, Mich., and in repertory companies in Michigan, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Indiana where he previously played the character of Lenny Bruce.

The other cast members were selected from the Five college area and the Pioneer Valley. Linda Buckley characterizes the red-headed Rusty whose love for Lenny ultimately leads her to drugs. The club owner is Larry Jaffe and Stephan Fine plays the callous Sherman Hart who trades artistic development for money. The remaining cast play a variety of characters. Gail Brissette, Lisa Posternak, and Cynthia Carver serve as the female characters extremely well. Dand B. Westberg plays Lenny's father and D.A. And rounding out the cast Michael Roberts and Peter Sobol are Lenny's lawyer and the judge, respectively.

The Costume Designers were Gloria Martin and Gretchen Jerrold who helped design the original Broadway production. And the lighting was done by James W. Bowser. Lenny was produced by Mark Cuddy and Margaret Van Sant. The jazz music for Lenny was provided by the L.A. Schneider Quintet made up of musicians from this area.

Creon Who?

Antigone
at Mount Holyoke reviewed by
Kevin Turcotte

Antigone, the classic Greek tragedy by Sophocles, directed by Betsy Rudelich Tucker is playing from Oct. 28-31 at Mount Holyoke's Laboratory Theatre.

The play, while a competent effort, suffers in parts. The main problem was in the use of the Greek chorus. (A note on the concept of a Greek chorus: it is a stage convention that has gone the route of the pterodactyl, and its use in modern productions presents many problems. The major problem is to get an audience to accept ten actors on stage, commenting on the action as it progresses.) Much of the time at the Mount Holyoke production, I just couldn't accept it. The chorus distracted and often times fell into a sing-song litany reminiscent of monotonous hours spent in church. Which is not to say they were wholly bad; at times, brief as they were, a very real sense of the primitive emotions and raw energy inherent in the play came through in their dances with a clarity hard to communicate in words.

While Joyce E. Greene, a senior acting major at Smith is good in the title role, she is definitely in the shadow of Christopher Wells' powerful performance as the unbending Creon. Wells is a senior Theater and Music major at Amherst College. He has the power to move an audience and knows how to use it effectively.

Both Wells and Greene appeared in last year's Threepenny Opera, and Wells also played Cassius in the Amherst Masquers production last year of Julius Caesar.

In Antigone, Wells' Creon is the embodiment of state power and the restrictions it can put on an individual. The crux of the play revolves about Antigones' individual conscience and these restrictions, specifically Creon's edict forbidding — upon penalty of death — the burial of Antigones's brother.

David Wolpe is another actor worthy of note in this play; his role as Haemon, Creon's son, betrothed to Antigone, is credible and finely acted.

The setting is richly archaic and helps convey much of the atmosphere; the theatre itself is arranged like a Greek amphitheatre, and the stage floor in the center is decorated with Minoan-like Bull mosaics.

While theatre in the ¾ is novel and allows for a more intimate play, there were many times when, during important action, I could only see the back of some major character's head. I warn theatre goers now, do not sit directly behind Creon's throne, unless you are a back-of-the-head person.

So, if you're thoroughly imbedded in modern drama and you have a chance to see Antigone, then by all means you should go see a modern drama. But... if you've got an ounce of experiment in your heart and are willing to overlook a few faults, Antigone would be well worth your time.

Amherst: The School for Scandal

The School for Scandal at Amherst College
reviewed by
James F.B. Sawyer

The School for Scandal by Richard Brinsley Sheridan, a comedy of and about eighteenth century English semi-nobility, is currently being produced at the Kirby Memorial Theater, Amherst College. It makes for a wonderful evening's entertainment.

Under the direction of Walter Boughton, the Masquers have taken Sheridan's script with characters such as Lady Sneerwell (the leader of the group of gossips known as the "school"), Snake (a "professional hanger-on"), Mrs. Candour (the worst of the gossips) and Sir Benjamin Backbite (a gossip in his own right and would-be poet), and brought it to life.

As implied before, the production is an excellent one. But to single out one player over another would be to do an injustice to the outstanding job that each and every Masquer has done.

However, if forced to choose from among the nineteen players on stage at one time or another, choosing worthiness from worthiness, I would say that Marcus Olson as Sir Peter Teazle, an aging gentleman and the husband of a wife at least twenty years his junior, does the most notable job. Mind you, this is the most notable job chosen from a group of players I would like to see very much more of in future.

The sumptuous costumes in this production were designed by Jeffrey Ullman. Ullman uses bright, well-coordinated colors to dress the players, bringing life to an otherwise drab stage.

The only fault I found with the production as a whole was the definite lack of imagination on the part of Robert E. Thayer, Jr., the scenery designer. Whenever backdrops were used, their edges could be seen from the audience. Backdrops suggesting different settings did just that; they only suggested them. While this may be a comment on an interpretation of the script, such an interpretation is incongruous with the body of the performance. The backdrops did allow the characters to seemingly pass into another room during the same scene, but the sets' shoddiness of construction took away whatever more effect they could have contributed.

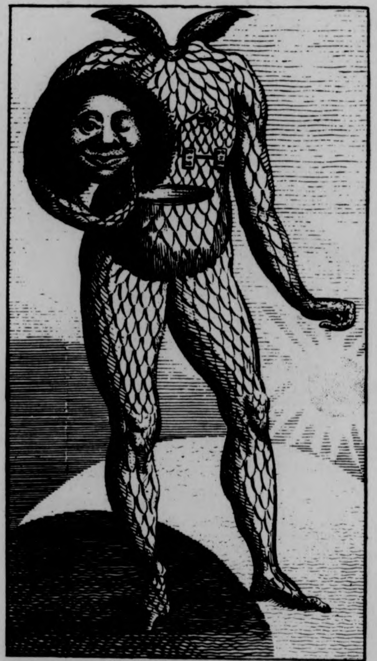
Nonetheless, the superb acting and rich costumes do more than simply make up for the poor scenery.

The School for Scandal will be performed Friday and Saturday nights at the Kirby Memorial Theater on the campus of Amherst College. This is the last weekend and seats are reserved only. Call 542-2277 for ticket information.

Halloween: Remove the mind And the head will follow

by Jim Paulin

Halloween at UMass — the time to let your hair down, and cover it with a mask, a time to undress, to take off your street clothes, to embark on a bold mission to uncover a brave new personality by covering the old one with a costume. A weekend long journey fueled by psilocybin mushrooms and pills billed as acid.



And at the dozens of masquerade parties that will occur at UMass, on campus and off, there will be dozens of people tripping, laughing giggling, body rush tingling, or standing in the corner, drinking cider, babbling trembling, scared and paranoid over what they think they see others committing in their hearts.

The whole world-is-a-stage-and-men-are-but-the-players thing seems much truer when the players have costumes on. Psychedelics are enough to give any player stage fright, even when the other players don't have costumes on, but when they do, the drug can make the costumes seem like part of the acts the players are normally playing, like "Hey, these ain't no costumes these clowns got on." In other words, a trip can be a treat or an apple with a razorblade inside.

Halloween is the "high" holy day of the religion of psychedelia. If referendum question number three (absentee voting for religious reasons) is passed, (and it probably will by a landslide) the UMass psychedelia faithful will be eligible for absentee ballots.

Like other religions, participation has declined, to — alarming proportions. Except on "high" holy days. Take the Catholic Church (or leave it.) Attendance is always the highest on Christmas and Easter (and at midnight mass on Christmas eve, the semi-annually faithful, and some of those with better attendance records have partaken of the body and blood of John Barleycorn before eating the body and blood of Jesus Christ.)

As with the religion of psychedelia, its practitioners have decided that too much devotion can interfere with everyday life. But Halloween is not everyday life!

Anyways, Halloween is supposed to be fun, not morbid. Throughout the weekend, there will be so many parties that the problem will be in getting to all of them.

Ballet from the Classic Era

AN EVENING OF CLASSICAL BALLET

by Sharon True

Despite a frigid auditorium with a brass bar across the front of the stage (thus preventing a clear view of the dancers' footwork) and sadly inadequate lighting — Smith College presented a very pleasant "evening of classical ballet" performed last Wednesday night.

The program, directed by Karen Lowell Williamson, related a few pages of dance history to the appreciative audience of Smith alumnae and dance aficionados of the dance of the mid-19th to early 20th century.

The program was divided into three parts, inclusive of "Variations from Classical Repertoire", "Pas de Quatre", and "Coppelia, Act III".

Preluding each part, Selma Jeanne Cohen, who is the visiting Five College professor of Dance History, acquainted us with some interesting tidbits of history regarding the dance that was about to be performed.

In "Variations from Classical Repertoire" ten solos from classics such as Giselle, The Sleeping Beauty, Les Sylphides, Swan Lake, and Don Quixote were performed and danced with exceptionally controlled and extended arabesques, with graceful flowing arms, and an admirable execution of several double pirouettes.

The highlight of "Variations" proved to be a Spanish-flavored solo from Dox Quixote performed by Heather Doughty to the music of Minkus.

She danced with a Spanish flair, while fluttering her fan and tossing her head, thus "showing off" her difficult steps, like a series of "pas de cheval" (step of the horse).

Heather was an engaging dancer, with a coquettish expression and playful air which made her an audience favorite.

Ms. Cohen introduced the second dance "Pas de Quatre", by describing how the dance was first conceived by Benjamin Lumley in 1845 as a publicity stunt.

He proposed that a dance be created for the four principal dancers of the day: Lucile Grahn, Carlotta Crisi, Fanny Cerrito and Marie Taglioni — no easy matter for arch-rival ballerinas and Jules Perrot, the choreographer and the husband of Carlotta Crisi!

The dance opened with a flower-like tableaux and breaking apart, the four dancers took turns dancing in the "spotlight" while the other dancers' arms would sway and flutter or beckon toward them.

Toward the middle of the piece, each dancer did a solo which emphasized her particular forte, be it entrechats, arabesques, turns or other difficult movements.

Unfortunately there were times when the dancers grimaced before or during a difficult move; however, the dance came full circle as it ended in the same tableaux with which it had begun.

The final dance was "Coppelia, Act III", choreographed by Karen Lowell Williamson after the original by A. Saint-Leon.

Ms. Cohen explained it as essentially a peasant ballet with Act III rather loosely depicting episodes in married life, and the folky style and costume of the new group of dancers easily conveyed this "peasanty" effect.

Nevertheless, the dance seemed to repeat a lot of the movement of the other dances, and consequently it began to drag toward the end.

I found the "Evening of Classical Ballet" to be insightful as well as aesthetically appealing approach which conveyed effectively some styles of ballet

Barnum's Brainchild

by PAUL R. BRADLEY

"It is an electrifying exhibition of expertise coupled with a colossal culmination of kaleidoscopic kitsch."
—Ringmaster Tim Holst on the Greatest Show on Earth.

It is billed as a living tribute to entertainment longevity, a phenomenon that is at the same time an American idiosyncrasy and of international flavor. The Ringling Brothers & Barnum and Bailey Circus has survived two World Wars, the Great Depression, and the competition of Ed Sullivan, still attracting thousands that believe it truly is the worlds greatest show.

The 105 year old brainchild of Phineas T. Barnum remains much the today in both spirit and in substance. The favorite acts — the clowns, (though they are a changing breed) and the animal trainers are rooted in circus tradition, and the endless search for new and different acts continues. Invariably there is, each year, an act touted as "never before seen in America."

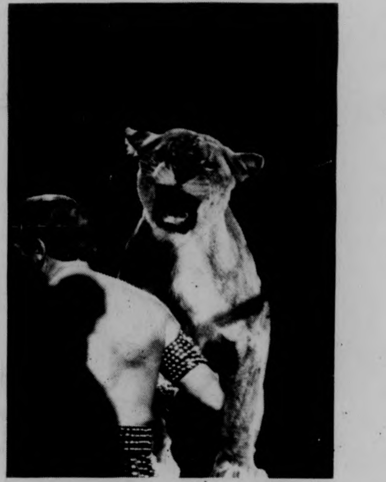
But the circus today is big business and big dollars, revitalized, and on the uphill side of a rocky road. It will by most estimates gross more than $20 million this year, a record total that will probably be surpassed next year. It was 59 year old Irvin Feld, the producer of the show, that rescued it 10 years ago as it was about to fold its tents forever.

Feld, in fact, discarded the notion of tents as an intregal part of the circus. A former musicprompter he applied new and modern techniques to the old show, moving it indoors to large arenas, and created a bevy of products that bear the Ringling Brothers name. He created Clown College, located in Venice, Flordia, that is exclusively intended for the training of clowns. The impact of clown college on the circus business has been early immeasurable: it has changed the clowning tradition from a family affair into a veritable science and it has shifted the average age of clowns in the circus from a greying 66 to a sprightly 30.

In the past days clowns were likely to be an airealist who fell or a bareback rider who broke a leg. Now young people enter the circus business intent of being clowns, receive physical training for it, and many make careers out of it. In the faced paced world of Ringling Broyhers, a clown cannot afford to age gracefully.

Through it all, however, it is still the show that attracts the crowds, that thrills children and impresses adults. The crowds still gasp as they always did, the trapeze artists still fly and yearn to become the only one in the world to do four sommersaults some 40 feet above the arena floor. The themes that the circus adopt each year are everchanging, especially because there are now two complete programs that tour the country, something like a six ring circus. The acts themselves remain somewhat static — although they seem more impressive each time around.

The show that arrived in Boston last week is of the painfully familiar bicentennial theme. It is not as pretentious or as pompous as other Bicentennial show — though inarguably, it is gawdy.



The action in the three rings is unstopping for the two and one half hour show, and the visitor often comes away with the feeling that he must have missed something. It is unlike the European circuses that visit this country, where all of the action is confined to one ring and the acts can be studied. In that sense it is optimistically American.

And it is Americans who are in charge of the circus, the executives succeeding the acrobats into the plush train quarters as the real stars of the show. But the performers are a virtual United Nations of talent; only the clowns, appropriately enough, are predominantly American. The healiners hail from all over the world, and if one star had to be named in the vast array of talent, it would be the amazing animal trainer from Germany, Gunther Gebel-Williams.

He swoops around the ring like a manic Tarzan, blond hair flying in the self created wind, in total control of the elephants and the tigers that he trains, animals that could crush him with one swipe of a paw.

Gebel-Williams is reputed to be the highest paid performer in circus history, though nobody will say precisely what he makes. It is known that his life is insured for $2 million in a highly risky business. His command of the animals is essential to both his professional success and his personal safety.

Gebel-Williams has been hailed around the world as the best animal trainer in history, and apparently Feld believed that when he bought out an entire German circus in 1970 to procure Gebel-Williams services.

Gebel-Williams feeds all of the animals he works with, and it took him three years to come up with his most famous act, when one of his tigers rides around the ring atop one of his elephants. He is infinitely proud of his craft.

"Tigers are the real kings of the jungle," he says, "and it is not important what you say to them. It is the tone and the way it is said. I call them by name, speak in a certain voice, and they know what I mean. They each have a different personality."

And the circus now has even a local flavor, with George Rollins, a four foot one 18 year old clown from Roxbury, and Duane Thorpe, a 52 year old clown from Gardner both in the show. Mostly, though, it is the internationalism and the mystique that draws the crowds, that keeps their attention. Feld will travel across the ocean six times a year into the prime land of circusdom, Eastern Europe, where all of the best acts are.

If one did not catch the circus in Boston, the never ending trek continues into Springfield during the first week of November; the circus ends Saturday morning fantasies when one realizes those up on the high wire cure real people.

The circus has found a niche in American society. It is an anchronism to be sure, seemingly hopelessly out of place in a fast paced society ever dependent on television for entertainment.

As Feld said, "where else can you take the whole family to a show??" In the end, it is everyone — not just the kids — that can truly enjoy the Greatest Show on Earth.

Nature's Ways

The Nightstalkers

by Peter Trull

As a cool mist-like rain falls on the woodlands of western Mass., one realizes that an autumn rain is like that of no other season. Unlike a spring rain which brings life to so many blossoming plants and budding leaves, this precipitation of late October seems only to ready us for a cold winter upcoming. The blazing colors of the fall foliage have peaked and except for the late Oaks, most coloration has ceased. With the wind, the rain hastens the falling of the leaves. Soon grey trees will stand solemnly through the chilling winter wind and snow. But this period of dormancy is not an end, nor is it a beginning. It is the continuance of a cycle, New England's own cycle of seasons.

Activity within the natural community does not cease with the coming of another season, changes take place to be sure, but each change seems to contribute toward the continuing survival of the creatures and plants involved.

Daylight and darkness, here again we can realize changes within the world of nature. What takes place after the grey cover of dusk sets in? The sun has set and many of us have retired to our homes to sleep till the sun rises again. In the fields and forests, rivers and beaches, a changing of the guard takes place. Soon the stillness of dusk has given way to a new born chorus. Now, as the daytime foragers seek shelter or a cozy roost, the timid nocturnal creatures awaken and keep this cycle of daylight and darkness thriving. As do the animals of the day, so do the nightstalkers play their part.

Flying silently through the night, the Great Horned Owl is the most feared and with little doubt the most powerful predator for its size. Binocular vision, adapted for night flight, and the ability to focus instantly on its prey, all add to successful hunting. This owl's hearing is so acute that a mouse running beneath leaves is immediately pounced upon, even in pitch blackness. This secretive beauty is seldom seen by human eyes.

Perhaps three most often though of creatures of the night are the Skunk, Raccoon, and the Opossum. Each of these begins feeding just after sunset and returns to shelter as daylight ensues. They are omnivorous, eating plants or animals of a great variety. Nuts, berries, eggs, frogs, mice, or garbage all taste great to this trio. It seems the best look we could get of any of these is as they lie dead along the highway, victims of human mechanization. It is unfortunate that these three have adapted so well to humans, mutually unfortunate since either may be living comfortably under our house or porch.

The Red Fox paws expertly through golden grasses until it feels or hears the frantic scurrying of its most stable diet, the field mouse. This canine prefers to feed just after dusk or just before dawn, as is the case with many nocturnal creatures.

If you are at all intrigued by a fascinating learning experience, bundle up warm and spend a few hours in a meadow under a full moon. Here you will see the other side of a pulsating cycle that never ends.

On Your Toes

The Hartford Ballet, one ot the nation's foremost ballet companies, will come to Northampton for a public performance on October 31, 8 p.m., at the Academy of Music.

A new and forceful presence in American dance, the Hartford Ballet, under the direction of former Joffrey Ballet principal Michael Uthoff, boasts an eclectic repertory of more than 16 ballets that are choreographed by the nation's finest artists in a variety of styles, from modern dance to classical ballet.

The Academy audience will see a specially selected program of four ballets created for the Hartford Ballet dancers by Mr. Uthoff, Dennis Nahat, and Lotte Goslar.

The program will include Mr. Uthoff's Aves Mirabiles which, in a breathtaking departure from the classical pas de deux, captures the exotic beauty of birds in flight. Mr. Uthoff's Tom Dula, based on the legend of Tom Dooley and set to original bluegrass music, will also be presented.

Killer Escargot ?

Blowin'
THE NOEL REDDING BAND
(RCA)

That's right. You recognize this name. Noel Redding; former bass player for the Jimi Hendrix Experience. He says it's a dubious bit of fame as he wants that to be forgotten and to be accepted as himself. But then again, he might not have had the chance to make this album, or it wouldn't have caught either of our attentions.

Redding left the Experience in 1970 to form his own band, Fat Mattress. That lasted a year, and he retired from the music business until last year, when he formed the Noel Redding Band.

This is their second album. I'm reminded of Jeff Beck's liner notes on Beck-Ola: "It's almost impossible to come with anything totally original. So we haven't ——" And neither has this band. But according to Redding, they didn't intend to. They just "wanted to play what we play best." Which is simple rock and roll. Underline simple.

Happily, in these days of over-synthesized, over-produced, and over-done excuses for progressive rock, it is very refreshing to hear someone play this way again. After all, in the beginning, wasn't simplicity the beauty of rock. When the everyday big-nosed lonely outcast on the street could pick up a guitar, bang a few mean chords, and find recognition, power, and girlfriends. (Not necessarily in that order.)

The album as a whole is very much British rock and roll, though the last and best cut, "Hold On", echoes of Detroit's Bob Seger. And many of the songs sound familiar; not ripped off, but reminiscent of good songs of the past. 'Yes, It's Alright,' 'Take it Easy,' and parts of others are in the early Bowie-Mott the Hoople genre. Wing's 'Rock Show' seems to be the inspiration for 'I'd Rather Go Blind.' The others are also fine upbeat and smiling rock. There's even a quick tribute to Hendrix on the guitar into to 'Take It Easy.' Though I don't think that little trick will provoke too many people to get a hold of this.

Which is too bad. The band is going to be 'Back on the Road Again' (the strong first number) and maybe some public exposure will generate a little fanfare.

Each time the album ends, I say to anyone around, "You know this really is a good album, surprisingly enough." Surprisingly because most albums by 'former heavies' tend to be epitaphs.

Mark Gunter

Brigati
Lost in the Wilderness
(Elektra)

Remember the Rascals? They were the Average White Band of the Sixties, and to those of us around since then, the outstanding white soul band ever. They were led by Felix Caviliere and Eddie Brigati. Caviliere has had a couple of solo albums released since the Rascals' breakup, and now Brigati has teamed up with his brother David to make a good album in the Rascals' tradition.

The music on Lost in the Wilderness is a rare find these days: R & B without disco cliches (well, except for the two formula remakes on the album, the Rascals' "Groovin' " and Sam Cooke's "You Send Me"; just skip the first song on each side and you'll be OK). It doesn't sound dated, either. The Brigatis' are good singers for this kind of music; they don't try too hard to sound black, yet are entirely appropriate. The record is by no means a masterpiece, but then the Rascals were mainly a singles band, anyway. And if there are no bonafide classics here, at least there is enough to temporarily satisfy pre-disco listeners who remember when soul music had soul.

In Your Own Back Yard

THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS PRESS

by Mark Leccese

Just as you can't judge a book by its cover, you can't judge a Press by its office.

Located in a quaint grey house on East Pleasant Street, the University of Massachusetts Press quietly goes about its business, publishing from 18 to 20 books a year, ranging in interests from scholarly literary interpretations to popular contemporary poetry.

If the University Press has a forte, it would be the poetry they publish, both translations and original works. This season they have come out with an overview of the poetry of a major American poet, Robert Francis: Collected Poems, 1936 - 1976.

In memory of Francis, the Press has created the Juniper Prize, an award granted annually for excellent in poetry. This year's recipient is David Dwyer, a man with a self-described "old-fashioned classical education", who now lives in Lemmon, South Dakota and works as a farm laborer and bartender.

Dwyer will be speaking tonight, Thursday, at the Campus Center, and is worth seeing. His latest book, published this season by the University Press, is Ariana Olisvos: Her Last Works and Days, poems in a personna of a woman on her ninety-second birthday.

To quote Ariana Olisvos David Dwyer: "These verses deal with beasts and flowers and with gods and other poets and the worm-in-the-flesh-before-it-dies."

The University of Massachusetts Press is directed by Mrs. Leone Stein, who has been the director since the Press was founded. Before becoming the Press director, she was the co-managing editor of The Massachusetts Review, and a professor of English here at the University. Mrs. Stein has a Master's degree in English and a M. ed. from UMass, of which she is "very proud."

David Dwyer

Distribution is a problem for a relatively small press. The UMass Press sells its books through several different outlets, principally libraries, scholars, and bookstores, where they reach the general reading public. The University Store has a special display section of the Press' books.

Their best-selling books, according ot Mrs. Stein, have been The Book of the American Woodcock, an ornithological book by William Sheldon, a professor here, and The Making of Antique Wind Instruments by Trevor Robinson, also a professor here.

The University Press is a national leader in Afro-American Studies publications. The third volume of the letters of W.E.B. DuBois, a major black 20th century intellectual, educator and native of Western Mass., is now almost complete and slated for publication next year.

BRIGHT MOMENTS:
ENLIGHTENED BEING:
RAHSAAN ROLAND KIRK

by Rob Chalfen

Rahsaan Roland Kirk is not only one of the most profound instrumental virtuosos in the world on wind instruments, he is not only one of the most prolific modern composers alive today, he is not only the consummate master of his own revolutionary technique of circular breathing which affords wind players the same freedom of phrase-length enjoyed by string and drums, he is not only an active protagonist of the entire evolutionary breadth of spiritually real music, but because of all of these things he has mastered matter and energy to forge a supple channel between the fount of his unlimited inspiration and the world, becoming a paragon of the transcendant incandescence of the human spirit in the current Dark Age. I shit you not.

From the moment the man assumes the stage he commands almost undivided attention. Everyone instinctively knows that here is a person devoid of artifice, which he explodes away from himself like anti-matter. He undercuts it with the funky truth, which is to say that he is a very funny cat, even when he is being sarcastic, producing the heavy—light texture peculiar to a Kirk concert.

"We ain't talkin' 'bout Ford or Nixon or any of them chumps, we talkin' 'bout PRES!" he said in the course of an illustrated introduction of the work of Lester Young.

"Do you know Lester Young?" he asked, implying that the late tenormans spirit is accessible in the here and now. Does Lester Young know the young?"

A liberated soul can broach no slavery anywhere, and although it was only stated obliquely, Rahsaan's music speaks directly to the world state of political oppression. To a whole person, all things are as much political as they are spiritual. Thus there is no division when he attacks the inept musics of mindlessness current on the national airwaves, an instrument of consciousness asphyxiation no less repressive a force than downs and overt armed fascism. "Won't someone PLEASE bring the Spirit back!!"

"People make the world go round... Go underground young man" sings his vocalist Michael Hill, a wide-eyed muscular arc of electricity.

Instruments modified to accommodate his paralyzed right arm, Kirk is still a monster instrumentalist, playing with blinding dexterity and invention. About the only thing he can't do at the moment is play more horns at once than anyone else in the world. I don't have time here to do individual justice to all the concert's tunes or his band, but his Volunteer Slavery smoked, his Bright Moments glimmered, and when Vishnu Wood and the local luminaries joined him on stage, the hall glowed. Cahill's gonna let me sleep on his floor, it's the middle of the night, so goodnight, dream bright, and let Rahsaan Roland Kirk bring the spirit back.

Bite Them Blue Lips

Elton John
Blue Moves
(MCA—Rocket)

Liking Elton John is my solitary concession to schlock music; it's as close to Top 40 as I'm gonna get. I have all of his records, and still enjoy most of them, but rarely play them anymore. Still, I felt obligated to buy his new one, despite the price (double-album, folks).

There are a lotta interesting things about Blue Moves, but few of them are extremely positive things. Let's see...for one thing, only 11 out of the 18 songs are written exclusively by the one-fortitude John-Taupin team, although they did have at least a hand in writing all but one number. But who cares about that shit? The album's cover is pseudo-French impressionistic; the title is pseudo-meaningful, but don't look at me — I don't know what it means. Guest artists include Randy and Michael Brecker, David Crosby and Graham Nash, David Sanborn, Toni Tenille (why?), one choir, and two orchestras (not simultaneously). Again, though, who cares? One more interesting thing, that I do care about, is that Earle Mankey, ex of Sparks, co-engineered a coupla tunes here. But who else would care?

Musically, Blue Moves is rather weak. It combines the raw funkiness of Rock Of The Westies with several obligatory slow songs (i.e., "Tonight," "Someone's Final Song,", "Chameleon," "Sorry Seems To Be The Hardest Word"). Personally, I think slow stuff is what ol' EJ normally does best, but a) four of them are just too much for any one album, and b) all four on Blue Moves sound like mere rehashes of "Someone Saved My Life Tonight," which was never his best to begin with. One of these ballads will invariably show its face on a 45 soon. They always do. My guess is "Sorry Seems..." Just from the title you can guess it's a direct cop from "Someone Saved...", which means Top 10 for sure. Shrewd man, that Limey.

Almost all of the band members are excellent on this record, particularly Caleb Quaye on guitar and Roger Pope on drums. But Ray Cooper has gone too far this time — 12 fucken instruments, each one more obnoxious than the last.

Funkiness is what overruns on Blue Moves. "Bite Your Lip (Get Up And Dance!)" typifies the rich vibrant texture of most of this LP, and its lyrics also represent that boogie perspective. Boogie — ptoooie! No Doobie Brothers for me.

While I'm on the subject, Bernie Taupin's lyrics get closer to Rod McKuen with each album. This probably comes from hanging around Hollywood too much. The words on Blue Moves are not as pseudo-meaningful as those on Rock Of The Westies, but they're close: "And if I shower around 3 a.m.—It's just to wash away—The trace of a love unwanted—Oh in the times I went astray." But then, Taupin always was a hack.

As I heard it, Elton broke up his band shortly after recording this album. He allegedly plans a few solo live performances in the near future, and no more LPs for a long time. Although he is still at the zenith of his popularity, and gave us a great summer tour, Elton's recent material has been definitely shoddy. Blue Moves works on the same formula as Westies did — mostly funk-rock with an occasional ballad thrown in for variety. The former works a little better since it is slightly looser and somewhat more eclectic than the latter, but then that's not saying very much.

I guess Elton John's imminent semi-retirement has come about three albums too late.

THE MANHATTAN TRANSFER
Coming Out
(Atlantic)

Coming Out, the second album by the Manhattan Transfer, takes them far from the limiting label of 'camp' and into the present. Thanks largely to the production of Richard Perry and to whoever selected the material here, Coming Out does just that. The Transfer has emerged from a gimmick act deep, a black and white nostalgic dream from the Thirties.

The stage show is probably still much the same, the two men and two women steppin high, either in perfect synch or independently. And the faces, the flashy-tacky clothes and the styles haven't altered. The vocals are still impeccibly precise and the harmonies are as fine as you'd expect. The Manhattan Transfer has made all things work by taking a thirty year jump in material, so that we find them performing Todd Rundgren's "It Wouldn't Have Made Any Difference," along with selected tunes from the two preceeding decades. "Popsicle Toes," another contemporary tune out now by writer Michael Franks, is too cute. Both his and the Transfer's version are fine once or twice but cloying after that. Resurrecting the Kingston Trio's "Scotch and Soda" is a highlight, for it is a song too fine to have been left on an album 16 years old.

Producer Perry's ever slick touch is perfect for the group and helps them into a contemporary sound. Everyone in the band is given space to grow and perform. In fact all that is missing is the sound of glasses clinking in the background as we view a dynamic performance from our front row center seats at a table in Caesar's Palace in Vegas.

Labelle
Chameleon
(Epic)

Labelle are one of that select few black artists with a substantially racially mixed audience. It seems that much of their white appeal stems from their lyrics and image, which are very different and supposedly more significant than those of most R&B artists. I personally think it's all a crock of you-know-what and prefer the down-to-earth subjects of the non-originals they do. But who needs lyrics, anyway? Labelle are one of the most compelling soul groups around these days. Lead vocalist Patti Labelle and the other members of the group put a lot of feeling into their singing, a quality that used to practically define soul music but has been on the wane in this decade. Plus, their songs have distinctive melodies and arrangements (no one-chord constant hi-hat headache music here).

Labelle's Nightbirds was a classic album, containing the smash hit "Lady Marmalade" and many other songs with less novelty appeal but equal quality. Their records since then, last year's Phoenix and the new Chameleon, have not been able to match it, but they are still superior to most disco junk. The songs on the new album are a bit too long, but that is the trend these days. And the group's new producer, David Rubinson, is no match for Allen Toussaint. Nonetheless, one of the better LP's of the year, and a must for anyone who thinks all black music sounds the same.

Loretta Haggers
Mary Kay Place
Columbia X598

Right out of Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman onto the vinyl with all of the Hollywood hoopla and support of some very fine country musicians; one might expect some 'music of social redeeming value' so often coming our ways from Mary. Well, the fact that Loretta had that horrible auto accident, and now her faithful husband has lost his potent power, she should be singing the blues rather than country. In any event, judging from this disaster it would be a flop with anything but a children's lp. Which is close to reality here.

Yes, Loretta does sing Vitamin L which many Mary Mary fans know from viewing our dream from Fernwood, but the rest of this 'live at the bowling alley' has the resonance and meter of Little Billy Joe (RIP) as he calls of the pleasures of donating to his favorite fund, his father. Here Loretta sings for her favorite fund, stardUm. As Tom might tell Mary, "Mary what the hell is thi It's nothing — or is it."

For music this lp is nothing, but for you — one half on a nation watching the tube after the late news, it is news, the release of Loretta's album, but like most news preceeding the show, it is a sad state we find civilization today.

Tom Waits
Small Change
(Asylum)

by Jack Cahill

I mean how long did you all really think that these flash fey English guitarists or the mascara leather legions of white whine punkdom would hold sway over today's bought and sold for a nickel public consciousness. Did you envision a Thousand Year Reich for Sly Stone? Sorry, not even a Thirty Years' War. Contemporary trends, as you may have noticed, are chewed up and spit out by the maw of the masses before they are even tasted. Ergo the lack of taste in modern music.

Now, here again we find the stand up comic of Desolation Alley, Tom Waits, looking even more disheveled after his fourth album. Somehow, Tom missed what went down for the last 15 years ("I was working a few jobs, you know...") and has lately surfaced to present us with a very striking, literate and subtly emotional style that has nearly all of its roots in the 50's; not the R&B and rockabilly fifties, but the subterranean, Beat Generation fifties. The man is some kind of signpost, a reincarnated reminder of a long gone hipness whose significance I am hesistant to guess at, being too afraid to end up losing it. Like an urban guerilla in the disco dynasty, Waits cooly goes about re-establishing a past musical base that attracts more and more people, giving them nostalgia they remember nothing of, but are fascinated with nonetheless.

Nighthawks at the Diner, his last and one of the year's finest, was a discursive two record excursion into the Waits world of incessant mumbling, snappy chatter, and astonishingly sly songs. Small Change is his sharpest, most affecting work so far, full of laugh songs and blue songs, sentimental ditties gangland elegies and confessions of black despair. The album hits in many places and the listener (i.e. you) will be caught up somehow, whether in the heart, the head or the funnybone.

"Tom Traubert's Blues" begins side one and Waits' nicotine sandpaper voice sounds like amplified deathbed whispers. Backed by very discreet strings, this becomes a black lament that interpolates "Waltzing Matilda" into a shattering refrain made all the more desolate by Tom's asthmatic melismatics. "Step Right Up" the cut you may have heard on the radio, is a wild, non-stop commercial rattle. "Act right now direct from wholesale avoid the middle man visit our fabulous showroom it darns your sox doubles on sax howdowedoit howdowedoit..." Waits seems to have eaten the American experience whole, able to glibly regurgitate any facet of it. This is a rhythm piece of perhaps the greatest finger-popper of our generation.

Aside from his constant studio accompanist bassist Jim Hughart, Waits is backed by old veteran Shelly Manne on drums and new veteran tenor saxophonist Lew Tabackin who collectively comprise an incredibly integrated quartet. Tom often eschews his own fluid pianowork in favor of Hughart's throbbing bass and recites—sings his semi-spontaneous poetry while Shelly and Lou pad along as light and close as thieves in the night.

Two, possibly three of side one's selections are somewhat repetitive in their approach to Tom's gritty subject matter. Side two, however, is a volley of the man's talent and on target every shot. "Invitation to the Blues" is the album's chef d'Oeuvre, a piece of harsh romance made transfixing by the drama in Waits' voice. Tom's paean to "the dirty shows" appears in "Pasties and a G String," a truly wacky recitation to Shelly's presciently tight bomp bomp a DOMP's. Lines like:

"crawlin' on her belly and shaking like jelly and I'm getting harder than Chinese algebrassieres and cheers from the compendium here..."

Many Kerouac similarities are noted in Waits, but lately he is reflecting much of the Raymond Chandler — L.A. nightmare influence, especially in the underworld of "Small Change" and "The One That Got Away." The latter is a theme in search of a detective show and Tabackin's Plas Johnson-ish tenor brings us back to "Peter Gunn." His facile stylings on "Small Change" set a perfect stage for Waits' stark and menacing reading of his gangland murder story. His total conviction and expressive control are frightening.

The density and bizarre construction of Waits' lyrics make this record, like Nighthawks, worthy of repeated listenings and appreciation; nor does the music aspect suffer in any way. There are a million stories in the Naked City. These are only eleven of them.

What Fleet

STUFF
STUFF
(Warner Brothers)

All right, who stole the vocalist? Come on now, this isn't funny. We got six of the best damn studio musicians in the country and no one to front them. These guys don't come cheap, you know. Whatayamean there is no vocalist? Just these six? Well, if that's what Warners wants, that's what Warners gets.

But seriously folks, these musicians — Cornell Dupree and Eric Gale on guitars, Gordon Edwards on bass, Steve Gadd and Christopher Parker on drums, and Richard Tee on piano and organ — are, indeed, some of the finest session men in the industry. Dupree put out a decent solo album last year, Gale's the guitarist for Mr. Magic — Grover Washington Jr., and Steve Gadd's been on more albums than I could count. But the fact remains, as good as they are, they are still session men and not leaders, and as such, their ability to make a complete album is questionable.

The album itself is a notch above mediocre. There are some pleasant guitar licks between the standard rhythm line, and Tee does some nice work on electric piano.

The songs are not so bad that you'll take them off your turntable in mid-spin, but neither are they good enough to send you searching through your collection for them. They often sound like backing tracks to old rhythm-and-blues hits, with jazz overtones. I don't mean to make the album sound that bad, because it's not. But its lack of a certain something is obvious, and prevents Stuff from being memorable, instead of merely listenable.

Amherst merchants upset; threaten to sue university

By CLIFF SKIBINSKY
Collegian Staff

Amherst merchants, upset by "unfair competition" from University businesses, are discussing the possibility of legal action against UMass aimed at reducing what they see as a threat to their livelihoods.

William Condo, executive director of the Amherst Redevelopment Authority, and organization developing plans for the Boltwood Walk complex of shops and offices to be built in Amherst Center, said that merchants working with the Redevelopment Authority are upset that UMass businesses are "subsidized by students or the state."

Although UMass has been generally beneficial to Amherst business, he said because UMass businesses pay no taxes or rent, and have a greater proximity to the student market, they have a great advantage over shops in town. This situation may prevent new businesses from coming to the Boltwood Complex, he added.

Condo also claimed that it is difficult to attract professional people such as technicians and consultants to Amherst because of the large number of UMass faculty who "moonlight" by offering their skills on the private market. He said "a large number" of local Post Office box numbers are held by UMass professors running their own consulting services. Since UMass faculty do not have to pay for office space or facilities, the private sector cannot compete in Amherst, he added.

"It's a question of whether the business of UMass should be teaching or businesses," said Condo.

The merchants may seek "legal counsel", said Condo, in order to determine ways of dealing with the situation, although he said he would prefer to see an agreement of some kink worked out between the UMass administration and the local businesses.

Susan Naegele, who owns and operates a bakery in town, said that the belief that UMass businesses have an unfair advantage is widespread among local merchants.

She said that it is one thing for the University to provide services directly connected with education, such as selling textbooks, school supplies, and UMass t-shirts, but it is "unethical," she said, for the University to compete directly with local businesses, to make a profit on the items they sell, and to sell and profit from non-educational items such as liquor, while at the same time forcing students to pay for the Campus Center.

Naegele said that unlike local entrepreneurs, UMass businesses do not have to take risks because they have a "built-in market." The University is unfairly "cashing in on the students," she added.

"Business is definitely taken away from us, it is definitely unethical, and should be stopped," Naegele said.

The University is "too powerful" and an imbalance in competition has been created, said Naegele. She said the administration should take action to rectify the situation, and that merchants should investigate ways of forcing the University to "correct the imbalance."

Adrian Wilkins who runs the Merchantile in Amherst echoed Nagele's opinions. "There's a tremendous amount of bad feeling about this; many people are very unhappy," he said.

Wilkins said that increased "outside" advertising by UMass businesses is hurting Amherst center by drawing away customers. In addition, the University is "becoming a totally autonomous city." A "tremendous proportion" of students never go off campus, he added.

"It's going to create real problems if things continue in this direction," said Wilkins.

He said the situation is "something that has to be talked about." Local people find it impossible to find out what the University's policy is and whether the town is being considered, he said.

If local business continue to be hurt by University policy, said Wilkins, "those interested in preserving the town will have to band together and fight it." He added that he hoped confrontation could be avoided.

Wilkins said that "the town and University are tightly related, but if the University decides to go its own way, then the town is going to be providing a lot of services and get nothing in return in the form of business."

Dean of Students William F. Field, director of the Campus Center, said that such attacks upon the University come from merchants who are new to the area and fail to appreciate the beneficial effects of campus businesses. "The vitality of UMass business helps the town," he said.

Revenues generated by the campus bookstore and other businesses help provide for free community events which attract people to the town, said Field. If the Election day creeps up; candidates ready push

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Disenchanted or apathetic voters may not be able to escape political persuaders this weekend as campaigns around the country move into their final stages.

President Gerald R. Ford and Jimmy Carter will invade Saturday afternoon televised football games with commercials while local candidates are expected to knock on doors seeking out undecided voters. Pollster George Gallup reported this week that interest in the political season has picked up nationwide and a record voter turnout is expected in Massachusetts.

Aggressive campaigns have been waged in Massachusetts for at least five of the nine referendum questions that will appear on the ballot Tuesday — and Secretary of State Paul Guzzi has predicted that a record number of voters will go to the polls to vote for and against them.

Locally, advocates of the bottle bill, which is question 6 on the ballot, have waged a controversial campaign and have been accused of publishing, in the Collegian, misleading advertising.

Voter interest in the presidential elections appears to be very low with a minimum of political activity for candidates in evidence. Small groups of Republicans and Democrats have appeared in the Campus Center, but the actual number of those committed to candidates is small in comparison to past election years.

A poll conducted for WMUA radio indicates overwhelming support for Democrat Jimmy Carter, and he is expected to carry Massachusetts with ease. Republicans have virtually written off the state.

Elsewhere, President Ford has saved a large portion of his campaign war chest for the drive in the final days. His advertising will contain attacks on Jimmy Carter and focus on the character of the President rather than mention specific issues.

Carter, meanwhile, also has enough money for a saturation of political advertising. Each candidate has purchased a half-hour of air time on Monday. In an election as close as this one, political pundits are stressing that they could be very important.

The latest New York Times poll, released yesterday, gives Carter enough electoral votes to win on Tuesday. There are some states that are very close, and both candidates have sounded in recent days like they are expecting to win.

Administrators, students to take up decision process

About 40 student leaders and 20 campus administrators will convene this weekend in South Lee to discuss the University's decision-making process.

Members of the undergraduate Student Senate, the Graduate Student, the Non-Traditional Student Assembly, the Collegian and other recognized student organizations will meet in round-table sessions with representatives from Whitmore and the Faculty Senate at the Oak 'N Spruce Inn.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, Grad Senate President Barbara Stack, Acting Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury, Student Senator Brian Harvey, and Terry Burke of the Faculty Senate will present their ideas on what they believe is the decision-making process in the University in a panel discussion tonight.

Woodbury is scheduled to deliver the opening address prior to the panel discussion, which, according to sources, will be "very provocative."

Woodbury scheduled the weekend retreat more than a month ago to "facilitate better communication between students and administrators."

Early tomorrow morning, the administrators and the students will break up in discussion groups facilitated by four process observers. The observers are Chris Durkin, president of Southwest Assembly, Delia Drake, Non-Traditional Student Assembly president, Paul Hamel, RSO Business Manager and William Mills, Collegian Editor-in-Chief.

In the morning discussion groups, the participants will focus on problems and issues raised by members of the Friday evening panel discussion.

Small group brainstorming sessions will be held in the afternoon to develop suggestions for resolution.

Paul Puryear, newly-appointed Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs, may deliver the closing address late Saturday afternoon.

The retreat is the first weekend between campus leaders since 1971, when the University sponsored SWAP weekends annually.

Quick landlord response result of code revision

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health must respond to a tenant's maintenance and health complaint within five days if the revision of the state housing sanitary code is passed by the Mass. Board of Health, according to the coordinator of human services for University Off-Campus Housing.

Joanne Levenson said the proposal called the Minimum Standard Fitness of Human Habitation, says that landlords must take care of health and maintenance requests within five days or else the Mass Department of Health would step in and respond in 24 hours."

Levenson said if the landlord was found "negligible in fulfilling his responsibilities" he-she would be fined not less than $10 but no more than $500 each day the violation continues.

Under the present sanitary code which was last revised in 1969, the landlord could still be fined but had a "reasonable amount of time" to reply to the tenant request.

The revision also calls for a muti-lingual inspection and health services written form for foreign speaking tenants. The Springfield Legal Service is also seeking an amendment of the revision holding the signature of public health inspectors accountable in a court of law if the tenant takes the individual landlord to court.

The entire proposal is due to be reexamined by the executive committee of the Mass. Board of Health, and is due for a final decision by Dec. 31. If this proposal is passed, the new sanitory health code would become a state law.

Recently, a hearing concerning the new revisions was held at UMass where 70 people from tenants associations, off-campus housing, legal aid societies and public health inspectors attended and expressed their views.

This proposal, for the first time, defines for tenants that in a reasonable amout of time, their maintenance and health requests will be adhered to without fear of landlord reprisals," said Levenson.

Levenson also said that it now takes, under the present system, many months to get maintenance and health requests taken care of, and it is done at the convience of the landlord.

Jill Holloway, spokesperson for the Western Mass. Legal Aid Services, called the revision a substantial winning victory for tenants against irresponsible landlords if the revision is passed.

"As it stands now, landlords have full rights as property owners to evict tenants for no reason. Many of our cases have involved landlords evicting tenants for maintenance and health complaints, and this revision will help to eliminate that," said Holloway.

"This new code, when passed, and I don't think there will be any problems in it getting approved, will stop major tenant abuse from landlords and will hopefully improve the housing conditions in this area," she said.

Levenson cited the Northampton Tenants Union complaint that in certain apartment dwellings, the house apartment locks weren't working and that there was inadequate heating.

Levenson said it took four months before the complaint reached the Board of Health, and the board won't inspect it until late November.

Chief proponent of the bill, Robert Jacques, director of Public Health for Shrewsbury, said he wasn't opposed to the five-day allowance, but he did object to the adminstrative burden the health inspectors will take on if the bill is passed.

"I am sympathetic with the testimonies of a majority of tenants, and agree that their complaints are legitimate and should be taken care of immediately. It's a sin what some people go throught," said Jacques.

"But what I am against is that the state government won't give us any more money to hire full-time health inspectors and I don't think a majority of health inspectors in every Massachusetts city and town will be able to handle this five-day limit," he said.

Jacques proposed that the state penalize and put more responsibilities on the individual landlords to do their jobs and if not, they should be strictly penalized.

The Amherst Public Health Inspector, Chet Penser, was not available for comment.

Beverly Durmakowski, manager of Brittony Manor apartments, said she and other apartment managers in the Five-College area would need more time to study the whole proposal before they could fully comment on it.

"Of course, we have some problems in handling our health and maintenance services, but on the whole, we respond to our tenants' complaints within five days," she said.

The second major revision of the housing sanitory code calls for mandatory multi-lingual inspection forms.

"This revision," said Levenson, "is a big breakthrough for foreign-speaking tenants."

Levenson referred to an example of a Western Mass. health inspector who refused to take care of "French and Spanish- speaking tenants because he couldn't communicate with them.

"This health inspector said to the tenants," I don't speak Spanish or French, so I can't help you," said Levenson.

Health inspector Jacques said he felt this revision was a very important and reasonable revision, but wondered whether the state should define which languages would be implemented in the form.

He said the revision calling for the health inspector's signature in order that the inspector be held accountable and liable for perjury is a frightening issue that must be researched before being passed.

"I think that's a lot of risk to be put on the health inspectors. That doesn't mean the inspector purges himself now, but under the revision, if the inspector makes an honest mistake, he will be criminally liable," Jacques said.

Music room petitioners to meet Bromery, Field

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

Opponents of the proposed music room-study facility relocation decided at a meeting last night to bring the matter up at Wednesday's Undergraduate Senate meeting which will be attended by Dean of Students William F. Field, and to present their petition against relocation to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

The petition, which now has 2,133 signatures, is scheduled to be presented to Bromery Thursday.

The petition is a reaction to reports that a commercial bank would replace one or both of the two rooms. According to SGA co-president Jay A. Martus, Assistant to the Dean of Students Ken Deane said there were bids by banks to obtain the music room space.

Chancellor Bromery issued a statement earlier saying that he "believed that bids made for construction of a bank in the CC had expired," but Stuart Belkin, a student senator and employe of the music room, warned that the bids could, without much difficulty, "be re-enacted."

Belkin informed the meeting that, "the administration keeps saying they're not going to close the place (music room-study facility), but early this semester when I applied for a job there, they said they couldn't give me one."

In an article in The Collegian yesterday, Bridges said that, "15,000 was spent over the summer to rewire the system now in use." This statement did not concur with one person at last night's meeting who said that he came to the music room over the summer and "didn't see any work getting done," to which Belkin added, "Even if the work was completed, to then move the music room would waste $15,000."

There was a recent occurance, according to Belkin, where one student worker at the music room received some hospitality from one of the people who was fixing the broken tapes. "The CC management is passing the buck and not approaching the problem (or replacing tapes) themselves," said Belkin. "Instead they pitted one worker against another worker. Today (yesterday) we brought back tapes they said were no longer broken, but a few of them tend to break in fifteen minutes."

Martus explained that the music library has been offered the use of The Cape Cod Lounge, but said that "Even if that happened, students have the right to have a place to study in the Campus Center too, since their money helps the CC. Students have used the music room in the past; it's obvious that it is something they want."

The deadline for petition signatures has been extended to November 9th because of "strong student support," according to Belkin. On that night there will be another general meeting at 7:30 p.m. in room 901 CC.

NEAG to rebuild finance group

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

Jim West, Northeast area director, said he wants to surface the issue of a Northeast area finance committee and to "do self-study to possibly revamp the structure and reduce the amount of people within the group," at the Northeast area government (NEAG) meeting last night.

The Northeast area finance committee has traditionally been a body composed of students and staff in the area, working with Program Support Funds (PSF). The body determines the best use of this "no string" money for the Northeast area. The committee has not yet been organized this year.

West said he would like to have a larger input of the staff members of the area on this committee, so that their needs, as well as the students, could be met by the finance committee.

NEAG president John Weisse argued that often the staff is not the best means of spending the student's funds, and that the students themselves would best know what they need from the committee. The input must be equal from both groups, he said.

"Broad participation can slow down the processes of a committee," said West. He proposed that when the committee is organized, it should be modified to provide fast and efficient service to the area residents and staff.

"I'd rather have a small group doing something instead of a large group shouting at the moon," said West.

In other action, a proposal was brought before the body to have a survey done by a professional company to determine what the area needs from the NEAG.

Efforts made by representatives to gather ideas from the area residents have been fruitless.

The proposal, drawn up by Steve Toma of Dwight House, would include employing a firm to interview area residents, compiling data, providing feedback to NEAG, and preventing bias from affectin- the process. It would also serve to advertize that NEAG does exist in the Quad, said Weisse.

It was announced that there would be a NEAG-sponsored coffee house in Hamlin House Nov. 7. It will be open to all Northeast area residents and is free of charge.

The next meeting of NEAG will be held in Dwight House Thursday at 6:15 p.m. and is open to all Northeast area residents.

Dorm has pre-election election

By ROBERT LESLIE
Collegian Staff

George Washington Tower held its first ever dorm-wide pre-election this week and some of the results may be surprising.

First, there was a 64 per cent voter turnout, a figure well above the national average projected for next Tuesday.

In the presidential race, the Democratic ticket of Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale garnered 47.9 per cent of the popular vote, easily outdistancing the Republican ticket of Gerald Ford and Robert Dole at 29.9. In somewhat of a surprise, the Independent Party, led by Eugene McCarthy, received 14 per cent. The remaining minor parties received a total of 8.2 per cent.

In the Massachusetts senatorial race, incumbent Edward M. Kennedy amassed 79.2 per cent of the popular vote. His nearest challenger, Michael Robertson, the Republican candidate, received only 8.7.

Three of the Nov. 2 referendum questions also appeared on the ballot. Question 1, the Equal Rights amendment, was favored 78.9 per cent.

In the surprise of the election, Question 5 concerning the banning of private handguns, was decided by a scant 18 votes — 166 for banning handguns and 148 against.

The controversial Bottle Bill, for establishing returnable bottles and cans, was favored by 77 per cent.

A guide to eating out on campus

For most dormitories, raising money may be a one shot event. Keg parties, coffee houses and game nights are popular fund-raising options. Four dorms on campus are making money by providing a service for profit on a full time basis.

Washington Pizza Kitchen

The Washington Pizza Kitchen, located in the 12th floor lounge of Washington Tower, opened last March employing seven people. The success of the kitchen prompted the search for seven additional work study students.

Six kinds of pizza are presently sold in two sizes. All profits go to George Washington Middle.

Steven Englander, assistant head of residence of Washington, is also manager of the kitchen.

"We sell about 225 pizzas a week and are about 55 and 60 cents cheaper than the surrounding competition. Every pizza ordered is made fresh, not frozen," he said.

Most customers come from Washington itself but frequent customers also come from nearby Cance and Patterson.

Englander said that the response has been so favorable that this semester the kitchen will be selling ice cream cones and dishes. "We hope to sell 10 flavors," he said.

The kitchen is open from 9 p.m. to midnight Sunday through Thursday, and 9 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. Friday and Saturday.

Steven Englander manages the Washington Pizza House.

John Adams Snack Bar

The John Adams Tower Snack Bar is situated in the 12th floor of the tower.

Paul N. Tosti, a junior in Mechanical Engineering, is the manager.

"The snack bar started four years ago," he said. The profits, if there are any, go to the entire dorm."

The snack bar handles an average of 80 people a day selling eight kinds of sandwiches, hot dogs, bagels, chips, cigarettes, sodas and candy.

"We are usually $30 up or down at te end of a semester. Last semester we made $600 and some odd dollars and RSO said that we had to pay $350 for insurance, but the rest we split between J.A. upper and lower," Tosti said.

The John Adams snack bar is open from 8 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. on weekdays and from 9 p.m. to 2:30 a.m. on weekends.

Sylvan Subway

"This is a good alternative to going to the Dining Commons. It's good food and it's cheap, about $1 for dinner. It's better than McDonalds," said Daniel J. Bonelli, an employe of the Subway Snack shop housed in McNamara building in Sylvan.

"When we opened three years ago, there were no tables, just a bar with barrels and all they made were sandwiches," Bonelli said.

Thirteen tables and a soft red carpet now adorn the shop, which received its original funding from the Sylvan area government. All profits go into the operation and modernization of the shop as well as salaries.

Bonelli said that the shop's biggest sellers are roast beef subs and ice cream. "We go through about 65 gallons of ice cream a week," he said.

The shop employs 25 people from Sylvan to handle the more than 150 people that enter each day.

Besides subs and ice cream the shop sells popcorn, pretzels, soda and chips as well as running nightly sub specials.

The Subway, which also services the Northeast living area, is open from noon to 1 a.m. Sunday through Thursday and from noon to 2 a.m. Friday and Saturday.

Christian group 'ambassadors for Christ'

By JIM ALVES
Collegian Staff

The Way International is a non-denominational Christian organization here at UMass that is dedicated to "saving people and bringing them to a knowledge of the truth," according to Kenneth Fonda, who runs the organization from his dorm room in Lewis.

"We're ambassadors for Christ. We spread our ideas by sharing our hearts and lives with people wherever we go. We give people the opportunity to hear God's word," said Fonda.

Fonda said the group is part of a larger organization that was founded in Ohio in 1942. The founder, Victor Wierville of the Evangelical Reform Church, was studying the Bible and came across John 10:10, where Jesus says, "I am that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." Wierville didn't see any of this abundance and reasoned that if Jesus was telling the truth there must be keys and signposts in how to manifest it. He then began researching the Bible to find these keys.

Fonda explained, "The Way International is organized in the form of a tree. The roots and trunk of the tree are in Ohio. Different states are limbs. Divided through the states are branches which are made up of twigs. Our group here at UMass is such a twig."

"Our goal," he said, "is helping people manifest that abundant life Christ promised by teaching Christ's word. If you don't know the word of God you don't know the will of God. We want to take Christianity from being a religion to being a way of life."

Fonda noted that the only way to change society and thus have "abundance" is "to change people one by one." The way to do this is for people to be "born again."

"A lot of groups can't tell you how to be born again," he said. "I can. You believe God raised Jesus from the dead and because of that you make him Lord of your life. Until one makes Jesus the Lord of his life he makes himself lord of his own life."

Fonda noted that the organization "got started with family funds, and then God pulled a lot of miracles." The group is presently maintained by individual contributions from members. There are presently seven members at the UMass campus.

The Way International and The Campus Crusade for Christ "have a basic difference in beliefs." Fonda stated, "We have basic differences. They can't accept ours and we can't accept theirs. God said 'love thy neighbor' and the most loving thing we can do is stay away from each other."

Area astronomers among the best

By BETH PERKINS
Collegian Staff

The Five College Astronomy Department is a cooperative academic program involving the University of Massachusetts and the four other colleges in the Pioneer Valley. The faculty and resources of each of these institutions is shared by all, resulting in one of the most outstanding astronomy programs in the country.

Astronomy is not new to the area. Although the five college program was not initiated until the mid 1950's, the individual colleges have been contributing to the field since the early 1800's. In 1831 Amherst College became the second college in the country to acquire astronomical instruments. The observatory at Mount Holyoke College was founded in 1881 and Smith acquired one in 1885.

During the 1950's it became obvious that a more efficient astronomy program could be conducted if each of the colleges pooled its resources. Associate Chairman of the department, Thomas Arney, explains, "Astronomy was a growing field and it seemed too bad to have four separate programs. Pooling efforts allowed for a wider program with greater diversity."

In 1965 the Five College Astronomy Program went through a substantial change. A graduate program was initiated and the center of the program shifted from Amherst College to UMass.

The graduate program is located at UMass but it utilized by all five colleges. According to Mr. Arney, "The graduate program at UMass allows members of the other colleges to participate in ongoing research, something which is necessary to teach upper level astronomy courses.

Asked about disadvantages of the program, he replied, "The only real complaint I've heard is that a lot of time must be spent riding buses. We've tried to alleviate this by offering courses that only meet twice a week."

Larry Espositio, a graduate student in the department had many positive comments, "The number of researchers in my field is greater throughout the five colleges than it would be at UMass alone. Together, the five schools have the funds to provide better speakers and equipment than they would separately."

Breslin, Buckley square off; debate urban problems

By SPENCER VIBBERT
Collegian Staff

Author-journalist Jimmy Breslin and syndicated columnist William F. Buckley squared off in a debate yesterday afternoon before a crowd of 700 at Boston State College. Press releases had claimed the debate would center on the upcoming Presidential debates but soon it became apparent the meeting would focus on what Breslin called "the huge number of poor people in cities and the white flight to the suburbs."

While Buckley, the nation's leading conservative and editor of The National Review, addressed himself to four "propositions" on the state of American civil liberties, Breslin countered with a characteristically earthy appeal based on the degeneration of neighborhood life in New York and other cities.

"I see more unemployed Blacks and more Black children growing up to be unemployed than ever before in New York," Breslin said, claiming the government should provide jobs in the inner city. Countering with arguments that government only frustrates free enterprise, Buckley exclaimed it was time to re-evaluate traditional Democratic party liberalism. "Congress is punchy from long draughts of its own rhetoric." Buckley said, "It is time to bring intellectual discredit to the high command of the Democratic party."

An audience of students and professors from the Huntington Avenue institution listened patiently while the speakers went through twenty minute opening remarks, but began to voice criticism by the time the debate reached its early conclusion. A professor from the political science department, functioning as moderator, cut off the session when an incensed student argued that the powers that be at Boston State would be "overthrown one of these days."

During the course of the afternoon Buckley and Breslin made themselves available to questioners of various opinions, ranging from Blacks accusing Buckley of "misunderstanding" the situation in South Africa, to whites questioning Breslin's judgement on what he sees as the failure of government to address the underlying racial issue from which the problems of the cities emanate.

While Buckley took exception to what he saw as the "abandonment" by the United States of "morality positions" on world freedom, Breslin contended that the U.S. couldn't solve the "problems of Rhodesia when it couldn't solve the problems of Roxbury."

For some who saw the debate as a confrontation between traditional conservative views on liberty, and traditional liberal views on government leadership, the confrontation provided little in the way of overwhelming point-scoring. But as the crowd filed out at the end of the debate it was clear to most that the exchange between the two adversaries had helped define the issues.

Unarmed debaters argue gun bill

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

Armed with facts, figures and their wit, debators Mike J. Albano of People vs. Handguns, and Fred W. Snyder of Taxpayers Against Question 5 fought it out last night on UMass student radio station WMUA.

Arguing for referendum question 5, which would ban the possession of handguns, Albano said it will "save 50 to 100 lives a year in Massachusetts," mainly by reducing "crimes of passion".

Snyder, a graduate chemistry student at UMass, said "there is no guarantee you're going to save a single life. Crimes of passion and violence will occur anyway."

Snyder said he fears the ban because it "gives government the key to your front door. It's the beginning of a police state." He explained, "It's going to take a thorough search to find all these guns, and because of computer mistakes, you could be asked to produce a gun you don't even have. You'll get a knock on the door saying, 'where is that gun you've got registered'?"

Albano, a probation officer in Westfield District Court, denied that there would be any "police officers at the door." "Nobody wants a one-year jail sentence, and keeping an unregistered handgun violates the Bartley-Fox law."

Snyder dominated the debate because most of the phoned-in questions were addressed to him. He told one caller that of the 224 murders committed in Boston in the last three years, only three involved registered handguns.

He said people need handguns to protect themselves from criminals, and that people have a right to have handguns, which cannot be taken away by the Constitution, the Supreme Court, or the State of Massachusetts.

Albano said the United States Supreme Court has ruled that the right to bear arms applies only to state militias, which "today is the National Guard."

Snyder disagreed, saying none of the Supreme Court decisions have singled out the militia. He added, "The Constitution doesn't grant the right to bear arms, it is a basic human right. And because it doesn't grant it, it can't take it away."

The ghost of Hitler and of the American revolution patriots were conjured up by both speakers as the debate heated up. Albano charged that the anti-ban "littering of Boston" when a plane dropped 125,000 leaflets, was "just like Hitler propagandizing."

Referring to Boston Mayor Kevin H. White's charges of littering the city, Snyder said, "Mayor White would have charged the Boston Tea Party with littering Boston Harbor."

"We've come a long way since the revolution," Snyder said, "although unfortunately in the wrong direction in terms of individual freedoms."

In his closing statement, Snyder said, "If you vote no on Question 5, you'll be repeating the act 200 years ago at Lexington when we stopped the British in the first attempt to take arms from the people of Massachusetts."

Snyder said another reason he opposes the referendum is that it will cost the taxpayers $300 million. "That's three times the budget of the University of Massachusetts."

Albano answered that $300 million is a gross misrepresentation. He said there will only be a token reimbursement of $5 or $10 per gun. He said there is no provision in the proposed law to reimburse handgun owners. "If they are declared illegal we don't have to reimburse," he said.

Albano said that even if handgun owners were given market value for their guns, the state would not lose $300 million. "I'm in the criminal justic system," he said. "I know the savings from reducing crime will make up for the cost of reimbursement."

One caller said his major objection to Question 5 was that it wouldn't be enforced evenly.

"Another law is one more way of discriminating against certain people," he said.

After the debate, Albano said he couldn't speak for the police, but the courts "will use discretion, not discrimination, in enforcing the law once it gets in."

Snyder agreed that another law is not needed. "There already is a law against murder, and that doesn't stop it."

Snyder said after the debate, "I lived in New York City for a long time, where they have a tough law on handguns. Only the criminals have guns."

He added that people need protection not only from criminals but possibly from the government, and this protection has to be concealable like a handgun.

"Jews in Germany were asked why they didn't resist, and they had to answer 'because the Germans had all the guns'. The French on the other hand, were able to resist because they had concealable weapons."

"This is the first move to disarm the people," he said. "You can put one soldier with a rifle in a town where there are no guns, and he'll control it."

Letter to DVP

To Ellen, and the rest of the Distinguished Visitors Program: You all brought death here to UMass Wednesday evening. Eldridge is gone but not the confusion he left with the students and the rest of the concerned people here at your service. Your play was award winning. He and you acted as successful dictators. Your hatchet man should be given an award for a winning performance, and supporting cast, you! Your Emmy winner went on so eloquently expressing freedom in this country and that the oppressed can be lesson to. The Black skin white mask kept mentioning words like freedom, and Democracy, but where was it for the oppressed students of color that you ignored before bringing your one act here. The oppressed students were just simply outnumbered by the White vote, in bringing him here. You brought an animal here because he proved he could excite normally thinking people to become animals for what they thought was their friend. This man has a history for exploiting sincere friends.

The oppressed community demands the students of concern must have something to say about who comes up here, and wastes our tax money with animal garbage that you brought here in our so-called behalf. We demand that as an act of a mistake on D.V.P.'s part that you try to heal the scars that you have created here. The oppressed people here would like for D.V.P. to bring up Robert Williams next spring as reparation which will just begin to remove the wounds. We hope that you will consider our offer. Direct action is the only way to get justice by you patriots. This would prove to the community of color that you are trying to work on your institutional racism problem that you are not totally at fault but you can also take your criticism. We are humbly awaiting your response ...

For concerned students: early in the week sometime, there will be a meeting of concerned people to deal with the mess the Distinguished Visitors Program along with their axe they left here .. Be waiting for the time and place. Be strong there is hope in numbers, and unity.

From an African drum ceremony to "Bicentennial Blues" to the crooning sensuality of "Time." There was Gill Scott-Heron, Brian Jackson and members of the Midnight Band, transcending time and space in the Student Union Ballroom on Monday night.

Gill, political poet, and musician stretched from the realm of his own struggles to include those of the people of South Africa in his recent album called "From South Carolina to South Africa."

It was an enthusiastic audience who responded to his chanting, "What's the word?" ... "Johannesburg!"

Brian Jackson displayed a mastery of the keyboards and the smooth, mellow tone of his vocals sent rushes to the crowd, who rocked, swayed and clapped their enjoyment out to the performers.

Cuts from their to-be-released album "It's Your World" were performed, notably, "Beginnings", a reaffirmation of life.

The race that has stirred up the most interest locally is the one that pits Congressman Silvio O. Conte, an 18-year veteran of Congress, against Democrat Edward McColgan of Northampton. Although Conte is said to be far ahead in the race, McColgan supporters will push right up until election day.

Conte has refused the debate challenge of McColgan, and McColgan has responded with an aggressive and attacking campaign style. The race has been waged largely through the issuance of press releases, with the incumbant maintaining a low profile. McColgan has accused him of refusing to face the voters, and has vigorously attacked Conte's record. Conte has accused McColgan of dirty politics.

McColgan is expected to be out on the campaign trail this weekend, while Conte will continue to visit friendly crowds and depend on his record to elect him to a 10th term.

State Sen. John Olver, a Democrat, is expected to defeat Walter Mitchell, the Republican candidate, in the local senate rate.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has spent in excess of $200,000 on his re-election effort this year, although he is expected to be an easy winner over political unknown Michael Robertson. Kennedy won nearly 70 per cent of the vote in the September primary, and he could exceed that total Tuesday.

Kennedy has avoided hostile anti-busing crowds in Boston, turning instead to a media effort. Robertson has had problems drawing crowds, and he has been all but abandoned by the remnants of the Republican political apparatus in the state. Robertson has sunk a large sum of his personal fortune into the effort, and he is expected to be a political factor in the future.

Both of the major senate candidates will concentrate on the urban areas of the state in the final days of the campaign, leaving Western Massachusetts to campaign workers.

Canvassers for Democratic candidates will cover the area this weekend with door-to-door campaigning and leafletting. With the exception of the McColgan race, Democrats are expected to be solid winners in the area.

The presidential candidates will campaign in person in areas that now are questionable and crucial for them. Ford is expected to concentrate in California, while Carter will move into the midwest and the Northeast.

A slew of lesser-known candidates will also appear on the ballots around the nation; Eugene McCarthy, who has a strong following at UMass is among them. Most of the other candidates are those representing a cause while not seriously expecting to be elected.

Carol Drew, a socialist, and Graham Lowry, a member of the US Labor Party, will appear on the ballot along with Kennedy and Robertson.

Across the state, the only incumbent who appears to be in trouble is Robert Drinan, who is facing stiff opposition from Arthur Mason in the fourth congressional district. All of the other candidates should breeze to victory, including Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, who is expected to be the next Speaker of the House.

businesses in the Campus Center were shut down, Amherst would become "unattractive", he said.

The Campus Center also attracts large numbers of conferences every year, said Field. He cited the recent conference of astrophysicists which he said provided revenue for business all over Amherst.

In addition, he said, the competition against local enterprises is minimal, because over one-half of the student population lives off campus.

"In the past few years the number of students living and buying on the outside has increased by 15,000 students," said Field.

"We don't offer what commercial enterprises offer; we offer what students need," said Field. He said he "didn't apologize for "offering the best collection of calculators in the area, and the best collection of books and magazines."

Field said, "We sell more beer than anybody, but Mike's (a local bar) is still doing okay; there are more restaurants in the area than ever before. The merchants should take a look at the real facts."

Field said that the University does not undersell local businesses because high revenues are needed to keep students' Campus Center fees down.

Gerald Grady, director of the UMass office of Community Relations, said the University has not violated any laws in its business operations. He did add merchants should file complaints if they believe the law is being violated.

As far as professors doing private work is concerned, Grady said it is a "nationwide problem." He said University policy allows professors to do a certain amount of outside work, and added that there is nothing illegal about the situation.

Grady said that he will meet with merchants sometime in the near future under the auspices of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce to discuss the relationship between University and Amherst commerical enterprises.

Ford promises tax relief on parade through midwest

CLEVELAND [UPI] – Pledging to make an income tax cut his "No. 1 priority next January," President Ford trooped through the midwest Thursday and spread word that the election momentum is his and will bring victory Tuesday.

Campaigning in Indiana and Ohio, where more than 32,000 turned out to cheer him in a ticker-tape and brass band parade through downtown Cincinnati, Ford accused Congress of stupidity in not passing his proposal for an additional $10 billion tax cut.

Meanwhile, the President's chief of staff, Richard Cheney, told reporters aboard Air Force One that Ford had moved from "behind to slightly ahead" in Texas, improved his position in the farm states, and cut into Carter's strength in the South. Cheney said Ford's polling showed that the race is "very, very close," particularly in the big states.

Hammering away at every stop one the need for another tax cut, Ford told business and civic leaders in Indianapolis, "I see tax cuts as the No. 1 priority in the next Ford administration." Promising to submit his tax cut proposal again in January, Ford said, "How could Congress be so stupid not to do it?"

Later, Ford rode in a motorcade through ethnic neighborhoods of Cleveland's south side where a crowd of several thousand lined the streets.

Ford, his voice hoarse from speaking throughout a long, 16-hour day, visited a Czechoslovakian community hall where he told a crowd of several hundred that the United States "will never recognize, nor acquiesce in the Soviet domination of Eastern Europe.

McColgan is challenging 18-year incumbent Silvio Conte. Of the contest, the Valley Advocate has said.

"The campaign is a classic study of what happens when a challenger tries to unseat an entrenched incumbent. Conte grinds out press releases, evades his rival, and uses 18 years of political contacts to muster an impressive list of endorsements. McColgan has issued specific position papers and is hitting Conte's voting record hard, claiming the Congressman is anti-consumer, pro-big business and serving the interests of special interest groups rather than the interests of his constituents."

Carter defends his economic policy

NEW YORK [UPI] — Jimmy Carter said yesterday his projections of economic growth and reduced unemployment under a Carter administration were realistic and would provide room for a tax cut as the benefits to the Treasury were realized.

Carter did not use the word "inevitable" as he has before in describing the hoped-for tax reduction.

But he and aides, seeking to make sure the tax cut projection is not perceived as a campaign promise, took pains to declare faith that Carter economic policies would effectively get the economy moving again and that such growth would make a tax cut possible.

Carter said that reducing unemployment and inflation to the levels of previous Democratic administrations would produce a windfall of an additional $60 billion in federal revenue, which could be returned to the people in tax cuts and new federal programs.

Carter aides later said Carter's statement was not a campaign promise but was a probability that would most likely take place "two or three years down the road."

Carter spoke to large and enthusiastic audiences in Erie, Pa., and Cleveland, Ohio, earlier in the day but was greeted by a disappointing turnout when he returned to crucial New York state.

His first stop in New York was a rally in Brooklyn's waterfront community. There he met with leaders of the Longshoremen's Union and then addressed an outdoor rally at a park-playground.

Several thousand people lined the sidewalks to watch Carter's motorcade through the neighborhood. But the park area was only about half full for his speech, with perhaps 1,000 on hand, despite the presence of Gov. Hugh L. Carey, Mayor Abraham Beame and President Paul Hall of the Seafarers Union.

Carter delivered his standard stump speech, promising to cut inflation and unemployment, and several times appealed for a large voter turnout on election day.

"This is a time to remember the importance of the last five days," he said, recalling that John Kennedy won the 1960 race by "only a few thousand votes" and that Hubert Humphrey was defeated in 1968 by a similar margin.

"I don't intend to lose," he said, urging all his supporters to "make a strong, personal effort to get your neighbors, your friends and your relatives to go to the polls and vote.

Bitterness, suspicion mark Rhodesia peace talks

GENEVA: Rhodesia's Prime Minister Ian Smith receives a whispered word of advice from a member of his delegation. (UPI Telephoto)

GENEVA, Switzerland [AP] — Leaders of Rhodesia's blacks and whites began their conference yesterday on the Africa country's future in an atmosphere of pessimism, bitterness and suspicion.

The historic meeting at the Palais des Nations brought white Prime Minister Ian Smith face to face with four nationalist leaders vying to succeed him.

Britian told the delayed opening session all five Rhodesian delegations must have the shared aim of black majority rule within two years. A welcoming address by the British chairman, Ivor Richard, was followed by a brief discussion of administrative details.

The opening meeting adjourned until Friday morning, when chief delegates are to make formal opening statements.

Delay and demonstration marked the start of the talks that came about largely through the initiative of U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and his mission through Africa last month.

Black Rhodesians were divided against other blacks, white Britons against their Rhodesian cousins.

The divisions were there for all to see in the council chamber of the headquarters of the defunct League of Nations. Guerrilla commanders with prices on their heads sought to outstare Smith and his former defense minister, Pieter van der Byl, now foreign minister.

Conference chairman Richard told reporters before the session that a major problem was the "enormous depth of suspecion between the two sides."

Aim of the talks is to arrange peaceful transition to black rules in the breakaway British colony in southern Africa where blacks outnumber the ruling whites by 6.4 million to 278,000.

Richard said the aim of the conference is majority rule within two years.

Rhodesia was a British colony in 1965 when Smith's regime declared independence unilaterally.

Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, who head the Rhodesian "Patriotic Front," jolted Richard and delayed the formal opening more than two hours with a demand that he be delegated the powers of a British Cabinet minister so as to upgrade the status of the conference.

Ford requests nuclear moratorium

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford asked the world's nuclear nations yesterday to declare a three-year moratorium on the export of reprocessing equipment that can be used to change uranium and spent atomic fuel into nuclear weapons.

In a major reversal of domestic policy, Ford also halted U.S. plans for the commercial reprocessing of spent reactor fuel to extract uranium and plutonium and turn it back into fuel. He said no such recycling will take place until international plutonium safeguards are perfected.

Ford's action left open the possibility, however, that a federal demonstration program of commercial reprocessing techniques might be carried out to show one way of stretching uranium supplies. It had no effect on federal reprocessing to produce plutonium for weapons.

Ford has been criticized by Jimmy Carter for not moving energetically enough to control the proliferation of nuclear technology and with it the ability for other nations to build atomic weapons.

Administration officials said there was no connection between the announcement of the new program, which follows two years of preparations, and the upcoming election.

The President said the world's nuclear suppliers — the United States, the Soviet Union, Canada, West Germany and France — are obliged to make sure that other nations have reliable supplies of fuel for peaceful purposes such as production of electricity. He called for stepped in U.S. fuel production.

Warning that nuclear suppliers also have a responsibility to stop atomic weapons proliferations, Ford said the United States will at the minimum cut off its nuclear cooperation with any nation that violates safeguards agreements.

Undersecretary of State Charles Robinson said the United States was encouraged by preliminary consultations with foreign governments on the new nonproliferation proposal. He said the Soviet Union had indicated its support, although no government had given a firm response.

The White House said the Energy Research and Development Administration has been ordered "to begin immediately" a multimillion dollar study, to be carried out during the proposed international moratorium, of whether effective controls can be developed to protect the environment and prevent diversion of plutonium from reprocessed fuel into illicit nuclear weapons.

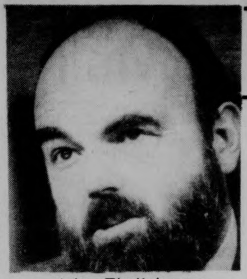
Ehrlichman to start prison sentence



John Ehrlichman

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Former Nixon White House aide John Ehrlichman, a two-time loser in federal Watergate trials, was ordered at his own request Thursday to start serving a 2½ to 8 year prison term.

The Justice Department said Ehrlichmen — first of the three major Watergate coverup defendents to enter prison — chose to surrender Thursday afternoon, well before the Monday noon deadline set by the two judges who approved his request to commence imprisonment.

Justice officials said Ehrlichman was reporting at an undisclosed hour to the minimum-security federal prison camp at Safford, Ariz., 127 miles northeast of Tuscon.

The imprisonment-by-request order had no effect on codefendants former Attorney General John Mitchell or former White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman, who remain free pending further order of the district court.

Ehrlichman's lawyers were not immediately available to explain their client's reasons for requesting imprisonment now, or to say whether he would pursue appeals to the Supreme Court.

News in Brief

Booze found on doomed ferry

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Coast Guard investigators said yesterday a nearly empty halfpint liquor bottle was recovered from the wheelhouse of a ferryboat that was rammed and capsized last week, killing 78 persons.

The discovery came just 24 hours after a coroner's report showed the captain of the ferryboat George Prince had been drinking and would have been declared legally drunk in most states when his vessel was rammed broadside by a 664-foot Norwegian tanker.

"This bottle was a half-pint bottle of Seagram's V.O. containing about one inch of liquid," said Cmdr. Peter Lauridsen, a member of the official Coast Guard Board of Inquiry.

"This piece of evidence has been transmitted to the FBI for tests to determine its content and to see if there were any fingerprints on the bottle."

British pound drops lower

LONDON [UPI] — The British pound, which has lost nearly half its value in the past five years, dropped Thursday to a new all-time low of $1.5610, its downward spiral hastened by the ruling Labor party's public feud over economic policy.

The U.S. dollar, which also is losing daily, because of the pound's woes, lost value compared to all major European currencies except the weak French franc and Italian lire.

The pound closed at $1.5700, the fourth straight record closing low this week.

The government reported fewer British workers have been out on strike this year than at any time in the past 23 years, but the new statistics showing a positive economic trend failed to turn the market around. Strikes in the first nine months of 1976 have cost about 2.5 million working day — less than half the 1975 figure.

Currency dealers said the Bank of England used its foreign-currency reserves to buy pounds in a brief attempt to stem the selling trend, but the move failed to make much impact.

Rumors earlier this week that Britain would increase its prime interest rate by 3 per cent, to 18 per cent, were "pushed aside", a London dealer for the Chase Manhattan Bank said. The speculation had bolstered the pound's price.

Campaign dollars from Korea

WASHINGTON — Korean businessman Tongsun Park boasted in December 1973 that he gave thousands of dollars in campgaign contributions to many prominent American politicians, including $500,000 to then-President Richard M. Nixon, a customs official said yesterday.

Park, a rice broker who is the key figure in a Justice Department investigation of influence-peddling in Congress by Korean agents, was carrying a list with U.S. politicians' names and figures he said represented campaign contributions when he was searched by customs agents in Anchorage, Alaska, on Dec. 8, 1973.

Park made frantic efforts to recover or tear up the list and other papers dealing with rice transactions before inspectors read them, said Donavan Working, former U.S. Customs district director for Anchorage.

Later, a phone call to customs officials in Washington determined the papers could not be confiscated, Working said.

Bombing linked to terrorists

PARIS [UPI] — A powerful bomb exploded at the headquarters of the International Police Organization Thursday in an attack apparently staged by former Spanish political prisoners to protest the visit of King Juan Carlos.

The early morning blast shattered the entrance hall and caused "very heavy" damage to several offices but no casualties, police said.

A telephone caller who said he represented "a group of Spanish ex-prisoners" told the Paris daily France Soir "Interpol must pay because of the support it gives to the Spanish government in the repression of opponents of the regime."

Despite the explosion and a protest demonstration Wednesday, Juan Carlos and his wife, Queen Sophia, went ahead with activities scheduled on the second day of their three-day visit to France.

Critics hit USSR economics

MOSCOW [UPI] — Delegates to the Soviet parliament criticized aspects of the nation's economic performance yesterday in the second of a three-day session to rubber stamp the Kremlin's latest five-year plan and next year's budget.

The Supreme Soviet met Wednesday for the first time this year and received drafts of the 1976-80 and the 1977 plans.

After Thursday's discussions, largely by rank-and-file deputies, the two chambers that make up the parliament will meet in joint session Friday to pass the plans, traditionally by a unanimous vote.

During debate in the Soviet of Nationalities chamber Thursday. Vassily I. Prokhorov, a secretary of the government labor union organization, said 12 per cent of the nation's enterprises failed to meet their economic targets during the first nine months of 1976.

Dangerous channel only hazard

EPA says Eastport, Maine ideal for refinery

BOSTON [AP] — The Environmental Protection Agency says that Eastport, Maine, is an ideal place for an oil refinery, with one major drawback: a treacherous, six-mile channel which tankers must navigate to reach the harbor.

Since 1973, the Pittston Co. of New York has been seeking approval to build the 250,000 barrel-per-day refinery. The company still needs approval for the $500 million plant from the Army Corps of Engineers, the Coast Guard, and final approval from the EPA and the Maine environmental board.

The EPA, which will make public a draft environmental impact statement on the project Friday, plans a public hearing on its report Dec. 3 at Eastport.

Wallace E. Stickney, head of the EPA team that prepared the report, says the draft statement makes no formal conclusions, but the staff has concluded that a refinery would cause few environmental problems for the area.

"It's really a pretty fair place to put a refinery," Stickney said.

"The big issue is the marine transportation issue and to what extent tankers can safely navigate the passage to Eastport and what the potential for a damaging spill is."

Access to Eastport by ship requires navigating through a generally narrow channel which has swift currents. The harbor is accessible only at high tide and the channel is often fogbound.

"As far as the refinery itself goes, what happens after you get the boat to the dock, Eastport definitely is a good place. The transit of oil back and forth through the channel is definitely worrisome," Stickney said.

The threat of potential oil spills is frequently mentioned in the draft record and in conversations with EPA officials.

Pittston would supply the refinery with super tankers carrying crude oil. The company wants federal approval to use tankers of up to 250,000 tons. The state has approval use of tankers of up to 150,000 tons.

"You've got the danger of a major spill in that channel," Stickney said. "That doesn't necessarily endanger the entire area, but certain portions would be harmed."

"A major accident would produce at least a decline in herring fishing and could wipe out clamming along the bay. A major spill could get out to sea rapidly if it occurred during an outgoing tide," Stickney said.

A large spill could mean the end of Eastport's already-declining fishing industry, the EPA said. The environment is able to recover from oil spills, but it takes many years, Stickney said.

The statement says construction of a refinery may in intself result in "suppression or even elimination" of the fishing industry "if the fishermen were to abandon their present life style and turn to the potentially more lucrative service industries which would accompany the refinery."

The refinery would permanently employ 300 people full time, 200 of them from Washington County. About 600 other jobs would be created in "support" industries accompanying the refinery, Pittston has said.

But the EPA says that may be considered a plus since "Eastport's industrial base has been steadily declining since 1900."

Unemployment in Eastport has been above average for several years although the sparsely populated county had a 5.5 per cent unemployment rate last month.

A refinery, with its accompanying $3 million annual payroll, could help bring Eastport out of its own local recession. Pittston has predicted that the 5,000 workers required to build the refinery would generate $20 million to $30 million annual payroll.

The refinery also would raise the city's property tax base from $12 million to as much as $400 million.

Divers find fatal boatwreck

WOODS HOLE, Mass. [AP] — Divers located the wreck of the Patricia Marie, a fishing boat that sank Sunday night off the outer arm of Cape Cod, taking the lives of seven men.

However, the Coast Guard said there was no immediate word whether the divers had found the bodies of the six Provincetown men still missing since the boat went down off Cape Cod.

The Coast Guard buoy tender Bittersweet planned to try to haul the sunken vessel into shallower water late Thursday.

Divers from the National Marine Fisheries Service here found the boat in 130 feet of water 3½ miles off Nauset Beach in Orleans.

The Bittersweet cruised Thursday to the area where the 65-foot dragger was believed to have sunk. There, the crew spotted an oil slick and used a depth finder to locate an underwater object. Then divers went down and identified it as the Patricia Marie, a Coast Guard spokesman said.

Provincetown selectmen and Rep. Gerry Studds, D-Mass., requested the fisheries service hunt, after the Coast Guard ended its search earlier this week.

Amtrak derailed

THOMPSONVILLE, Conn. [AP] — Service on the Amtrak rail line between Hartford and Springfield was restored shortly before noon yesterday after an early morning train derailment.

Amtrak officials said three of the nine cars of the Montrealer train ran off the track just south of the Thompsonville station about 12:25 a.m. when a part of a switching device malfunctioned. They said somehow trap rock became caught in the "spring frog" part of the switch, causing it to jam. They said this forced the wheels of one coach off the rails and it dragged two more with it.

No one was injured in the derailment and the three cars were uncoupled and the Montrealer continued on to Canada. While repairs were made passengers were bused between Hartford and Springfield or trains were routed around the bottleneck.

Who are "they"?
Big beverage interests.

They're the ones who are pouring over a million dollars — 80% of it from out-of-state — into this underhanded advertising blitz calculated to confuse and frighten the voters of Massachusetts. Their arguments are built on devious innuendoes, dangerous misrepresentations, and outright lies. It's time somebody told the truth.

"EPA calls bottle ad 'false and misleading'."

That's the US Environmental Protection Agency's condemnation in an October 5 Boston Globe headline. At the same time, Boston Herald columnist Dave O'Brian accused those behind the media barrage of "blatant and self-serving manipulation of statistics."

Unfortunately, many voters have already been exposed to these million-dollar lies. The people of Massachusetts need the Bottle Bill. And they need the facts.

Let's set the record straight.

Fact: The Bottle Bill will save you money.

The beverage industry likes to say, "if the Bottle Bill passes, it could cost your family over $100 a year". How they arrived at that figure is a study in deceptive manipulation, and the EPA has denounced the claim as "totally false and very misleading."

The fact is, the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston reports that the Bottle Bill won't cost you a nickel. In fact, it should save you money as soon as the transition to re-usables is made. The Federal Reserve also predicts that the bill could create as many as 1380 new jobs in Massachusetts.

Fact: The Bottle Bill will cut litter.

Their ads suggest that the Bottle Bill will result in people who don't litter paying the cost of people who do. We already do just that. Cleaning up litter here in Massachusetts now costs taxpayers over $5,000,000 a year.

Their ads say the Bottle Bill "hasn't been a smashing success in the two states where it was adopted." The fact is, since the bills were enacted, bottle-can litter is down 83% in Oregon and 76% in Vermont.

And the Massachusetts bill also prohibits the dangerous pop-tops that litter our streets, parks and beaches. The beverage industry isn't talking about that, but you can bet it's another good reason they'd like to kill the bill.

We're not naive. We know some people will continue to litter even after the Bottle Bill is enacted. But when those bottles and cans are worth nickels and dimes, they won't be lying around very long. Enterprising children will be out cleaning up. And their services don't cost you a nickel.

Fact: The bottle bill applies to beer and soft drinks and bottled mineral water. Period.

The anti-Bottle Bill ads would have you believe there's a deposit required on everything from fruit juice cans to mayonnaise jars.

Not true.

You pay only a 5¢ deposit on beer and soft drink containers under a quart and 10¢ on those a quart and over. You get your entire deposit back when you return the container (dented cans are acceptable), and the container goes back to be reused. The way things are now, you're paying twice as much for a throw-away can as for the beer it contains!

You can't afford to be taken in.

And unfortunately, we can't afford to run a million-dollar ad campaign.

So please: after you've read this ad, pass it along. Talk to your friends and neighbors to help us spread the truth. And fight the lies that the out-of-state business interests are employing to swing the vote.

But who do they think they're fooling?
After all, this is Massachusetts.

Why a flat electric rate makes sense

Most tenants, homeowners, small businesses, churches, and most cities and towns are now charged extra-high electric rates to subsidize the extra-low rates of the biggest (and often the most wasteful) users of electricity.

Referendum Question 7 on the Massachusett's ballot is a proposal which requires all electric companies to charge a uniform rate of all customers. The only exceptions are clauses permitting reduced rates for all-electric homes, for kilowatt hours sold under a "Lifeline", and for off-peak consumption (i.e., power used when demand is low).

Massachusetts Fair Share, a statewide citizen's and consumer advocate group, sparked the movement to get Question 7 on the ballot.

Most residential users would save 15-25 percent on their rates if they only had to pay for themselves instead of having to pick up part of the tab for the John Hancock Towers of Massachusetts.

Small business, like food co-ops and neighborhood stores would save even more on their rates. This explains why small business managers are so enthusiastic about Fair Share Rates — and small businesses employ 20 per cent of the state's work force.

Even the big businesses which use a lot of electricity and would have to pay a higher rate per kilowatt-hour under flat rates would find that they could blunt the impact of that increase a lot if they just bothered to conserve the way other consumers have had to for years.

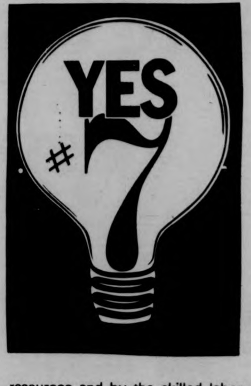
Instead, the big businesses have launched a big campaign to defeat Question 7 — supported by big contributions and big misrepresentations of the truth about flat rates.

The threats made by industry of "job loss" are the same kind of business bluff we have faced over tax reform, environmental action and insurance rate reform.

The same econometric model that predicts "job losses" from flat rates says that the fuel adjustment should have cost Massachusetts 150,000 jobs. That, of course, has not happened.

The model's "prediction" about flat rates is equally off-base; in fact Ralph Nader said in Boston three weeks ago that it is "nonsense": "a statistical fabrication of the worst order, from any intellectually sound viewpoint." Nader went on to say: "If big business and office buildings have to pay their fairer share of electric rates, not only will small businesses be relieved of having to pay their unfair share, but there will be a more efficient use of energy by industry and commerce, leading to the more efficient production of goods and services, and leading to an enhanced competitive position for industry vis-a-vis the rest of the country."

Firms which are located here are not attracted by our utility rates; we face the second highest rates in the nation. Companies are drawn here by the markets, our scientific resources and by the skilled labor force. Marginally higher costs of electricity, a tiny fraction of production expenses, are not apt to outweigh these other attractions.



Nobel-Prize winning economist Kenneth Arrow estimates that flat rates will lower electric costs to big business in the years ahead by encouraging conservation.

By providing cheap electricity to big business, the utilities drive up demand. Then they get to build expensive new plants. And it is the residential customers, using the least power and getting charged the highest rates, who has to pay for them. The Governor's Energy Policy Office estimates that because of new plants the price of electricity will double in five years without the price of oil going up one penny.

What big business doesn't want to see is people succeeding in reforming electricity rates through the referendum process, the kind of direct democracy they cannot manipulate. What big business cares about is keeping their special discounts.

What consumer advocate Ralph Nader and the thousands of people in Massachusetts who helped get Question 7 on the ballot want to see is a fair deal in electric rates for everyone.

So stop the giveaways to big business and they will start to conserve. The demand for new plants will decrease. And residential bills will go down and stay down.

Vote "Yes" for Question 7.

Examine the true issues

To the Editor:

Arguments concerning a possible ban on hand guns appear emotional and superficial; the true issues are not being examined.

What happens after handguns have been taken from the citizens? Is it not conceivable that rifles and shot guns would be confiscated next? Then who has the guns? The police, military, CIA, FBI and similar agencies, organizations which have already betrayed our trust.

Hitler took similar action on the German people; but that couldn't happen here, right? Only the semantics and immediate circumstances are different. Need I remind you of Kent State, the '68 Democratic convention in Chicago, or the murder of civil rights workers? Then tell me the wrong people could never get into such positions of power. Watergate to you!

The handgun issue is a scapegoat for inadequate legislation, poor law enforcement, and a growing crime rate.

Amendment II of the Bill of Rights states that we have the right to keep and bear arms. The issue is not necessarily of owning handguns, but of inalienable rights. If we destroy one right, we make the Constitution vulnerable, therefore threatening other rights. The Constitution may be only an intangible ideal, but we must still protect it for it's the corner stone of our country.

Though I oppose handguns, I would never vote in favor of having them taken from the general population. What we need is more efficient and consistent law enforcement, along with improved laws.

I hope that people think in realistic, historical terms; and remind them to vote, it is one's right and obligation.

Power in ourselves

To the Editor:

Why the ERA? I was very disappointed that in the pro-con arguments presented in this paper a few weeks ago, the author failed to point out real reasons for voting against the ERA. I'm tired of silly arguments about unisex restrooms and the collapse of the family unit. I'm also tired of people assuming that if you're for women's rights, you're for the ERA. The two are not synonymous. I'm for women's rights and I believe that the ERA is the last thing we need.

No one can tell you what the ERA will accomplish, because no one knows. What do the words mean? In actuality it doesn't matter what you think it means, or what it should do. Once the ERA is in, you no longer have anything to say about it. It is then at the mercy of the judges, almost all of whom are male, and not even elected officials at that. In fact, we are saying to these men, "Yes, you do have the power to give us our rights. You hold the key to our equality." But they do not. The power is in ourselves.

We have no need of this symbol, which is really all it turns out to be. We have laws now that cover most of what the ERA is supposed to do. Why do we need the ERA? The advocates tell me things will get done faster, cases of discrimination will be brought before the courts in less time because it will be breaking a Constitutional Amendment. But who is judging? Who has the right to interpret the ERA as he sees fit? I'm sure that when the 14th Amendment was passed, none of those involved ever dreamed it meant forced busing. Regardless of your views, concerning busing, the fact ramains that the decision was made by an appointed, and not an elected, official.

No one knows what you'll be getting if the ERA passes. You may get more than you bargained for. So think about it. The power is in our hands, slow but sure. Let's keep it there.

Opportunity for input

To the Editor:

Although one of the major election issues at the national level seems to be voter apathy, it is difficult to imagine voters being indifferent to the Massachusetts election. In perhaps an unprecedented opportunity for citizen input, we are confronted with ballot "questions" which are certainly more interesting, and probably more profound, than the choice of Ford or Carter.

What could be more clear-cut than the choices we face — repressions versus civil rights [the ERA, No.1], progressive versus regressive taxation [the graduated income tax, No. 2], more or less family violence [the handgun ban, No. 5a], and beauty versus waste [the bottle bill, No. 6]. Ford and Carter are constrained as to how much they can spend. Not so in Massachusetts. Nothing has prevented various interest groups and corporations from lavishing millions of dollars on defeating the handgun ban, the bottle bill, the public power question [No. 4], and uniform electric rates [No. 7].

In the Ford and Carter election the citizens never get the chance to compare their views on specific issues with those of the elected officials. The Massachusetts voter however will find out who his legislator has been representing, since the handgun ban, the bottle bill, the public power authority, and uniform electric rates have all been recently defeated by our House of Representatives! A resounding yes on Questions 4, 5a, 6, and 7 will make it clear that we want the legislators to listen to us, and not the special and corporate interests.

'The U.S. is the... freest... on the planet earth'

(UMass, Oct. 27, 1976)

lisa melilli

Welcome to the real world

Hair greyed at the temples, fringes of despair in lines about his eyes, he talks in a controlled manner. He's lost weight, one can tell watching him sitting there in his chair in a tan suit, muted flower shirt. And the 41-year-old Eldridge Cleaver talks with his hands and a patient voice carefully selecting his words. He's a dreamer who has finally found the real world. His courage shows he's glad to be where he is, despite the angry voices opposing him. Welcome to the real world, Eldridge Cleaver.

I think you are sincere, Mr. Cleaver, but I still have my doubts. I can't help thinking that you're only throwing out words, meaningless to you, empty rhetoric. For you see, a lot of people at UMass are dreaming as you had, Mr. Cleaver. And they, too, need to see the real world.

Clinging to the tenets of Marxism-Leninism, Cleaver during a self-imposed exile, visited Cuba, Algeria, North Korea, and other eastern European countries. And there Cleaver said he found the same racism, the same oppression.

"I found dumb whites holding leadership roles. Now I asked myself, couldn't intelligent blacks hold those positions? And the answers I heard were very familiar. They just aren't ready, they said. I didn't accept those excuses then as I had before or now."

And Cleaver said those countries were more oppressive than the United States. "As I traveled, as I saw, I compared it all to the United States. And I concluded: the United States is the most advanced country for freedom on the Planet Earth."

Okay fine, Mr. Cleaver. But why this change? I can't help but think you're here for gains — monetary or another chance to be a star of the times. A star has to change their act as the times change. Perhaps that's what you're doing. What happened to the old Eldridge Cleaver?

Cleaver points to a religious experience as the one thing which enabled him to come back and face charges from a 1968 shoot-out in Oakland, California. I'll tell you, what Cleaver went through was not some shallow "back to God" show, but a philosophical development.

"I started questioning the whole Marxist-Leninist philosophy," Cleaver said at the Wednesday press conference. "I began to see that the philosophy doesn't hold true." Cleaver said that those who preached this philosophy and built up a political system embodying that philosophy, were not meeting up to it at all. People weren't free, people weren't equal. People were oppressed. He said that countries instituted a socialist economy in place of capitalism which was just as oppressive if not more than capitalism.

"Also, Marxism doesn't recognize the existence of a soul.

"I began to realize that there is an order to this nature beyond ourselves. My wife gave birth to children. I began to look more and more at nature. It was just a change that took place in me because of where I was at that time." (Yes, Freud says that given the combination of elements, any person can change — totally.)

"I was at the lowest ebb then. I could see it tearing me, tearing at my wife, Kathleen, and I could see what it would do to my children. And I came back to the United States. This helped me come back. It was the only thing behind me coming back, cuz you see, no way does this cat want to go to jail.

"Yes, there are bad things in this country," says Cleaver. "But yes, we've got the best here."

"My generation was fast with complaints, slow with answers," said Cleaver. Yes, that's right. It's easy to be a dreamer. It's easy to say what ought not be done. It's hard to say how to make things become right.

Cleaver was once a gun-toting revolutionary. But he's seen the utopian world. He's been to the places they've only dreamed about. And he's found they're really worse. (Perhaps this is why the radical community here opposed Cleaver's coming. They're afraid to listen; they're afraid he'll bust their dream world.

It's hard to hold onto ideologies, because they are not the way things can really be. The product produced from working toward these ideologies are imperfect copies of these dreams, leaving many dissatisifed.

And what do you do when you finally reach that real world? Yes, it's hard Mr. Cleaver to come up with answers. And that's one problem I have accepting your metamorphasis. You haven't any real answers. You've called for "looking beyond" — looking beyond what, Mr. Cleaver, and to what?

"Welcome to the real world, Mr. Cleaver," I said to him.

"Yeh, the real world, alright," he answered sarcastically stepping down from the roster where he was barraged by angry students, violent cries questioning his being, reminding him of his past, questioning his motives.

And I really don't wonder anymore. Because why Mr. Cleaver, why else would you go through this hell? Why else unless you are sincere, speaking from your heart.

Welcome, Mr. Cleaver, to the real world.

Thank you, Mr. Cleaver

For the benefit of readers, the following will be an elaboration on a comment I had the privilege to make publicly to Eldridge Cleaver Wednesday evening when he addressed the University community.

Mr. Cleaver has been the object of much scorn from the radical community here because of his turn away from radicalism. I remember back in the 60's when Mr. Cleaver was the darling of the radical chic. They rationalized his previous crimes of larceny, drug use, and rape by claiming these crimes were not his fault, since he was an oppressed victim of the (Capitalist) system. His crimes were the system's fault, for a humane system would never have robbed him of the dignity necessary to prevent undignified actions. Well, Mr. Cleaver went to Cuba, Algeria, Africa, and most of the Communist states, and found that oppression and national self-interest exist in any system of any ideology, including Marxist-Leninism.

Most importantly, he found that people the world over basically want freedom and democracy, and that it exists in America to a greater extent than anywhere else. This is the message he came here to deliver.

Knowing in advance that this is what he came here to say, the radicals reappraised not only his present motives, but also the motives dating back to his criminal career. Now, instead of being an oppressed victim, he was, and is, a "hustler" (of blacks, whites, and Panthers), a "sicky", and a sell-out. But his crimes and reasons for committing them are not any different now than they were. The only thing that's different is the radicals' perception of his philosophy.

The trouble with radicals is that they are morally convinced that radicalism and Marxist-Leninism is good, noble, and pure. Seeing only black and white (no ethnic inference intended), they are so convinced from their views is wrong. Therefore,when Mr. Cleaver was a radical, he was good and noble, like the noble savage. Now that he has changed, he cannot any longer be good, and moreover could never have been. From their point of view, he deserves all the villification, abuse, obscenity, and bad manners he got. It's too bad the local radicals are so simplistic and just plain dumb. They give deserving causes for social activism a bad name just by associating themselves with these causes. None of them have been where Mr. Cleaver has been. They could have learned something if they hadn't been so predisposed not to listen to him. Personally, I felt a lot of ugliness and hatred in Mr. Cleaver's crowd.

Some complained that he really wasn't saying anything. If he is for reform, where is his plan, they asked. He didn't tell us how to bring about reform. Did they want a blueprint for utopia? Did they want a cookbook formula to usher in the Messianic Age? Did they want to be spoon-fed?

He told them the way to bring change is to organize and get involved, which wasn't what the audience wanted to hear. But what other way insures that a revolution won't be worse than the problem it abolishes?

Mr. Cleaver, I learned something. I learned it is possible and even essential that a person continually changes and grows. I learned that being doctrinaire and rigid is as possible and pernicious for a right winger as it is for a radical, and even though I remain conservative, I will try to be more flexible than perhaps I hitherto have been in some instances. I apologize for the hopefully gross over simplification that your audience didn't listen and learn from you. I hope they did.

Integrity and sincerity

To the Editor:

We would like to congratulate Mr. Eldridge Cleaver on his courage in speaking to a hostile audience on a controversial topic. After listening to him speak, we believe that, whether he be right or wrong, he is a man of integrity and sincerity.

The nature of the questions directed to Mr. Cleaver after his remarks indicated two things. The content of the questions and the attitude with which they were delivered showed that many of the questioners went to the presentation with a closed mind. Also, many of the questions had the obvious intent of humiliating the speaker and-or of grandstanding to the audience.

The questions also showed a misinterpretation of Mr. Cleaver's main point, which was that although the US system has many flaws it is the best in the world. Some attacked him as if he had defended completely the US political system and American society. His statement that the US is the freest country meant only that and it did not mean that all freedoms of all people are guaranteed all of the time.

Attempts were made prior to Mr. Cleavers appearance to prevent him from speaking. We regret that in a university whose purpose is to educate by exposing students to alternative opinions and experiences that narrowmindedness and attempted censorship occurred.

Shoot-out at SUB

To the Editor:

Did everyone choose sides in the shoot-out at the ballroom Wednesday night? The "establishment" of the university, those who choose between Ford and Carter, Republican and Democrat, change or revolution? Or did we align with the underdog dime store radical, who votes for McCarthy or 'other'? I expected to add much needed polish to my "Eldridge Cleaver's a sellout" rap, but no one was passing it out. Cleaver's statement that the United States is the "freest country in the world" had been attacked in the Collegian by Ms. Tzake and Joe Weissman, it was attacked Wednesday night and it'll be attacked forever, but it's never been refuted. Somebody proposed England....

Very simply, if you've never been to Cuba, North Korea, Soviet Union, North Vietnam, or Algeria, shut up. Go get yourself an education. Those of you who have been there to see it, and feel it,for yourselves, take the mike. Whites don't know what it's like to be Black, American Blacks don't know what it's like to be African, men don't know what it's like to be women. Try not to be irrationally altruistic over a fantasy.

Racism, sexism, caste, denial of personal liberties... oppression pollutes the entire globe. Eldridge Cleaver doesn't espouse oppression nor maintaining the status quo. He maintains that we peacefully change the system from within by raising public consciousness, saying what the campus 'silent majority' hasn't been saying for years. After spending the better part of the last fifteen years in prisons and exile, Brother Cleaver has changed his mind.

This is the goal of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act of 1972. Section 208 of the act requires that all areas of each state be brought under comprehensive management plans to clean up polluted waters and to prevent further pollution from occuring. These "208" plans must be developed with full public participation.

Tomorrow's workshop from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., will include talks by state, federal and local planning officials and discussions of how to go about meeting the planning process required by Section 208. The public is invited to participate.

The Massachusetts Department of Environmental Quality Engineering is overseeing the planning process for the Connecticut River Basin (Central and Western Mass.). The Environmental Protection Agency has given a grant to the League of Women Voters Education Fund to sponsor 208 Task Forces to help in the planning process through March 1977.

The artrological weather for the day is a secret. Mercury, the planet of thought and communication, went into the sign of Scorpio at midnite. And if you don't know yet what Scorpio is all about, it's meaning will keep hiding from you. The Sun, symbolizing our spiritual progress around the cycle of life, moved into Scorpio a week ago, Mars, the boy-ish god-of-war, moved into Secretland two weeks ago. Uranus, the planet of truth and humanity moved into the wet mucklands' sign two years ago and will spend five more years like Frodo in Mordor, searching for a path that will lead to a return of The Ring. But unlike Frodo, Uranian nature tends towards breaking-out, kicking free, or exploding the barriers which block the path. Uranus moves on sudden hunches or fast breaks. Over the next few weeks, as the Sun, Mercury, and Mars move thru Scorpio (lining up with Uranus along the way) we may feel like keeping our mouths shut out of fear or confusion, lost in the swamps of our hopes and dreams but suddenly find ourselves breaking free.

We may try to feel things out emotionally (in the scorpionic waters); we may go thru intense inner changes; we may struggle with our secret desires and greed; and we may secretly feel that our partner isn't giving us what we deserve. But nature abhors a secret like a vacuum and Scorpio is a great place to pack in the emotional BS until it gets too mucky then-BBBLLLOOOHHHey — it all explodes in a reflex-arc sting.

Luckily, the weekend's sky contains several mellow aspects with Venus, the love planet, so the Big Sting chance of emotional precipitation is lowered a bit. Also, because Uranus releases tension thru "truth" we can transcend blow-outs if we concentrate on what's real and make honest attempts to communicate. Otherwise, Uranian energy may blast thru a blue lightening flash bringing sudden emotional changes. This Uranian wave peaks toward 2:47 PM Saturday as the Sun lines up with Uranus.

But whether it's a big blow-out or a quiet realization of deep emotional truth, the waves of time will smooth out towards evening Saturday as Venus, sister of love, lines up with Neptune, mother of compassion. Venus will also form an harmonious angle with Pluto, ruler of Scorpio, towards 10 p.m. Both events together will offer opportunity for love to be reborn, trance-end-ent-ally.

Between now and then, the Moon makes ten connections with other planets as she moves thru Aquarius, searching for that sign's message of truth-in-humanity. Most significantly, she lines up in the same degree south of the equator as the Sun and Uranus between 4:30 and 5:30 p.m. today. Then between 6 and 7:30, she forms a 90 degree (harsh) angle, measured along the Zodiac, with the same two bodies. The earlier connection will give us the clear opportunity to honestly feel what's going down and see our true purpose in the situation. The later waves may swamp our boat with emotional tensions — unless we share it all with honesty.

Saturday night will feel loving, as described above, and Sunday morning could flow smoothly if nobody gets selfish. The afternoon could be mellow with points of subtle insights into problems around 4:35 and 11:38 p.m.

O'Brien has finally decided on his squad of seven harriers for the race. Top NE place winner Lafreniere will lead the Minutewomen's efforts. "Julie has looked exceptionally good over the past three weeks of the season," said O'Brien. "Her performance in the NE meet speaks for itself. She's the kind of runner with the basic ½-miler or miler's speed who could benefit by the course. She knows she's got room for improvement, and she's going in with a lot of enthusiasm."

Maggie Crowley is still troubled by some arches and knees, but this won't slow her down, according to O'Brien. "Maggie is probably one of the toughest competitors on the team," he said.

Sue Swartz should continue with her strong, steady races. "She's a steady influence," said O'Brien. "No matter if it's a big field, small field, hilly course or flat course, she gives you an exceptionally steady race, and she runs her best races in the biggest meets."

Johara Chapman is presently taking medication for an ear infection and alternately feels well and ill. Her condition shouldn't affect her performance too much, according to O'Brien. "She has enough experience, certainly a good degree of physical conditioning and is a strong enough competitor that when the gun goes off she'll run a hard race which since she's got experience and good conditioning will be a good race."

Jane Welzel is still being somewhat bothered by what O'Brien suspects is a pinched nerve in her back. This bothers her mainly on extreme downhill sections, so this course, which is flat, should help since the terrain is not so extreme.

"She's on an upward climb," said O'Brien of Anne Bradshaw. "As long as successive meet experiences are positive, the chances are that the next one will be positive, and she's coming off a string of two great races."

Debbie Farmer has been running for a week without having her ankle taped, and she is running without much pain in it. She ran her best race of the year in the NE meet, and is rapidly getting back to where she was before her injury.

Tim Robinson - Vermont Garry Grossins - UNH, and Peter Brigham from Maine to challenge.

Almost a year ago Saturday, UMass captured its sixth straight Yankee Conference title with a team score of 28. UMass' next competitors were Vermont with 71 and UConn with 80.

The meet, run on the rugged UMass Apple Orchard course, was won by UConn's Clark with a record breaking time of 24:46. Clark had to fight off a valiant effort by UMass' John McGrail as McGrail held first place till the final ten yards of the race. McGrail finished in second place with a time of 24:47.

The McGrail-Clark race was a vintage cross country classic. For the whole race, McGrail held about a ten yard lead on Clark. At 150 yards before the finish line, Clark started his "kick" and outlegged McGrail to the finish line.

This race will mark the debut of sophomore Mike Quinn in a championship race. Quinn, so far this year has won three out of four cross country dual meets, and is expected along with McGrail Clark, and UMass' Frank Carroll to challenge for the top spot.

The meet will also mark the return of UMass to the "infamous" Franklin Park course where the top ten runners in the UMass-Providence-Harvard tri meet took a wrong turn due to an inexperience Harvard spotter.

"This meet," said O'Brien, "should be back to normal. Boston University is hosting this meet and all the teams have run here before, so everybody should know the course."

Such statistics are unwelcome news for the Minutemen, who have depended on the running game thus far, running 80 per cent of the time.

The Minutemen will stick to such an attack, however, at least as long as possible. "We feel we can run on anyone," said MacPherson.

The defense that running backs Rich Jessamy and Bill Coleman will be attacking is built around two tough men. Defensive end Nate Toran (6-3, 235), was a third team all-American last year, and is rated as one of the best in the nation. Left defensive tackle John Alexander, at 6-5, 240, was an honorable mention all-American. Led by these two, the Scarlet Knights have shut out three opponents this year (Princeton, Connecticut, and Columbia).

Offensively, Rutgers is built around quarterback Bert Kosup, split end and leading receiver Mark Twitty, and tailback Mark Lassiter.

"They have quick backs — guys who will get hit at the line and bounce off," said UMass assistant coach Tom Hoffman. "And they've got big tackles that are about 6-6, 260. They do a lot of guard pulling — the guards are quick and smart."

UMass will be fairly healthy for this one. Tight end Moses Williams, injured in the last play against UConn, is extremely doubtful. But the only others out will be those gone for the season — Todd Holt, Steve Telander, and John Van Buren, who fractured a cheekbone making a tackle last week.

So how does UMass plan on ending the nation's longest major college winning streak?

"Play good football — play the football we're capable of playing," said Hoffman.

Ruggers meet the Cross

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby club, winless since Oct. 2, desperately seeks to improve its 4-4-1 record, as it journeys to the College of the Holy Cross in scenic downtown Worcester this Saturday afternoon.

The Crusaders eked out a hard fought 8-6 decision last year; the ruggers hope to avenge that loss and end a discouraging four game losing drought. Hirsute chieftain, Robert "Doc" Laurence expressed optimism going into this contest. "We've got a helluva lot better chance against them than we've had the last four games (Sorcerers, Beacon Hill, Mystic River Rats, and Boston Firsts rugby clubs)," he said.

Traditionally, Holy Cross along with Brown, Dartmouth and UMass, are the strongest collegiate sides in New England. "Club sides generally have much greater experience than college sides due to the lower turnover in personnel. For a change, we won't have to cope with experience vs. Holy Cross. They are a good side though — we'll have to play well to beat them — I think we will," expounded the revered field general.

"We've been playing fairly well although the scores don't show it," Laurence summarized. UMass is undertaking its most ambitious schedule ever this fall, playing all the top teams in the area.

Injuries and inexperience are two critical factors plaguing the game ruggers efforts this fall. The usually unperturbable Laurence is somewhat disgruntled by what he called "stupid injuries" which have shelved many of his charges. Hugh Chester Jones and Tom Callaghan are expected to return to action and this should rejuvenate the forward troops considerably.

Veteran rugger, Mike McCoy feels that the squad is still having a good year. "In evaluating our schedule before the season, I thought we'd be doing well if we went 6-6-1. Now I feel that we can realistically go 7-5-1. This would be a mildly sensational accomplishment," enthused the hearty youngster.

Besides Holy Cross, the Minutemen finish up with the always tough Charles River Rats rugby club (Nov. 6), Hartford Wanderers rugby club, (Nov. 13) and Boston College (Nov. 20). The last three matches will be held here in Amherst.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Friday, October 29 — Born today, you are able to remain on an even keel emotionally for precisely as long as life itself remains so. When, however, life's problems cause your schedule to pitch and your plans to roll and, in general, your pleasure to turn if not to pain, at least to tension, then you become the victim of your own basic unsteadiness. One of those persons who needs a close friend with whom to discuss life's ups and downs, someone who is willing to share and even at times to completely absorb the shock of unexpected events or consequences, you must make every effort to bring to your personal relationships enough personal charm to hold them together.

Because you find it difficult to achieve in a willy-nilly fashion, it is vital to your success that you have a definite schedule and that you keep to it. What you produce as a result of routine effort and planned attempts is far more profitable and pleasurable than what you are able to attain by way of chance or accident. Those who work with you realize the negative aspects of working without a plan, which explains why you often find that the leadership -- the direction -- has been taken ever by one whom you considered an underling.

In spite of all this, you can — and should -- reach a high degree of success, for you are capable of producing through effective effort and leadership.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Your dependence upon another may not survive the present crisis on the employment scene. You may emerge from it with new confidence.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Changes of face periodically throughout the day enable you to continue to cope with a situation shot through with variables of kind and tempo.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — The disappearance of optimism from another's outlook may disturb you in the afternoon. Make an effort to clear — and cheer — the air.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — The privilege of age is not to be overlooked as you go about the business of selecting a crew to work with you in favored positions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Your immediate view of the situation may not be as valuable ultimately as your considered opinion. Try to be objective.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You should be able to make a fair showing this afternoon. Events that will test your ability to work alone arise late in the day.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — The complete destruction of another's trust in you: that could be the result of inattention at this time. Don't be distracted!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Despair in the face of disappointment is not to be tolerated. Keep your thoughts to yourself --unless they can help another to adjust.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take care that you don't spend all your assets in the furtherance of new interests. Hesitancy could mean the end of progress for the present.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Your interest in getting your point across may carry you into several strange -- but interesting and exciting -- places of business. Rest in the evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — It is the industrious, studious Libra who is given the benefit of the doubt today. Take advantage of your own favored position.

Equestrians visit UConn

By SUE SCANLON

The UMET has a busy weekend ahead of them. First, they will travel to UConn for an intercollegiate horse show on Saturday, October 30. The following day, the UMass Animal Science Department is hosting another event. Riders from UMass, Smith, and Mt. Holyoke Colleges will be competing in the event. The show at UConn begins at 9:00 a.m. and the UMass Event on Sunday begins at 8:00 a.m. As always, spectators are encouraged to come and enjoy the competition.

Last Weekend, the UMET held its own intercollegiate show. Despite the cold weather, the UMass team was in top form. In the end, the UMET was the reserve champion high point college of the show with UConn claiming the top honors.

Freshman star, Whitney Buttrick once again led the way for the UMass team, by winning the reserve champion high point rider award. Other outstanding UMass riders were Sharon Scraggs, Pam Johnson, Robin Ziegler, Chris Olsen, Barrie Fabor, Maryann Neuman, Ann Van Heerden and Donna Quellette.

The UMET is looking forward to the coming weekend's competition. Last year, the team did exceptionally well at the UConn show and they hope to do the same this season. In the event on Sunday, riders will be competing in the dressage, cross-country, and stadium jumping phases of the event. The team has been practicing very hard for both competitions, so this weekend promises to be an exciting one for the UMass Equestrian Team.

Kevin Cummings

This receiver makes a name for himself

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Maybe several people were surprised when reserve tight end Kevin Cummings caught a 70-yard touchdown pass in the Minutemen's first football game of the year.

Maybe a handful still wondered who number 82 was when Cummings caught a 42-yard pass setting up a touchdown igniting UMass past Maine.

Perhaps a few uninformed football followers said "Kevin who?" when on fourth down and 21 yards to go, Cummings caught a last clutch pass with 32 seconds remaining on the clock and rambled down to the Rhode Island four yard line, setting up the eventual Brian McNally to John Gladchuk winning touchdown.

But no one was perplexed in Saturday's Homecoming defeat to UConn (except the entire UMass team) when Kevin Cummings caught eight passes for 111 yards making him the second leading receiver in the Yankee Conference and leading pass receiver for the UMass team.

Although split end Tom Spann of Rhode Island is leading the Yankee Conference with 3.8 catches per game, Cummings leads in almost every other department.

The reserve tight end-split end has played in six games and has caught 17 passes good for a total of 340 yards. Cummings has caught four touchdown passes and is third in the YanCon for leading scores. He is averaging an even twenty yards per catch and his longest catch was 70 yards for the first UMass touchdown of the year against Toledo.

"Kevin Cummings is a helluva receiver who can do it all," said UMass head coach Dick MacPherson. "He has exceeded all of our expectations of him and I have never seen a reserve make so many big plays for us when we needed them the most," added Mac Pherson.

Along with Moses Williams, who excells at blocking, Cummings has teamed with another reserve, Chuck Balboni, to give UMass excellent depth at tight end.

Assistant coach Bill Maxwell, in charge of receivers, thinks Cummings is most effective when the offense is bogged down and when UMass needs a big play to get the offense going again. Maxwell, in addition to MacPherson, credits Cummings success to his hard work in weight training and conditioning.

"When Kevin first came here, he was a big receiver (195 lbs) with good hands but with average speed. 4.8 seconds for the 40) We decided to take advantage of his size and quickness as a tight end," said Maxwell.

Since his freshman year Cummings has gained 40 pounds due to his weight training during the off-season. The result has been a stronger Cummings who has displayed more confidence, toughness, and competitiveness in his new position.

The 6-4 226 lb. junior was recruited from Saratoga Springs, New York, which is the same area UMass basketball forward Jim Town was recruited from. Besides playing wide receiver and defensive back, Cummings was a starting forward on the basketball team along with Town, and also a baseball player. He was sought after by almost all the Yankee Conference schools including UConn, URI, and also the University of Kentucky.

"I was almost set on going to UConn but after a visit to UMass, I was really impressed with the football program and with coach MacPherson," said Cummings.

This, combined with the reputation of the UMass business school and the encouragement of Jim Town convinced Cummings to come here.

"Jimmy said he liked it and I figured I would probably enjoy this school also," said the business major.

Cummings said that adjusting from wide receiver to tight end is a tough but challenging adjustment. Although Cummings is officially listed as a reserve tight end, in both the Harvard and UConn games, he played wide receiver.

"I guess my all favorite position will be as a wide receiver but I really look forward to the challenge of tight end," said Cummings. "As a tight end, I must not only know the pass patterns but I have to be like an offensive lineman and know my blocking assignments on running plays," he said.

Coach Maxwell said that the role of the tight end in the UMass offensive strategy is primarily designed for blocking but with the advent of Cummings and the depth of Williams and Balboni, UMass can afford to throw passes to its tight end.

"I think Kevin is really effective when it's third down and short yardage and we go to a play action pass with a short stike to him," said Maxwell.

MacPherson said that because of Cummings size and success in pass receiving, he has intimitated defensive backs all over the league. "Kevin has those defensive backs so shook up that they are all over him trying to defend him," said MacPherson.

Cummings, when asked if there is any pressure on him as a big play receiver, replied that his opponents can't afford to assign two players to him because of the talents of Gladchuk and Bob Zawada.

"I though UConn was really going to put a lot of pressure on me this past weekend but having Gladchuk on the other side means they can't put two defensive players on me," Cummings said.

Cummings goals for the remainder of the year are to be consistent in his pass catching and blocking abilities. "He has already made great strides in his blocking," said Maxwell.

Cummings said he wants to help in any way he can to have UMass regain its form and win the Yankee Conference. "I really want to beat UNH for what they did to us last year and also beat a certain defensive back on the UNH team who is also from Saratoga Springs, New York," said Cummings.

Spikers sweep to fourth straight win

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team overpowered Mt. Holyoke in two games last night before a small, but enthusiastic crowd at the NOPE gym. It was the spikers fourth straight win.

UMass, now 7-9, had few problems in the first game, winning 15-5. Sue Sabia made several winning spikes early in the game to help her team reach an invincible 12-1 lead. Mt. Holyoke, while giving up a few points because of players touching the net, was thrown off balance by the UMass attack. However, Mt. Holyoke then made several vital saves to hold the Minutewomen at bay, 14-5.

Jayne Greenberg, whose setups were a large part of Sabia's success, spiked a winner to gain the serve. She then hit an unreturnable line drive to win the game.

Mt. Holyoke regained composure in the second match. Setting and spiking with more precision, Mt. Holyoke gave UMass a tough battle at net. Neither team would yield in the first half of the game. UMass, leading 9-8, then took control with devastating net play inspired by Dianne Bunker-Hannula's powerful spikes. From that point on UMass did not lose a point, winning the game 15-8.

Heidi Dickson and substitute Dianne Mandradous exhibited UMass' depth in the second game with fine all around play.

Coach Dianne Thompson was "very impressed" with her team's performance. "I think the team was out to prove me wrong when I commented on (its) lack of confidence," Thompson said. "They looked very confident and played with their heads up."

It was rumored that ice cream sodas were to be included in post-game festivities.

The JV's set the pace for UMass by beating the Mt. Holyoke JV's 16-14, 15-3 earlier in the evening. The JV's now stand 4-4 on the season.

The spikers have a tri-match Saturday at 11 a.m. against Williams and a strong UNH squad.

"We'll be unbeatable if we play as well as we did tonight," Thompson said.

Smithies fall 6-1 to UMass stickers

By JAY SARET
Collegian Staff

It was as inevitable as the Stock market crash of '29. Kathy Gipps' shutout string of four games had to come to an end sometime. Fortunately for UMass it happened when the Minutewomen scored a season high six goals, as they trounced Smith College 6-1, under the lights in Northampton.

Lynsie Wickman's first goal of the season combined with two goals by Giner Bulman, enabled UMass to jump out to a 3-0 lead before the shutout string was broken. Wickman also tallied her second goal of the season to open the second half.

"She (Wickman) played an outstanding game of hockey," commented Coach Judy Davidson. "She was a complete hockey player."

Other UMass goals were scored by Julie McHugh and Cheryl Meliones.

"We played absolutely fantastic hockey," said an elated Davidson after the game, "We could have beaten anyone tonight."

UMass' next opponent will not be just anyone, it will be number one ranked Springfield College Saturday morning at 11:00 a.m., behind NOPE.

UMass' 9-4 record is good enough to earn it a number four seeding in the post season tournament.

It will surely be hot stuff as 'Firebowl II' arrives

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

If you can imagine a cross between a soccer game and the Salem witch trials, you might be able to form a mental image of the game of fireball. If you're no good at mental imagery, you really ought to come down to the Boyden intramural fields on Tuesday night at 8:00 to check the game out first hand, because that's the starting time for "Firebowl II."

Believe it or not, the object of the game is to kick, or otherwise force a ball of fire down the field and into a goal made of flaming two by fours. Seeing will be believing on Tuesday night.

The guiding force behind "Firebowl II" is Kevin Patterson. Kevin is a full-blooded Tuscorora Indian living on the 13th floor of Kennedy Tower. He is organizing the game as part of the colloquium in Indian sports and games he is teaching.

There is no history of when the game was first played, but, according to Patterson, it has always been played by the six tribes of the Iriquois Nation, of which the Tuscororas are members. Today, the Tuscororas are the only tribe in the Iriquois Nation which still plays fireball. It is played at the annual Indian picnic held on the reservation in Sanborne, which is about ten miles from Niagara Falls.

The Tuscorora tribe is divided into seven clans. At the picnic, which lasts three days, two of the clans play each night, with one clan sitting out each year. Each of the winners is declared the bravest clan, since this was the original purpose of the game. Unlike today's pro sports, there is no interminable playoff series. All three winning clans are declared the bravest.

"It's the same thing now — if you play, it's supposed to be kind of brave, but we don't look at it that way, we just go out to have a good time, it's a lot of fun," said Patterson.

There are no rules as such. As stated earlier, the object is to simply force the ball into the opponent's goal. The game is begun by lining the two teams up and lightening the ball and goals. At the referee's whistle, the two teams rush to the middle of the field and commence playing soccer with the flaming ball. The game is still played that way on the reservation and has always been played that way, according to Patterson.

"When the ball is lit, there's a ring of fire around it, so it's interesting to see who the bravest one will be and kick it first," said Patterson.

After a goal is scored, the teams are separated by the referee, whose only function is to start and stop the game and to keep score. The ball is kicked back to the middle of the field, where the game is restarted. The only other time play is stopped is when the ball goes near the crowd.

"It's not like soccer, where you have positions," said Patterson. "It's just everybody on the ball. You just kick it and whoever's the strongest team usually wins cause they keep on pushing the other team back. The other team can't do much about it."

Hundreds and sometimes thousands of people attend the games at Sanborne, which are advertised in the Niagara Falls tourist brochures.

Peterson said that injuries are few and far between, with most of them resulting from carelessness. There is no equipment and no protective devices are worn.

"The best protection," said Patterson, "is to wet your pants from the waist down."

The current version of the ball has been in Patterson's posession for a year and was made by his father. It weighs about 15 pounds and is made of wound rags soaked in kerosene.

Last year in Firebowl I, won by the lacrosse team, 2-0, the ball malfunctioned, as it unwound and disrupted the game. This year's game will last as long as the ball does, which will be anywhere from 15-20 minutes, according to Patterson.

The 13th floor Kennedy team will be made up of volunteers from Patterson's floor and from the colloq. They include Jim "Shamus" Bouras, Al "Big Al" Freedman, Jeff "Mexican" Valas, Gary "Squiggles" Wigglesworth, Brian "Oldfield" Matusz, Stan "Peanut" Provencher, Jack "Doughboy" Bollus, Steve "Swede" Blanchard, Mitch, "Stash" Pysznik, Dave "Willy" Clark and Artie "Artful" Humanson. Head coach is Bob "Bobo" Wilson, currently on the injured reserve list.

The lacrosse-men will have Bill O'Brien, Dave Martin, Don Goldstein, Frank Garahan, Pete Connally, Mike Gongas, Bob Morris. Terry Keefe, and Vin Lobello.

"I really hope a lot of people come down for this," said Patterson. "It's the only chance they'll get to see this. The only place it's played in the world is up on our reservation."

"It's great," said Shamus. "It has the speed of hockey, the violence of football, and the excitement of jai-alai."

One historical fact on the eve of the game — "Big Al" the first white man ever to kick a fireball, will be back in action this year. Check it out.

Frisbees will fly

The first annual "Phantom Frisbee Free For All" will reign over Amherst and Northampton this weekend as seven Ultimate Frisbee teams from east coast schools gather to play.

Three area teams — Hampshire College, Amherst College, and UMass — will team with Bucknell, Cornell and two teams from Princeton to create what may be the most inane and informal Frisbee weekend of The Pioneer Valley's history.

Opening games will be played Saturday at 1:00 p.m. when Hampshire hosts Princeton I, Amherst hosts Cornell and UMass hosts Princeton II. The UMass-Princeton II game will be played by the Campus Center pond.

On Saturday night Hampshire will play Bucknell at Smith College at 8:00 and Amherst will play Princeton I at Amherst at the same time. UMass will play the Cornell and Princeton II at 7:00 on the lighted intramural fields. All of these games will be played in costume.

Sunday morning there will be a Frisbee Golf Tournament at 9:00 on the UMass course near the football stadium. Afternoon games will also be played at Hampshire and Amherst. Frisbee will begin today, however as Hampshire, Amherst and UMass players scrimmage near the Campus Center pond.

Varsity, JV's in action

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Score [skōr], v.; 1. To make an entry or entries of the score of. 2. To gain for addition to the score, as points, etc. 3. To count as having value. 4. To achieve as an indisputable gain; as to score a success.

Score — a simple word with a simple definition. But it has not been so simple for the UMass varsity soccer team, which has been shut out in its last three games.

While the Minutemen have been involved in some close, tough soccer games this season, their inability to put the ball in the net has led to the team's record of 2-8.

Tomorrow the booters will try to break out of their scoring slump against Boston College in a 2:00 game at Chestnut Hill.

The UMass junior varsity soccer team, with a record of 5-2, takes on the Springfield College JV's in a 2:30 game today at the field across from Boyden.

The team is coming off a big 3-2 win over UConn last Saturday. The booters other wins were against Keene State, Holyoke Community, WPI and Stockbridge.

It is a young team which is comprised of freshmen and two sophomores.

"I've never met a group of kids that age with such a winning attitude," said coach Gary McKenna, who was a co-captain on last year's UMass varsity team. "Skill-wise, we're probably not as good as some of the teams we've beaten, but attitude has made up for it."

Springfield College always has a good soccer team because it recruits a lot of top athletes, especially a lot of top players from Western Mass.

"They have a lot of physical education majors who like to run with the ball and play a kick and run game," said McKenna.

Some changes in the Garden

The tide has changed around the Boston Garden within the last two seasons, the Celtics have come ashore, while the Bruins have been washed out to sea.

The days when Bruins games were a virtual sellout, and the only way to purchase a ticket was to bribe a politician, or shovel out a bundle of money to a ticket scalper are over. Recent Bruin home games have averaged around 10,000 fans, far short of the 13,909 which inhabited the garden during the "Big Bad Bruin" era.

Now the Celtics are the number one attraction, and the years of obscurity which clouded the team's success have passed. It was not long ago that New England sports fans thought Hambone Williams was a type of communicable disease, or Rex Morgan a comic strip, while Bruin bench warmers such as Ricky Smith, and Ace Bailey were hailed as heroes.

But as with the successful Bruin teams of the early 70's turmoil has set into the Celtic camp, Paul Silas traded after a contract dispute, the new additions of Curtis Rowe, and Sidney Wicks, along with talk of three million dollar players float above the 13 championship banners.

Amidst this squalor, has gone the relatively unnoticed success of the 1976 version of the Boston Bruins. With its defeat of the New York Rangers (4-3) on Wednesday night, upping their record to 8-2, the Bruins are off to their best start in five years.

Gone are yesterday's heroes, "Childe Bobby," "Espie," "Pie," "Hodgie," "Turk," and "E.J.," and with them the country club atmosphere. Hard working two-way hockey players such as Gregg Sheppard, Terry O'Reilly, and Jean Ratelle have taken their place.

General manager Harry Sinden, and coach Don Cherry have engineered a house cleaning, ridding the Bruins of players whose heads had been unable to fit inside Boston Garden doors. Many fans gasped when the Bruins traded Phil Esposito the team's leading scorer, to the Rangers no less, for Jean Ratelle. Yes, many of the faithful even gave up on the Bruins after the sale of Bobby Orr, turning in their season ticket subscriptions after years of following the "olde Bean Town" team.

Many thought the loss of Orr would devastate the team, and lend it to the ranks of mediocrity. But what had been forgotten was the fact that this same team had played most of last year without the superstar defenseman. And in his place they had inserted the next best thing Brad Park! Even still the critics wondered how a team could lose its two top production men, and still qualify as a contender.

Reminiscing about the old Bruins who even with a five goal lead would continue the offensive assault, disregarding the textbook of hockey brought joy to many fans. Offense was the only word they knew; it didn't matter whether they got burned a few too many times up ice, they could come back and score when they had to.

But under Cherry, that system has vanished, it's not how many goals you score that counts, rather how few you give up. The players who couldn't adjust to this system are gone, and the players who skate their lanes, backcheck, and are willing to go into the corners remain. They may not be as exciting to watch, however under this new sytem of defense they are assured of being contenders.

There are still some question marks about this young team, none the least of which is, can the defensive corps hold up during the long haul of an 82 game schedule? Dallas Smith is getting no younger, and Gary Doak has not gotten much better. However Mike Milbury has been effective thus far, and the goaltending of "Cheesie," and "Gillie" stalwarthy.

Should this team continue to play as it has over the first eighth of the season, it will cause hockey experts to wait before conceding another Stanley Cup, to the Montreal Canadiens. As the season progresses those faithful who saw fit to desert the club may just wander back, and that magic figure of 13,909 may once again be reached.

UMass visits powerful Rutgers

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

Franco Harris, Ed Marinaro, Lydell Mitchell, Joe Theisman — on and on goes the list of New Jersey natives who defected from their home state to play big-time college football.

But now, thanks to a scholarship fund set up three years ago to build up the basketball and football programs at Rutgers, New Jersey's best athletes are starting to play ball for the state university instead of traveling to the out-of-state schools.

The results have been staggering. In basketball, the Scarlet Knights have become instant success, and made it to the NCAA finals a year ago.

And in football, Rutgers now possesses the longest major-college winning streak in the country — 14 games. And tomorrow afternoon, at Alumni Stadium in New Brunswick, N.J., (1:30 1:20 WMUA) Rutgers will attempt to make UMass victim number 15.

The Minutemen are coming off what coach Dick MacPherson calls their "toughest loss, ever, in terms of emotions." A week ago, UConn came to Amherst and stuck it to UMass, 28-6 on Homecoming weekend.

If you're interested in comparative scores, it's like this. Rutgers shut out Connecticut, 38-0, while UConn rolled over UMass.

Frightening, yes, but the Minutemen aren't ready to roll over and play dead. "If we were 5-1 going down there, everyone would be excited and looking for us to break the streak," said MacPherson. "But we're the same team, even though we lost."

But after such a tough loss, wouldn't MacPherson rather be playing some patsy to bring back confidence?

"I wouldn't want to be playing anybody else," said the coach. "They've got the longest winning streak in the nation, a beautiful stadium... this is a great opportunity for us," he added.

Speaking of beautiful stadiums, Rutgers played in the brand new Giants' Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J., last week, and crushed Columbia 47-0, before a crowd of 46,000. In two weeks, they will be in New Orleans to play Tulane in the Superdome.

The importance of the Rutgers streak can be downplayed. The combined won-loss records of the Scarlet Knights' opponents thus far is 12-27, and only one of those squads — Navy — plays anything resembling a big-time schedule.

But Rutgers is tough, make no mistake about it. The recent NCAA statistics show the Knights leading in total defense (allowing just 176.4 yards per game), rushing defense (77.3 yards per game), and, most impressively, scoring defense, giving up a measly 6.4 points a game.

Sunderland wins IM crown

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

Intramural champion Sunderland CHI defeated the MacKimmie Lions 13-12 in the intramural championship football game played at the Boyden Intramural playing field on a sunny but cold afternoon vesterday.

In a game closely resembling "The Longest Yard", Sunderland kicked off to MacKimmie. On the arm of quarterback Julian Dina and a cannon shot of a bomb to Eddie Saab, the Lions drove deep into CHI territory. However, a crucial field goal was missed.

After an exchange of punts, Sunderland intercepted a Dina pass. Moments later, coach Bruce Rose saved a long touchdown completion by defecting it and Sunderland punted. In what was clearly becoming a defensive struggle MacKimmie ran the clock out to end the scoreless first half.

Early in the third quarter, MacKimmie's Tommy Doyle caught a long Dina touchdown pass to break the scoreless tie. The point after was missed and it proved to be costly.

The Lions had a chance to break it open when Tony Dallisandro intercepted a Rick Soper pass. Sunderland CHI returned the favor. Tony Dallisandro topped that with another super theft. With the Dallisandro interception, and the fine passing of Julian to Eddie Saab, MacKimmie increased its lead to 12-0.

Nearing the end of the third quarter, Sunderland made a contest again of it on a Soper to Morin connection which was good for six points. This cut the lead in half for the Lions.

With forty seconds left in the game, MacKimmie punted with a Tom Doyle coffin-corner kick. Sunderland quarterback Rick Soper ran the ball to MacKimmie's 15 yard line with almost no time remaining.

Soper passed for the tying touchdown and the dramatic extra point was punched through the uprights to send Sunderland CHI fans into complete euphoria.

Women in Easterns

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team will get a chance to avenge its New England title loss to Middlebury when it takes on that school and the rest of the east in the Eastern cross country championships to be held at Albany (NY) State College tomorrow at 11:15 a.m.

This will be the first year that an Eastern championship has been held for women. According to the meet director, a field of about 40 teams is entered, which once again demonstrates the dramatic growth of women's cross country nationwide. Penn State, UMass and Middlebury will be among the top teams.

"I'd be surprised if there were any teams better than Penn State or Middlebury or ourselves," said coach Ken O'Brien. "There might be some teams as good."

O'Brien guessed that Bucknell, Rutgers, Cornell and Cortland (NY) State might field strong teams, but since UMass and Penn State dominated the distance events at last year's track Easterns, they will most likely do the same tomorrow barring tremendous improvement by other Eastern schools, who will be drawn from New England, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware.

The individual race should be intense, with Penn State having three or four top flight runners, and with NE champ Lavinia Muncy and NE runner-up Marina Buckley expected to be right up there. UMass' Julie Lafreniere should also do well.

The race will be run over a three mile course which is described in the program as being "a flat course with gentle rolling hills."

"We feel confident about it," said O'Brien. "We had our best race of the season on a flat course, at Brandeis, and after being primed on our home course, which is difficult, I think it'll be pretty easy for them."

Men seek YanCons

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

As they say in social circles, "the party is over" and its time for the Minutemen harriers to get back to some serious running as they attempt to capture their seventh straight Yankee Conference crown. Meet time will be 12 noon tomorrow in Franklin Park, Boston.

The harriers, off their 10-1 season record, will embark on capturing the Yankee Conference, the New Englands, and the IC4A's and establishing themselves as a nationally ranked team in the Nationals, to be held November 20th in Denton, Texas.

The harriers are currently ranked 15th in the nation by Harrier magazine with Providence College ranked third.

Coach Ken O'Brien does not expect a stiff challenge from any other Yankee Conference school except Connecticut as he prepares his top seven of John Mcgrail, Mike Quinn, Frank Carroll, Louis Panaccione, Chris Farmer, Cliff Staples, and freshman Bob Martin for the meet.

Connecticut last faced UMass on October 9 in a quadrangular meet with Manhattan, and Syracuse in a torrential rainstorm in the Bronx. UMass beat UConn 41-52 but gained the respect of the Huskie team. UMass was without two of its top three runners, John McGrail and Frank Carroll but was still able to handle UConn easily.

UConn is lead by senior Bruce Clark who finished third to UMass winner Quinn in the Bronx meet. Clark's time was 27:02 in the five mile course, 37 seconds behind Quinn.

Connecticut is presently ranked eight in New England with Providence holding the top spot. UMass and Northeastern follow with second and third, respectively.

O'Brien expects all seven UMass runners to finish in the top ten of the five mile race but also expects

Pumpkin Grid Picks

Hackneyed though it may seem, this week's guest grid-picker is the Great Pumpkin, famous heralder of the Halloween spirit and renowned fraud.

So you think there's freedom in this country. You say that one controls his own destiny here. You're sure that oppression in the United States is a thing of the past. Well it just isn't so! How can anyone believe that this country is free when pumpkins are still being bought and sold like rutabagas?

Anti-Pumpkinism is even prevalent in some of our considered literary "masterpieces". The worst offender is Washington Irving's rag, "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" which speaks of a "Headless Horseman". In reality, the horseman had a pumpkin atop his shoulders, yet there is never any mention of a "Pumpkined Horseman". Imagine that! Irving would rather deem the rider "headless" than give a pumpkin the credit.

Why, pumpkin murder is glorified in children's rhymes! Believe me when I say that there is a long score to settle with Peter, Peter, Pumpkin Eater. Sure, you laugh now (or, then again, maybe you don't), but you wouldn't be snickering if the story immortalized Hector, Hector, People Dissector.

A rent control proposal, which was defeated by Amherst town meeting members two weeks ago, may be put before the town voters later this month.

The Amherst Tenants Association (ATA) is expected to submit the final signatures this morning on its petition to bring rent control to a town-wide referendum.

The petition must be signed by at least five per cent of the town's registered voters.

Vincent J. O'Connor, member of the ATA, said the association submitted more than 700 signatures to the town clerk last week. He claimed that today's list will add 300 to 400 names to the petition before the noon deadline.

The referendum would ask town voters to reject the decision of the Oct. 20 session of the Amherst Special Town Meeting that defeated Article 23, 145-44. The article was to determine if Amherst wants to adopt an act for rent and eviction control.

An official at the town clerk's office said Friday that they would probably not be able to vertify petition signatures until Wednesday since they will be busy with Tuesday's state and national elections.

Once the petition is verified by the town clerk, the Board of Selectman will set a date for voting on the referendum.

Nancy Eddy, chairperson of the Board of Selectman, said there will be some discussion about referendum procedures at the board's meeting tonight and that a tentative date may be set.

She said there is a "general kind of agreement" between the ATA and the board that the referendum will go before the electorate Nov. 16.

O'Connor said the referendum vote is "really a vote to petition the General Court to allow Amherst the authority to adopt rent control."

If the referendum is passed by the town, it goes to the state legislature where, according to O'Connor, they can change it marginally but not rewrite it. If the authority to adopt rent and eviction control for a final decision, O'Connor said.

He said the state has already given such towns as Brookline, Cambridge, and Sommerville authority to imprement- independent rent control.

"One assumes the state legislature will allow the town's voters to exercise their own good judgement," O'Connor added.

Richardson, Sorenson debate Ford vs. Carter

By KEVIN J. CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson and Theodore S. Sorenson, debating the merits of President Ford and Jimmy Carter respectively Friday night in Springfield, discussed such issues as the economy, energy, bureaucratic reorganization and Watergate.

The two surrogates restricted themselves to responses given by Carter and Ford throughout the campaign, but occasionally kidded each other about their respective political positions.

The panel of questioners included Arnold S. Friedman, editor of the Springfield Union and Republican, Durham Caldwell, news director of Springfield television and radio stations WHYN, and Victoria Schuck, a professor of political science at Mount Holyoke College.

Sorenson, former adviser to Presidents John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson, called for a reduction of taxes in the "middle income squeeze" and said the economy will need a shot in the arm "if its course of stagnation is not reversed."

Richardson said the nation's economy is recovering despite the recent deadline of leading indicators and added that federal spending must be held down to check inflation.

"The people of this country do not have to wait for statistics to know the economy is not in a slight downtown...they recognize it as a recession," said Sorenson.

Sorenson said that Democrats proved in the Kennedy administration "that it is possible to have solid years of economic growth without inflation."

Asked about the lack of a national energy policy, Sorenson said, "We have no energy policy and we're less prepared for an oil boycott than when it occurred three years ago."

"The answer is characteristic of the generalizations we often hear from his (Sorenson's) candidate," said Richardson. He blamed a lack of co-operation from the Democratic conference as the reason for no comprehensive energy policy.

Sorenson said Carter's proposal to cut down on the size of the White House staff could be accomplished.

"I think Gov. Carter is on the right track. Reorganization is not going to save millions of dollars, but it is going to make the bureaucracies more responsive."

"Mr. Sorenson says Gov. Carter is on the right track. I would like to ask what track? He has used the word 'reorganization' but he hasn't said what he believes that is," responded Richardson.

A question that has been discussed sparingly throughout the campaign by both Ford and Carter has been Watergate and the pardoning of former President Richard M. Nixon by Ford.

Richardson defended Ford's action. "I think the pardon was right in results. It would not have been in the national interest to press the case to a full scale trial. A jail sentence would have been a petty, vindictive act."

"I would not have wanted Mr. Nixon to go to jail. I do object to the fact that he was granted a pardon without getting any information from him in return," said Sorenson.

The debate was sponsored by the Springfield Adult Education Council and the World Affairs Council of the Connecticut Valley.

Music Council coffeehouse offers folk music, relaxation

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

After a weekend of rock at the Hatch or disco at the Bluewall, it's nice to spend a quiet Sunday evening with a different kind of music: folk music. The Program Music Council provides such an opportunity every other Sunday evening in the Commuter Lounge.

"There has never been any place around before for alternative music," said Dave Doucet, a UMass junior, who is the main force behind the coffeehouse.

"A couple of friends and I had looked into the idea last semester. We were going to try and get Recognized Student Organization, (RSO) status, but we heard that the Program Music Council was working on the same idea so we sort of dropped it," said Doucet.

The Music Council, however, was unable to find space to hold the coffeehouse in, according to Doucet. Early this semester, Doucet brought the idea to the Council. They were still interested and willing to go along with the idea, said Doucet.

He said that he got help from several people in setting up the coffeehouse. Irene Richards, a student adviser in the RSO office, helped with scheduling space and sound equipment. "Irene was a big help," said Doucet.

Sue Reed from "The Brink", a similar coffeehouse at Mount Holyoke College, gave suggestions on setting it up and getting musicians according to Doucet.

The food for the coffeehouse is provided by Earthfoods at cost, according to Doucet. "They were really happy to help out by supplying food." said Doucet.

The biggest problem that had to be overcome was finding space. "We couldn't hold it anywhere near the Bluewall or the Hatch on a Friday or Saturday night, because the noise would have drowned us out," said Doucet. Finally, it was decided to hold it in the Commuter Lounge on a Sunday night when the Hatch is closed.

The sound and lighting equipment is borrowed from Campus Center Audio Visual. "Irene Richards helped us to get the equipment from them," said Doucet.

Music at the coffeehouse is provided by New England musicians. The first coffeehouse, held on Oct. 24, featured Linda Worster a singer from New Hampshire, and Bill Staines from Boston.

"Linda sang mostly her own songs, while Bill played a lot of contemporary music. He also tried different types of things such as yodeling," said Doucet.

The next coffeehouse, to be held next Sunday, will feature "Applejack" a four piece group which specializes in traditional New England folk tunes, according to Doucet.

Other appearances will include Guy Van Duser, who plays ragtime, and Billy Novick, who plays clarinet, said Doucet.

He said he also wants to talk to some of the local street singers about appearing at the coffeehouse. "I want to talk to Lester Scafidi and Steve Baird," said Doucet.

Doucet isn't just limiting the coffeehouse to just one kind of music. He would like to get a group that specializes in Celtic (Scottish and Irish) folk music. Other interests include Indian and Western swing music.

The Guitar Workshop and the Fretted Instrument Workshop (guitars and banjos), both located in Amherst, have provided advice and advertising.

"They're a good resource for us. They've referred people to us who are interested in coming to coffeehouse," said Doucet.

The first coffeehouse was a great success, according to Doucet. "Most of the people talked to really had a good time," said Doucet.

The coffeehouse isn't trying to make money, just to let people have a good time."

Musicians playing FAC must pay $150 fee

By RICHARD BARRELL

Groups who rent the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall must pay a $150 fee, because the Hall is not equipped with lights or sound equipment, according to Frederick Steinway, director of the Fine Arts Center.

"Equipment we do not have on hand must be rented. Without lighting and sound equipment the hall would be unusable," he said.

Steinway's comments were made to the Collegian after some groups had complained about the charge to the paper.

The $150 represents a pro-rated rental charge. It was formulated by dividing rental expenses by the number of shows scheduled for the 1976-77 academic year, he said.

While the Fine Arts Center will pay some $12,000 for rental of lights and lighting equipment, it also spends about $1,200 for rental and some purchases of necessary sound equipment, according to Steinway.

"These costs are in no way covered by the $3 per student per semester Arts Council Fee. They represent additional costs which are ultimately paid by students since operating costs are passed on by the Fine Arts Center to groups using the Hall," he said.

Pointing out that during the 1975-76 academic year, the Provost's Office partially defrayed the costs of lights and sound equipment rental, Steinway said this year's users must pay the entire cost.

"These costs should in no way be confused with charges normally passed along to groups for rental of special props or special items such as an organ," he said.

"What the Fine Arts Center does not own it must rent like any other hall," said Steinway.

State funds allotted for the purchase of sound equipment and lights were frozen, said Dr. William C. Venman, special assistant to the provost. Venman, dean of Continuing Education, is also in charge of the Fine Arts Center.

Funds for lighting equipment, cables dimmers, et cetera, come from the Bureau of Building Construction. These funds have recently been released and contracts are now out. We are hoping the work will be completed by the end of the school year," said Venman.

Steinway fears that inflation will affect contracts and bids now out. He forsees problems in obtaining all the needed equipment when the state releases the allocated funds.

Washington janitor 'an institution'

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

When he walks down the hall there's no need to even see him to know who it is. The jangle of his keys and the overwhelming stench of his cigar quickly reveal his identity.

Peter F. Kascinsky is a janitor in George Washington dormitory in Southwest. "Pete", as he is known to most people, has been a janitor at UMass for the last 10 years and has worked in Washington for the last eight and one-half.

"He's an institution" commented one student. "I wouldn't want any other janitor." That seems to be the way most students feel about Kascinsky.

"The job itself isn't the best one the world" said Kascinsky, "but I have my laughs all day long with the students. It makes the day more enjoyable."

since he started working at UMass in 1966, Kascinsky feels that along with many other things, students' attitudes towards the janitors have changed.

He feels there was a change in the students in the late sixties and early seventies.

"We weren't respected as much as we are now" said Kascinsky. "It might be because they were so busy with their movements and protesting, but they wouldn't even talk to you. They sort of ignored the janitors," he said.

"I think the students are more sociable. They seem to enjoy themselves more," Kascinsky said.

As with the other janitors, Kascinsky works from 7:00 a.m. till 3:00 p.m. There are certain jobs in the dorm that each janitor does on a rotating basis. The floors' they are responsible for cleaning are assigned on a relatively permanent basis.

Kascinsky now takes care of the 14th, 13th and 11th floors. These floors are all-male, and he finds there is a certain amount of practical joking among the residents.

"They play tricks on me now and then" said Kascinsky. "One time they took the trash room doors off the hinges. I guess it was funny in a way, but it wasn't funny when it (the door) hit me on the head," Kascinsky said.

Toilets seem to be a good target for practical jokers. "Once in a while we have somebody who likes to stuff the toilets with beer cans, so that they won't flush", Kascinsky said.

Kascinsky is good natured about it and doesn't get upset over these incidents.

"I expect it" he said. "I might yell about it, but it doesn't really bother me. If it bothered me. I wouldn't be able to handle the job," Kascinsky said.

What bothers Kascinsky most about the job is the pay. "I think we're really under paid for what is required of us," he said.

Beside a love for cigars which keeps him constantly puffing on a Panatella or a Perfecto, Kascinsky also has a passion for animals. "I love horse racing" he said.

In his spare time Kascinsky also enjoys fishing hunting, and gardening. He enjoys good food, "I enjoy good restaurants and my wife and I try to go to some place fancy at least once a month."

Kascinsky said he doesn't know how long he will be at UMass, but while he's here he'll go right on being a friend to the students.

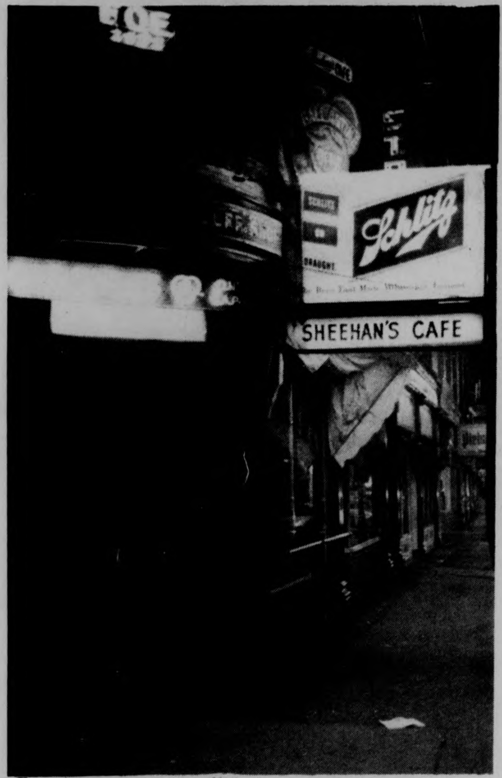
No wonder they call it Pleasant St....



By PETER SWANSON
Collegian Staff

One a.m. and the end of another Saturday night is beginning. Engines rev, tires squeal, bottles break, and fists fly in aimless drunken ferocity. As if to deny the sporatic presence of macho violence, the lovers stroll casually down the walk. Old friends hold each other up on their way home after a night at Sheehan's Cafe or the Lazy River.

From Southwest, Holyoke and Springfield, dressed down like working class heroes, they come to sit in bars on Pleasant St. and get shitfaced.

At 2:30 a.m. the street is quiet except for the nearby rumbling of the AMTRAK Montreal to New York City. The train passes by on the tracks that back in the days when Dempsey fought Tunney were known as "the belt." It follows that Pleasant St. was dubbed "below the belt." Probably not the side of the tracks which opera singer Jenny Lind refered to when she called Northampton "the paradise of America".

There are six bars in the first half mile of Pleasant St. In a local test of drinking prowess a person must walk the half mile drinking a beer at each bar, then turn around and go back drinking two beers at each, and so on.... ad nauseum. If he or she begins at Main St. the first encounter would be with Sheehan's Cafe, then in order; City Cafe, Roberto's Lounge, Lazy River, The Watering Hole, and Hugo's. According to owner Sam Hassan, Hugo's alone serves 120 cases and 6 kegs (half barrels) of beer each week.

However, the face of Pleasant St. is changing fast. Young businessmen are being attracted to Pleasant St. because of the low rents for their shops and the large potential market. Population growth in the Pioneer Valley is one of the most rapid in New England, due in part to the growth of UMass in the 60's.

Earlier this year when the federal government declared downtown Northampton a historic landmark, offering matching funds for any building improvements, the city was careful to include parts of Pleasant St. in the official downtown area.

Two Pleasant St. locations eligible for federal funds, according to Dr. Wilbur of the Northampton Historical Commission, are the Globe Theater and Sheehan's Cafe.

Owner of The Breeder's Choice, Ed De Varennes explained that the city wants to improve the image of Pleasant St. De Varennes said, "Pleasant is a major access route to Rt. 91. A lot of traffic comes by off the highway, which besides the rent is why I put my store here. A city likes to show people coming in its best side, instead Northampton shows them its ass end, it shoots them a moon."

The Breeder's Choice is one shop that is bringing customers to Pleasant St. during daylight hours. Others include Scanlan's Speed City auto accessories store, the Imperial Bakery, and Furnitures with antique furniture shop.

Bill Smith, Furnituresmith owner, predicts the street in the next few years will become a center for antique specialty shops.

The old St. Regis restaurant on Pleasant has been joined in the last few years by such eating places as The Filling Station and the Pizza Express, which are doing well against the formidable competition from downtown. The St. Regis, in order to expand its operation, is moving into a next door building of the new defunct Northampton Community College. The building is currently being decorated in the style of the Coolidge era.

A former partner in the ownership of Portofino's, a ritzy Italian restaurant in nearby Leeds, recently bought an old restaurant on Pleasant St. and is rumored to be setting up a Portofino's style operation.

The growth of small businesses on Pleasant St. is beginning to have some effects on the wild-west like character of the night life. For the first time in five years a policeman walks his nightly beat on Pleasant St.

Bikers can no longer park their Harleys on the sidewalk in front of Hugo's, nor do junkies hang around the old Post Office. In a recent raid on a Pleasant St. apartment Northampton police seized 23 bags of heroin. It was the first seizure of heroin in the history of the city.

In spite of real, or imagined efforts at facelifting the street, the night-life has remained essentially the same. The Pleasant St. bars and the people who drink in them still resemble something out of the Bruce Springsteen song which mentions the "runaway American dream". The dream ends at closing time for too many of the people who come to Pleasant St. at night; the people bound up in the dead-end jobs and marriages, ballgames and warm beer, racism and drug addiction.

Police find body of missing girl

Compiled from Wires

The body of Cynthia Krizack, a high school student missing since Oct. 7, was found Sunday afternoon in a wooded area in Windsor, Mass. by a hunter checking on his traps, police said.

The 17-year old Williamstown girl was last seen about 25 miles away when she left her home to go to the library at Williams College a half mile away. She never returned.

Krizack, nicknamed "Rocky", was the subject of an intense search throughout the New England area.

The body, taken to Pittsfield General Hospital, was identified by a close friend, police said. An autopsy will be performed tonight.

Police would not say how she died, but her body was fully clothed and did not have any noticeable bruises.

Her body was found shortly after 2 p.m. yesterday.

The Williamstown police had told the Collegian Wednesday that they had absolutely no leads and were still investigating the possibility of kidnaping.

Notices describing physical characteristics and some pertinent background had been distributed throughout the UMass campus. It urged that anyone, with information about her, contact the local police department.

Local residents had organized search parties and last weekend volunteers went to state and local police departments distributing leaflets.

MassPIRG asks fluorocarbon ban

By PAT BEINAR
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) has joined the Natural Resources Council and the office of the Massachusetts Attorney General in a petition urging the Food and Drug Administration to implement plans to ban flurocarbons immediately, according to a MassPIRG spokesperson.

Flurocarbons, a propellant mainly used in aerosol spray cans, were banned in all cans containing the substance by the FDA last week. Warnings will be placed on the cans, and flurocarbon use will gradually phase out, according to the spokesperson.

MassPIRG is concerned about flurocarbon damage to the ozone layer in our atmosphere, and wants the ban issued and published immediately.

We want to make sure the FDA "doesn't slack off, because the dangers to our environment are so great," a MassPIRG spokesperson said.

For two years, MassPIRG members have researched the problem, and have distributed pamphlets and educated others on the dangers of flurocarbons.

"One major threat is increased cases of skin cancer," the spokesperson stressed. Another menace is that photoplankton in our ocean, which produce much of the oxygen in our atmosphere, might be destroyed by too much radiation.

Though the flurocarbon industry is a big one, employing about 600,000 workers, MassPIRG feels that the flurocarbon threat to our environment is a much greater problem which must be stopped before it's too late, the spokesperson stressed.

The FDA, which controls 80 per cent of the aerosols that contain flurocarbon, must use their power in controlling it now, the spokesperson concluded.

Friday Hours at the Pub UMass tradition since '68

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Happy Hour at the Pub in Amherst, has been a UMass tradition since the first glass of beer was poured there in 1968.

On Friday betweeen 3 and 7 p.m., over 800 UMass students go to relax, unwind and sing a few oldies while quenching their thirst.

Jerry Joloi, the Pubs manager for the last six and one half years, said the Happy Hour accounts for eight per cent of a total week's business.

Joloi said he thinks one of the reasons for Happy Hour's success among UMass students is the selling of the "Pub Mug." Over 2500 eight ounce mugs have been sold since their debut last October.

"I want to keep the tradition of the 25 cent beer even with rising prices. I feel that I'll be able to keep it a quarter through 1977," he said.

Kimberlee Clark, an Amherst native, has been working as a waitress at the Pub since last June.

"I enjoy working Happy Hour. It goes smoothly and it's normally very good money. It's hard work, but it's fun," she said.

There are some drawbacks to being a college bar waitress. "Some of the students get really obnoxious when they are drunk. They ask how old I am and if I'm married and when I get off work," Clark said.

Music is an important part of any happy hour. David "Doc" Sullivan is quite popular with the UMass regulars. Sullivan spints mostly oldies and said he feels they work better than disco because more people know the words.

"I try to encourage singing because we can't use the dance floor during Happy Hour. Most of the songs are requests. In fact only 10 or 15 aren't requests," he said.

John Glover, bouncer at the Pub's Happy Hour said "I've never seen a fight inside here during Happy Hour."

As much as the Pub management likes having Happy Hour, the students enjoy it more. Mark Gorden, a UMass senior marketing major, wouldn't miss it for anything.

"It's a great place to unwind at the end of the week and enjoy a few brews," he said.

Noreen Principe, a UMass junior, keeps coming back because, "The Pub is great! The beers are relatively inexpensive. The only problem is maintaining a constant buzz so a good Friday night is encountered. Happy hour makes the challenge worthwhile," she said.

Interview with Natalie Cole

By NASSER EGA
Collegian Staff

After interviewing Natalie Cole on the telephone while she was in Kentucky (she called collect) I had the opportunity of seeing her perform on stage at UMass. My thirty minute chat with Natalie Cole didn't rise to great height because that talented lady had just flown in from California where she had performed, and I'm sure she'd have preferred to have slept for that half an hour than to speak to the press, as I concluded from the tone of her voice.

On stage Miss Cole has the ability of capturing and hypnotizing her audience and the UMass audience was no exception. The demonstration of her show was the work of inspiration. I had the opportunity of meeting her backstage and the luck of hearing a fan of hers thank her for "inspiring me."

Q. Is there any particular sentiment you feel coming back UMass?

A. Sure, that's the school I graduated from.

Q. What messages do you feel your music is projecting? Do you feel your music is expressive of yourself?

A. I hope so, yes, I think that it is. Mostly it's a message of brotherhood and getting along and loving one another and one of complete unselfishness. As far as my own personal love goes, I'm still working on it, but I think I've come a long way and I hope my music has had some kind of positive effect on people that listen to it, that they can get that kind of a feeling from it.

Q. Did the legacy of your father make it difficult for you to establish yourself as a talanted singer in your own right?

A. Yes, but it helped and it hindered at the same time. The advantages were that people were willing to listen to me and they were very curious about me. The disadvantages were that they expected me to be like him and were not as acceptable of my music as they were of his music.

Q. Has traveling affected your life in any way? Does it hinder your social life?

A. It depends on how you look at it. I've been traveling just about all my life since I was fourteen or fifteen and I'm kind of used to it. I've made my social life wherever I go. I have a choice to expand it or limit it. Of course, it has limited in the sense that I can't see friends all the time. It's a disciplinary thing and I kind of like it because I feel I'm some kind of a messenger, and messengers have to do a lot of things, go a lot of places, and I have a lot of people to get to, so I don't have enough time to socialize as much as I used to. I think the most socializing I did was right at UMass. I had a lot of fun. I did a lot of partying and up until that time, I think I was preparing myself just for something like this.

Q. While at UMass did you plan to go into a musical career?

A. No. Not at all.

Q. Were there any pressure from people to get you to follow your father's footsteps?

A. I think that the first ttime I sang in public (at UMass) that was when people started encouraging me and kind of pushing me towards that, but not necessarily to sound like him but to keep on singing.

Q. Was it an uphill climb to the top, or did your father's name make things easy for you?

A. I realize being my father's daughter a lot of doors of opportunity were opened for me and made my climb to the top a lot shorter and less difficult than anyone else. But it still was difficult because I chose not to go the same way as he had gone. I chose to do different type material and I didn't try to take advantage of his name and his success and make it on my own success. I kind of made it difficult for myself afterwards.

Q. What person or persons had the most impact on your style?

A. I guess Aretha, anywhere from Ella Fitzgerald to Aretha Franklin.

Q. After the response you got from singing Billy Holiday's "Good Morning Heartache", are you going to switch from the modern kind of singing you sing to try and revive old numbers?

A. Not right away. I sang that song because it was such a great song. I wouldn't just take any old song to revive, I'd take something that I really thought I could do something with.

Q. Since you've been to Europe and Japan on tours, have you ever thought of touring Africa, because the people there are really into Black American music and they don't have much opportunity to see them perform live?

A. I think a tour to Africa would be fabulous. I'm working on it right now. I definitely would like to go to Africa. I've always wanted to anyway. I thought that I'd never get a chance to go. I think it would be worthwhile for me and I think it would be entertaining for the Africans to get to know Black Americans a little better.

Q. As you probably know, in Africa there are a lot of problems. Have you ever thought of having a concert for them and donating the money to the Africans to help combat the problems they are facing?

A. I could do that in time. I would like to do it here in my own country. I think that's one of the purposes for people to bring music to all walks of life. I would see nothing wrong in giving a free concert at one point.

Q. Outside of being a singer and an entertainer, what are the other dimensions of Natalie Cole?

A. Depending on the weather. I don't really get a chance to do much because I'm really working so much. I lead a pretty normal life when I'm not working, I try to, right now I'm decorating my new home in Los Angeles and eventually return to graduate school for my masters in child psychology.

Q. Do you intend to return to UMass for your Masters?

A. I haven't decided yet, but UMass is high on my list. I returned there (UMass) after being a year in the University of S. California. I was planning to graduate from there but I transferred back to UMass because I love that place. I really love UMass. It made me grow up.

Q. What was the consciousness of the Black Community at UMass while you were here?

A. Well it was just starting. It was like a little baby then. Just about two hundred Blacks out of a population of over 23,000 so we had a long long way to go. We had to make people aware and pay attention to us and to let them know that we had a contribution to make just as well as everybody did and we didn't want to be treated like they were doing us a favor. Everyone has a right to education and equal opportunity. The first year I was there we started a much more solid ground for Black Studies Program and we really broke a lot of ground for a lot of things that are now happening at UMass.

Q. Are you interested in politics?

A. In a sort of a philosophical way.

Q. In what directions would you like to see your music go from here?

A. I'd like to see my music go in all directions.

Q. Have you succeeded? Can you tell from the mail you receive?

A. I get mail from kids who are like 8-9 years old going to people who are like 50-60 years old. That makes me feel good because I know that they are listening.

Q. What kind of advice would you give to a UMass student who wants to embark on a musical or entertainment career?

A. The music business is in need of a lot of new ideas and inspirational people, but it needs people who are intelligent. I would definitely advocate first of all finishing with the education no matter where you are going to school. There is really no special format into getting into the musical business. There are very many phases of it and no one really knows where they fit in. A lot of people think that they can sing and end up being great song writers and vice-versa. It's one of those kinds of businesses where you really have to feel your way through it and getting along with people is very important.

Q. How did your college education help you in show business?

A. After getting your B.A. you may want to embark on a let's say a dancing career and if it doesn't work out you always have something to fall back on. If my musical career didn't work out I'd have had something to fall back on.

Q. What impact did the two Grammy Awards have on your career?

A. It got me a lot of jobs. I was very honored and of course, I was stunned and shocked for awhile. But I realized I had to keep on going and that in this whole business it really didn't mean anything. I mean I still feel I have a long way to go. I was honored to win the awards but of ccurse it also made it harder for me because I had to work that much harder.

Q. Do you agree with the people who compare you with Aretha Franklin and Chaka Khan?

A. Yes, I do agree. I think they probably feel the same thing. They feel the same things when Chaka, Aretha, or I sing. People say that I sound like Aretha but I think that it's the same kind of 'vibes' they feel when anyone of us sings.

Q. Being Natalie Cole: the star, and the late Nat King Cole's daughter, how do you tell who your real friends are from the ones who are hangers on and take advantage of you?

A. I can't tell, it's a hassel but if I shut myself out from people in fear of being used I may deprive myself the love my real friends want to share with me.

In view of the situation the Black people find themselves today, I think that Black artist should become politically conscious and express it in their music, as their music is an ingrecible vehicle for informing the masses. Although Miss Cole is lacking this aspect of art, she's young and open and perhaps will develop also this line in the future.

Sounds in Motion: A Cultural Awakening

By VUKANI

With unbelievable grace and rhythm, the Sounds in Motion dance group brought the black experience on stage, at the Fine Arts Center on Saturday, October 30, 1976. Sounds in Motion is a New York based company formed in 1972 under the direction of Diane McIntyre. With background music from such noted stars as Duke Ellington and McCoy Tyner, the group was able to convey to the audience some of the experience of the black people in America from past to present. According to Ms. McIntyre, most of her works comes out of her own experience which is the black experience. One of the most moving pieces performed by the group was a piece called Voyage. Voyage brought onto stage the anguish faced by black people during slavery. Voyage, was choreographed by Ms. McIntyre with the help of research from books and from tales from her own family experience. Another excellent piece done by the group was Deep South Sweets with background music by Duke Ellington. This particular piece was choreographed by Ms. McIntyre for the Alvin Ailey dance group and later transferred and performed by her own group Sounds in Motion. Besides having background music from well-known artists the group makes its own music using such instruments as drums and tamborine. Through their dances the groups tells a story on stage. With their colorful costumes and rhythmic music, the dynamic group Sounds in Motion took the well turned out audience on a most unforgettable voyage.

Candidates nibble nails on eve of cliff hanger

[AP] — With only hours to go before they rest their campaigns in the hands of a closely-divided electorate, President Ford and Jimmy Carter sought yesterday to sway the big, pivotal states that will make or break a President in tomorrow's election.

Ford campaigned in the rain in upstate New York, then in the Long Island suburbs, asking voters for a mandate to continue the administration he began by appointment 27 months ago.

In person and on television, Carter worked in Texas, then in California. Acknowledging that the election is razor-close now, he declared that the nation needs change only he can bring.

Midsummer's runaway leader in the public opinion polls, Carter is now rated barely ahead of Ford in two late surveys of voter opinion by margins so slender that both said the election could go either way.

Those numbers added to the tension and the urgency as Ford and Carter worked where the electoral votes are — 41 in New York, 26 in Texas, 43 in California.

Ford was moving last night to Canton, Ohio, then, on election eve, to Akron and home to Michigan, for appearances near Detroit and in Grand Rapids.

Carter flew from Fort Worth to San Francisco and Sacramento. He is to campaign on today in Los Angeles, then plans to meet his vice presidential running mate, Sen. Walter F. Mondale, at a rally in Flint, Mich., for a final bid to pry away Ford's own state. Then he goes home to Plains, Ga., to await the outcome.

It will take 270 electoral votes to elect a President tomorrow. In the final two days of the campaign, Carter and Ford were appearing in six states which among them have 194 electoral votes to offer.

Ford and Carter were not the only candidates laboring toward tomorrow's decision. The voters who chose a President also will elect a new Congress, 14 governors, and thousands of local officers. Nor are Ford and Carter the only candidates for the White House; there are minor party and independent entries, too. Most important to the outcome is Eugene J. McCarthy, the former Democratic senator, whose spot on the ballot in 29 states could pull away votes enough to tip the outcome from Carter to Ford in close contests.

In the House, where Democrats now rule 290 to 145, the election is not likely to produce a major shift in the party lineup. Democrats concede a probable Republican gain of 10 or 12 seats. Republicans hope to at least double that. Either way, the new House will be solidly in Democratic hands.

The same is true of the Senate, now Democratic by a 62-38 margin. There are 33 Senate elections on Tuesday, and when all the votes are in, the Democrats may gain a seat or two.

There are now 36 Democratic governors, 13 Republicans and one independent. That party lineup is not likely to change much, either.

The shift in power, if one comes, will be at the top of the ticket, and there, the most recent public opinion polls are a virtual tie.

A New York Times-CBS survey published Saturday night said Carter was just ahead, but that his lead was within the 2.5 per cent margin of error — which means that Ford could, in fact, be the narrow leader. The Times did not publish figures on total Ford and Carter support.

A Louis Harris survey conducted for ABC News said Carter led Ford 45 per cent to 44 per cent.

Ford attended a Roman Catholic mass in Buffalo, N.Y., Sunday; Carter went to the University Baptist Church in Fort Worth, Tex.

Services at Plains Baptist Church, where Carter is a member, were canceled after a black minister from Albany, Ga., said he was coming to seek membership in the church. While blacks have attended services there, a 1965 decision of the congregation bars blacks and civil rights agitators from membership.

Carter and his family voted against that church resolution.

Carter said in Forth Worth he had some advance knowledge of a problem concerning the Plains church but did not know all the details.

Carter said he knew that his pastor, The Rev. Bruce Edwards, agreed with him. The Rev. Mr. Edwards said it would be unusual for the Plains church to accept a nonresident as a member, and also questioned why the minister of another church would seek to join it.

He said the membership application by the Rev. Clennon King, of the nondenominational Divine Mission Church in Albany, Ga., was an attempt by Carter's enemies to "sabotage his campaign."

King has run for a variety of political offices, and once said he was seeking asylum in Jamaica because of racial discrimination in the United States.

At St. Stanislaus Church, in a Polish-American area of Buffalo, Ford heard a Roman Catholic sermon against abortion, an issue on which some Catholics have criticized Carter for refusing to support a constitutional amendment to ban the practice.

Carter, whose campaign is broadcasting radio advertisments urging Southerners not to "let the Washington polls keep one of our own out of the White House," spent much of his campaign yesterday trying to solidify his position in the biggest of Southern states.

At a breakfast with Dalls Democrats and a box chicken lunch at Fort Worth, he urged out the vote.

The former Georgia governor also made a point of praising the late President Lyndon B. Johnson, saying at one point that he hoped to carry on in the Johnson tradition.

In that troublesome Playboy interview, Carter had said that Johnson and Richard M. Nixon both were guilty of "lying, cheating and distorting the truth." He apologized when it was published, and said Saturday night that the comment about Johnson was the biggest mistake of his campaign.

Luci Nugent, daughter of the late President, appeared with Carter at his windup rally in Fort Worth.

Both Ford and Carter programmed election-eve appearances on nationwide television.

Each candidate purchased a half-hour on each of the three major networks.

Bellotti lays last ruling to rest

BOSTON [AP] — Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti has laid to rest one of the last rulings of former Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson to limit the pay of a rehired public retiree.

Bellotti sustained his predecessor, former Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, who reversed Richardson in 1973 and declared the retiree is entitled to a full salary plus a full pension.

The issue involves scores of public employes at every level of government who can now be recalled for 90 work days per year.

Some have taken pensions and have returned to duty for a limited period. During that work time they are able to net briefly more money than if they had not retired.

While retires in executive and legislative branches can come back at full pay, retired superior and probate court judges can only receive about one-quarter pay, if recalled to fulltime service, a source reported.

Bellotti's opinion was directed to Comptroller Laurence D. Fitzmaurice who had questioned the Quinn interpretation negating Richardson's ruling.

The Richardson decision was dated Jan. 10, 1969, just before he left for a multi-cabinet role in the Nixon administration.

He had defeated Bellotti for the attorney general's job at the 1966 election in the most rugged and personal contest the state had witnessed in decades.

The question was whether a recalled retiree would earn — during an 18-week work period — just the difference between the pension and the current pay or the current pay plus the pension.

Bellotti said he concurred with Quinn's rationale and cited this example: "An individual receiving a salary of $403.95 per week and a pension of $177.58 per week would receive the sum of the two, namely $581.53 per week" subject to the statutory ceiling.

In this instance, according to a fiscal source, the individual could earn $7,300 in his recall period. Under the discarded Richardson ruling, the individual would be paid $226.37 per week — the difference between the pension and salary — for a total extra income of about $4,000.

Carter wins in straw

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. [AP] — Jimmy Carter beat President Ford in a straw vote of more than 850,000 Americans — none of whom will cast ballots in tomorrow's election.

The voters, school children between the ages of 5 and 15, are readers of "My Weekly Reader" and other student publications who clipped and sent in the ballots from Sept. 22 to Oct. 15.

The kids gave Carter 518,055 votes, or 61 per cent, compared with 332,973, or 39 per cent, for Ford, according to the results announced yesterday by Xerox Education Publications.

New insurance program begins, good driving in Mass. pays

BOSTON [AP] — Beginning today, it will pay to be a good driver in Massachusetts.

The new auto insurance program, penalizing bad drivers by boosting insurance premiums, kicks off this week in a state where drivers have long been rated among the nation's worst.

Under the new rating plan, a motorist convicted of drunken driving will pay $200 more when he renews his insurance policy. It will cost an extra $100 for operating negligently and an additional $25 if the driver has been caught speeding or running red lights.

On the other hand, a driver whose record, beginning today, is free of violations or accidents, will pay lower rates.

Insurance executives have not said exactly how much they will save.

The actual amount will vary, depending on how good — or bad — the state's 2.8 million registered motorists are.

A firm will add surcharges for violations and accidents to the poor drivers' premiums, and then it will split the revenue raised by the surcharges to lower the premiums for good drivers. The cut in rates is not expected until 1978.

The new Merit Rating Board, operating under the Registry of Motor Vehicles, will start work today, keeping dossiers on drivers responsible for motor vehicle violations and accidents.

In negligence cases, motorists can argue an insurance company's decision before the Appeals Board of the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

The merit rating system is the first part of an insurance package signed into law Aug. 4.

On Jan. 1, several other provisions will take effect, including allowing insurance companies to set their own rates, pending state review; permitting companies to file for rate increases separately instead of simultaneously and repealing the no-fault property damage clause.

"Unfortunately, the effects will be virtually insignificant for the first two years," explained Rep. Raymond M. LaFontaine, (D-Gardner). "It will take time for the bad motorists to react to a premium surcharge."

Lemuel Devers, president of the Massachusetts Auto Rating Bureau, said the program was "a restribution of losses for the company.

"As such, I don't think it is very likely to lower rates for all drivers."

Will Vermont join in betting?

MONTPELIER, Vt. [AP] — Do Vermonters want to join their betting neighbors in the lottery business? The state legislature finds out tomorrow.

Following eight years of fruitless legislative debate, proponents of a state lottery finally succeeded this year in convincing lawmakers to put the question to voters in a non-binding referendum.

Polls conducted in the border towns of Hartford and Bennington indicate strong support for state-run money games. But several churches recently urged their congregations to vote "no."

While the general election referendum is only advisory, legislative leaders predict that most lawmakers will abide by the outcome of tomorrow's referendum.

In annual March Town Meeting Day surveys of key issues, conducted in several Vermont towns, the lottery received 60 per cent support of those polled the last two years.

But since then, there have been reports of lower-than-projected revenues from lotteries in other states. And Vermont religious organizations have taken stands against any kind of legalized betting.

Deacon cancels services, locks church doors on blacks

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — The deacons of Jimmy Carter's hometown Baptist church canceled services yesterday and locked the doors rather than admit four blacks, one of whom planned to challenge the church's white-only membership policy.

Carter, campaigning in Texas, said he hopes the church will reverse its stand. His mother told UPI in Washington she will quit the church if it persists in barring all blacks, but she labeled yesterday's incident a political effort to embarrass her son.

Later state Sen. Hugh Carter, clerk of the church and Carter's cousin, said official minutes of an Aug. 15, 1965, deacons' meeting recorded the rule as stating: "The ushers refuse to admit any Negroes or other civil rights agitators to all worship services in this church."

The church minister, the Rev. Bruce Edwards, said he opposed the deacons' action. He touched off an argument with other church members by quoting the rule on which the action was based on barring "all niggers and civil rights agitators."

Edwards, who has been in his post for just two years, said he was told the rule read "niggers."

Standing before the locked doors of the Plains Baptist Church, Edwards said he had urged the deacons to let the Rev. Clennon King of Albany, Ga., and three other blacks attend Sunday services where King planned to try to join the church.

King ran for president in 1960 on the Afro-American ticket, ran again for president in 1972 as an independent, managed a 1970 gubernatorial campaign by his brother against Jimmy Carter and former Gov. Carl Sanders, and quit his brother's campaign staff to run for governor himself as Republican.

Edwards suggested the timing of the membership rule challenge 48 hours before election day was "Republican politics" and "an attempt by the enemies of Gov. Carter to sabotage his campaign."

Deacon Frank Williams said of the incident: "I don't know who's behind it but someone is trying to make it a political football, and we're sick of it."

In Texas, where he attended a Baptist service in Forth Worth yesterday, Carter told reporters:

"The only thing I know is that our church for many years has accepted any worshippers who came there and my own deep belief is that anyone who lives in our community and who wants to be a member of our church, regardless of race, ought to be admitted.

"I know the pastor agrees with me, and I hope this will be the outcome of the problem in Plains."

The candidate's mother "Miss Lillian" Carter, was asked in Washington if she would remain in the church if membership was denied solely because of race.

"If it happens that no black can join, no matter who it is, then I will drop out of the church," she said.

"But she described King as "an activist.... into every little thing in politics," and said she "certainly" felt the timing of his bid for church membership was politically motivated.

Two-lane N.H. roadway

WATERVILLE VALLEY, N.H. [AP] — The Society for the Protection of New Hampshire Forests has passed a resolution calling for construction of a two-lane "roadway" through Franconia Notch.

The resolution, passed by unanimous voice vote yesterday at the Society's annual convention, said it wants to see the roadway primarily two lanes with additional lanes "kept to an absolute minimum in keeping with the character of the area."

The resolution originally had endorsed a two lane "parkway" but then the word "roadway" was substituted.

Supporters of the new version claim a "roadway" is essentially the current road with some refinements. They say a "parkway" would entail considerable more construction.

District voters will decide racing question

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [AP] — In Hampden, Hampshire and Franklin counties of western Massachusetts, voters will have an extra question on their ballots when they go to the polls tomorrow — referendum question 10, asking whether they support a harness racing operation in the region.

The Massachusetts legislature is requiring approval of the referendum before further consideration of harness racing proposals.

Three possible sites have been mentioned frequently for the additional racing. It could mean additional racing. It could mean additional tax revenue for the state and is likely to draw gambling dollars now flowing to racing operations in Vermont, New Hampshire and Connecticut.

The legislature tentatively has authorized the state Racing Commission to award 60 racing dates in western Massachusetts. All available dates now are in use at the Foxboro Raceway. However, there are limited days for thoroughbred racing each fall during some county fairs.

The Eastern States Exposition grounds in West Springfield, an unused and rundown track in Agawam and the three county fair grounds in Northampton have been considered likely sites.

Northampton is in Hampshire County. Agawam and West Springfield both are in Hampden County, close to the densely populated Springfield area.

Voters in Franklin County also will see the question on their ballots, but no racing site in Franklin County has been discussed.

Man held on rape charge

LAWRENCE, Mass. [AP] — A Providence man, being held on charges of sexually assaulting two youths and murdering another, has been charged by Lawrence police with raping two Massachusetts boys.

Detectives here said yesterday they will seek a governor's warrant to bring Wayne Chapman, 29, to Massachusetts to face the rape charges.

Chapman has been questioned in connection with the unsolved disappearances of several New England children.

The Providence resident was ordered held without bail Friday night at Adult Correctional Institutions in Cranston, R.I., on fugitive charges in the rape case.

He has already been charged with murder in the 1974 death of 5-year-old David Louison of Brockton. A massive search for the boy two years ago involved 200 National Guardsmen and 40 Air Force volunteers.

"We have been to Providence several times," a Lawrence detective said. "We want to bring him back to Massachusetts."

Rizzo and the Philly recall

PHILADELPHIA [LNS] — A "cradle of democracy" is ruled by a law-and-order political boss who's nearly toppled by a broadbased recall campaign that dies in a widely-suspected court decision — the "Bicentennial City" of Philadelphia in 1976 is full of compelling ironies.

As the nation's fourth largest city, Philadelphia is plagued by a catalog of problems common to most large U.S. cities, particularly those in the old industrial northeast.

Despite the economic benefits of a diversified industrial base, much of Philadelphia's industry has moved away. Philco color TV assembly, for instance, is now located in Brazil, and other manufacturing has moved to the south and southwestern U.S., where labor is cheaper. In the three years prior to the 1974 economic crisis, 90,000 Philadelphians — or 10 per cent of the work force — lost their jobs. Official unemployment in the city is now between 8 and 10 per cent.

In an effort to counter this flight of industry and monied-residents to greener pastures, Philadelphia corporate interests designed a city "Renaissance" in the 1950's and 60's. The Greater Philadelphia Movement — made up of bank and corporation executives, powerful lawyers and the Philadelphia Social Register patricians — spearheaded the effort to transform center city and adjacent areas into wealthy neighborhoods and tourist attractions.

While business and city government channel funds into these downtown face-lifting problems, they are forcing the deterioration of many of Philadelphia's poor and working class neighborhoods. An assessment of the city housing situation in 1972 found 65,000 substandard housing units. And bank redlining and disinvestment policies have led to the extensive abandonment of buildings by landlords.

The city is one of close neighborhood indentification. Its one-third black population lives primarily in West Philadelphia (mostly working class) and North Philadelphia (mostly poor). The Northeast accounts for about a half of the city's population and includes white working class, Jewish, Eastern European and Northern European ethnic populations. The city also has a Spanish-speaking population of at least 10,000 and a large Italian community living mainly in South Philadelphia.

Major Frank Rizzo himself grew up in South Philadelphia, and first gained a reputation as a tough guy while on the Philadelphia police force. His promotion to Police Commissioner in 1967 helped win a mayoral election, and he became mayor himself in 1971, re-elected in '75 for another four years.

Rizzo heads a strong Democratic Party machine and a strong mayor-weak city council government structure organized under the 1951 Home Rule Charter. According to Charter rules, the mayor appoints a civil service commission which in turn appoints a Personnel Director to supervise the civil service system. This allows the mayor to load the city payroll with patronage positions, and Rizzo is notorious for this. The mayor also appoints the city's Director of Finance, Managing Director, City Representative, City Solicitor and members of the City Planning Commission, Parking Authority, Housing Authority, Redevelopment Authority and 32 independent boards.

RIZZO figh
PULL

A Rizzo campaign poster (LNS Womens' Graphics).

Because of his political machine and his emphasis on police, Rizzo is often compared to Chicago's Mayor Richard Daley, although he lacks the political polish and diplomacy of the Chicago boss. Soon after his re-election as mayor, for instance, Rizzo is widely quoted as having bragged that he would "make Attilla the Hun look like a faggot."

Fanning the Flames and Birth of the Recall

On July 4th, the ironies of the Bicentennial City of Brotherly Love were not lost on the 50,000 people who had gathered to take the United States to task.

Elaine Brown, who heads the Black Panther Party and was raised in Philadelphia, spoke eloquently, passionately of friends from her youth who were "dead and dying from being born in North Philadelphia," a city where "little has changed except that now an ex-numbers runner from South Philadelphia is mayor."

Anger at Rizzo had reached far beyond the national coalition of progressive and radicals that Brown was addressing, or the black community that greeted the Anti-Bicentennial demonstrators with such enthusiasm.

Just two weeks earlier, the Rizzo Recall Committee had turned in the signatures of 210,000 Philadelphians calling for a recall vote in the November 2 election. 145,448 signatures were required by law, and 160,000 were eventually ruled valid, despite Rizzo's attempts to kill the recall by requiring that all names be signed precisely as they had been in voting records.

It was the first time in the history of Philadelphia that the people had attempted to recall a mayor. On the leadership level, the effort included a number of Rizzo's old political enemies, as Rizzo himself repeatedly pointed out during the campaign.

But it also drew upon a wide spectrum of the city's population, including the 2,300 people of mixed ages, race and political experience who circulated petitions at work, shopping centers and door-to-door.

Three majors incidents catalyzed the anger against Rizzo. One was his announcement on February 17, 1976 that Philadelphia General Hospital (PGH) would be closed within the year and a new hotel complex built on the site.

As the city's only municipal hospital, PGH primarily served the black community. Recall field director Richard Chapman recounts the incident: "PGH was the subject of some scathing articles in one of the newspapers revealing how badly run it was and how lousy the medical care was. And Rizzo's response was, 'Well, to hell with you, I'll close it.' "

Rizzo claims that expanded clinics and the city's other hospitals will absorb the 60,000 West Philadelphia patients served by PGH each year. But some of those hospitals have already said they will refuse to take the patients. And the city government makes no mention of PGH services offered nowhere else in the city: a rape center, a prisoners' ward, detoxification and treatment programs for addicts and alcoholics, the child abuse program, and the program for drug-addicted pregnant women.

The announced closing of PGH enraged hospital employees and the black community whose deep distrust of Rizzo dates back to the long hot summers of the 60's when he was known as a cop who personally enjoyed beating black people.

Another issue that fanned the anti-Rizzo flames was the March 19 twelve-hour blockade of the Philadelphia Inquirer,

"The campaign is a classic study of what happens when a challenger tries to unseat an entrenched incumbent. McColgan has issued specific position papers and is hitting Conte's voting record hard, claiming the Congressman is anti-consumer, pro-big business and serving the interests of special interest groups rather than the interests of his constituents."

Guerrillas hit tourist motel

VICTORIA FALLS, Rhodesia [UPI] — Rhodesian security forces yesterday reported a guerrilla attack on a tourist motel in this town on the Zambian border in one of the most daring insurgent operations of the Rhodesian war.

A government communique said one white Rhodesian immigration official was killed and two other persons were wounded.

The guerrillas threw grenades, opened fire with a mortar and fired about 300 rounds of automatic weapons fire in the Saturday night attack on the Peters Motel.

A communique in Salisbury reported a Rhodesian army "hot pursuit" operation against guerrilla bases inside Mozambique on Rhodesia's eastern border. Troops killed 12 guerrillas and two blacks who broke a curfew, the report said, and the guerrillas killed a black Rhodesian official.

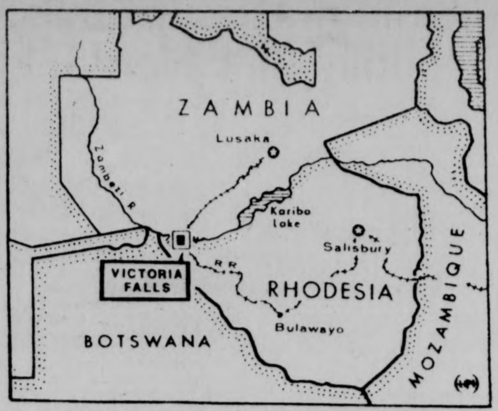
The communique also reported three whites died in southwestern Rhodesia, but there were no details.

The motel attack was one of the boldest of the war and the first time guerrillas had struck so close to the center of a town.

The motel is about a mile from the center of Victoria Falls.

Military sources said the attackers probably come from Zambia and crossed the Zambezi River at a shallow point upstream from Victoria Falls, one of the world's most spectacular cataracts and among Africa's major tourist attractions.

Motel manager Freddie Pacella said the attack began at 9:45 p.m. and lasted eight minutes.



VICTORIA FALLS, Rhodesia: Rhodesian security forces reported yesterday a guerrilla attack on a tourist motel in this town on the Zambian border in one of the most daring insurgent operations of the Rhodesian war. A government communique said one white Rhodesian immigration official was killed and two other persons were wounded. (UPI)

Weather hampers disaster relief try

JAKARTA, Indonesia [UPI] — Bad weather hampered efforts yesterday to bring disaster relief to the primitive mountain tribesmen of West Irian, rocked by the second major earthquake in four months.

Missionary workers, who are among the few outsiders in touch with the tribes in the remote area 3,000 miles west of Indonesia's main island of Java, said at least 50 persons died in Friday's quake.

They said rescuers feared the death toll may reach 100 when rubble is cleared from the primitive settlements of Bime and Eipomek, the most severely damaged area in the mountains of West Irian, which forms the western part of New Guinea.

The Eipomek hamlet suffered heavy damage June 25 in the first earthquake, in which 433 persons were killed and 3,000 missing.

The latest quake, which registered 7 on the open — ended Richter scale, completed the destruction of the hamlet but was believed to have caused comparatively fewer deaths there.

The worst hit area this time — in terms of loss of lives — was Bime, which had become a refugee center after the June disaster. There was no specific report on the casualty toll, however.

Both Eipomek and Bime are situated at 5,400 feet above sea level on the slopes of the snow-capped Jayawijaya Mountains.

Exposure to cold weather already had caused many deaths from influenza and pneumonia among the tribesmen who fled their homes after the June quake.

Rescuers were battling the bad weather and difficult terrain yesterday to clear stricken areas and bring relief supplies to the survivors.

No word has been received on the fate of three West German researchers working in the area at the time of the earthquake.

In Thailand—

Regime tightens on Vietnamese

NONG KHAI, Thailand [AP] — The new martial law regime is cracking down on the large Vietnamese community in Thailand.

It claims the actions are designed to control areas of potential Communist subversion.

"It looks like we Vietnamese will have no more freedom in this country," said one of the nearly 100 Vietnamese arrested in Nong Khai. "The government is getting tougher and tougher on us."

Police here say they have seized about 3,000 documents they described as Communist in nature, pictures of the late President Ho Chi Minh of North Vietnam and private correspondence between Vietnamese in Thailand and Vietnam.

Nong Khai, a town of about 50,000 people, is stirring with border patrol police, special forces units and troops of the Thai army's 3rd division. Searches of Vietnamese homes are every day occurrences.

With more than 4,000 to 5,000 old-time Vietnamese residents and 16,000 refugees from Communist-governed Laos across the Mekong River from here, the area is considered by Thai authorities a potential hotbed of Communist subversion.

There is another reason for increased police and army surveillance in Nong Khai, a Mekong River crossing point into Laos. The provincial governor says that more than 300 leftist Thai students, politicians and Vietnamese subversives have fled to Laos since the military took power in Thailand in a coup Oct. 6.

Some Thais and Vietnamese confided that a few of their friends had crossed the half-mile-wide Mekong since the military seized power and began a sweep of what it considers potential subversives.

"I was sitting in my house. Suddenly three policemen came in and began searching through every room," said the Vietnamese prisoner, Tran Van Linh, in an interview in jail. "They took portraits off the wall and private correspondence with friends of mine in Hanoi. Of course I have friends in Vietnam, but I'm not a subversive."

Linh, a merchant who has lived in Thailand for 19 years, said he is ready to return to Vietnam if Hanoi and Bangkok reached an agreement.

Thailand's Vietnamese minority, living chiefly in the northeast and numbering some 60,000, has been a source of tension between Vietnam and Thailand since the early 1950s, when thousands fled their homeland in the wake of the French-Indochina war.

Numerous efforts at repatriation have proved fruitless. With the growth of Thailand's Communist insurgency, the economically influential Vietnamese community has been regarded by many as a breeding ground for guerrillas and a channel for Hanoi's support of the rebellion.

Contact attempt fails; Houdini still silent

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. [UPI] — Attempts to make contact with Harry Houdini, the famed escape artist who died exactly a half-century ago - on Oct. 31, 1926, have failed again.

Halloween eve has become the established time to try to contact Houdini in the great beyond and the latest attempt was held Saturday at the museum bearing his name in this famed resort city. Attending were luminaries from the world of magic and others, surrounded by genuine Houdini artifacts.

Joanna Honsberger, a local medium, who bills herself as the White Witch of Niagara, sat down with 11 guests. A 13th chair was left vacant for Houdini.

It stayed that way.

The participants chatted for 36 minutes in a brightly lit room, but in the end nothing had happened — no sign or manifestation of any kind from the master of escape.

Before his death, Houdini worked out a system with his friend, Joseph Dunninger. The famous mentalist entertainer, to insure against fakery in attempts to communicate with him after his death.

Houdini left a coded message with Dunninger, saying that after he died he would try to communicate in code.

The message, preserved in the museum after Dunninger's death last year, was on the seance table.

Also on the table were four sets of handcuffs from celebrated Houdini escapes, a needled trick and other items aimed at evoking a response from beyond the grave.

Among those joining Miss Honsberger were Dunninger's widow and Walter Gibson, a friend of Houdini and creator of the old radio series. "The Shadow," and Milbourne Christopher, a biographer of Houdini and a magician himself.

During the last Houdini seance in Niagara Falls two years ago, a vase toppled from a shelf and several books fell. But there was some skepticism about the cause of those incidents.

As for Saturday night's seance, Christopher wasn't too disappointed.

"As far as I'm concerned," he said, "Houdini never went away."

Form 1040: It's all in the game

ST. PUAL [UPI[— For all those for Scrooge for President, there is a new game called Form 1040.

It's a five-dice game based upon your ability and luck in beating the income tax and the form you have to fill out to satisfy the tax requirements of the Internal Revenue Service. One of the dice is stamped "IRS" — and that's the baddie.

Depending upon the roll of the dice - and your judgment - you can become chairman of the board or you can end up as office boy. You can win bonuses, stock options, profit sharing, capital gains and big tax refunds.

You also can go through a tax audit that could cost 10 per cent of your income.

The game is an executive give away - not on the retail market - invented by Oliver and Bob Washburn of Washburn Laboratories, St. Paul. Bob Washburn's 10-year-old son, a game nut, had a lot to do with the game.

Scoring sheets and instructions are included in the kit; the instructions are almost as complicated as the tax forms themselves.

For instance:

"STOCK OPTION $50,000: The player tries to roll a 1-2-3 on any single cast. He may roll the dice until he succeeds or the IRS shows up. If successful, he scores $50,000. If the IRS shows up his STOCK OPTION is disallowed and he must enter zero in this category."

The player with the highest take home pay is elected Chairman of the Board and wins.

Conference wants more sex study

MONTREAL [UPI] — The fourth International Congress of Sexology ended Sunday with a call from organizers for a more "philosophical" investigation into the fledgling study of human sexuality.

"Even though we have a lot of communication into the objective research of sexuality, at a subsequent conference we should look for a more reflective type of research," said organizer Claude Crepault at a news conference.

"We have to go beneath the objective research," said Crepault, head of the Sexology Department at the University of Quebec at Montreal, which hosted the 23-nation, 4-day gathering.

He said there had been a lack of "philosophical" considerations at the conference.

"For example," said his colleague Dr. Jules Bureau, "in sexology are we trying to make people conform more to society or permit them to be more themselves."

from our perspective

Our choice... with reservations

Like most of the electorate, we are uninspired by the offering of presidential candidates in tomorrow's general election.

But if you skim off all the hype about personalities and family and religious backgrounds, distinct differences become visible in the policies the two major candidates have prescribed for the country. These policies, since they are attempts to solve some of the ills of this country, deserve our attention.

In fiscal matters, Jimmy Carter wants to reduce unemployment, tax the rich more and the poor less. Gerald Ford, on the other hand, sees inflation as the main enemy, is hostile to the creation of public sector jobs and believes that it is the middle class who need tax relief.

The two major candidates have different solutions to energy and environmental problems. Ford would allow oil companies to operate with almost no government regulation; Carter advocates strong regulation. On the nuclear power issue, Ford promises us a continued move in the direction of more nuclear plants, while Carter stresses the need for more safeguards and is even rumored to be considering shelving nuke plant

Unfortunately, neither candidate supports busing for school desegregation. However, Ford has unleashed the Justice Department into the court suits limiting busing. Carter has vowed he would never meddle in desegregation programs in favor of natural energy development (i.e., wind and solar power). For this stand, Carter has won the conditional endorsement of Ralph Nader. Sacrificing environmental quality consistently in the interest of industrial development, Ford has vetoed legislation that would have regulated strip mining, supported a delay in auto pullution standards enforcement and opposed measures limiting industrial pollution. Carter's record as Governor of Georgia reflects great stress on protecting the environment.

Carter and Ford differ sharply in several areas where there is or would be a major social impact. A national health care insurance system is favored by Carter and opposed by Ford. Ford has tried to hike the price of food stamps and tighten eligibility requirements for them. Carter has supported a California referendum giving permanent bargaining rights to farm workers.

Carter's platform is more generous than Ford's in terms of public education appropriations, price supports to farmers and aid to cities. Ford wants to increase the Pentagon's budget; Carter says he would shave at least $5 billion from defense appropriations.

Are Carter's positions nothing more than deceptive political rhetoric? We don't know.

But we do know that Carter's greatest asset in his campaign is his opponent - Gerry Ford.

After Ford tried to squash the Watergate investigation, after he defended Richard Nixon almost until the last hour, and after he pardoned this criminal in one of his first acts in the Oval Office, there is no question that Ford represents the most corrupt political administration in the history of modern America.

Aside from this corruption, Ford has told New York City to drop dead by denying them financial assistance before finally providing a loan at twice the interest rate the U.S. charges to the Zaire dictatorship. He has vetoed 66 bills, most of them remedies creating jobs, helping cities, providing day care funds. He has prosecuted policies of economic ruin enlarging the already vast pools of unemployed labor. He has kept the country divided by not declaring amnesty.

And now Ford has picked Robert Dole, a frightening reincarnation of Tricky Dick, to be a heart-beat away from the presidency.

The most recent polls show Ford is neck and neck with Carter. So we are faced with this political reality: A vote for one of the minority party candidates or abstaining from voting can only be construed to be a vote for Ford.

Remember, Richard Nixon was elected in 1968 with a plurality of less than one per cent.

To be sure, we have grave reservations with Jimmy Carter. But he may be the only one today who can get this country back to work, clean up the environment and cities, and put us on the road to the day when all people have an opportunity for a decent standard of living.

We urge you to go to the polls tomorrow and vote for Jimmy Carter for President of the United States.

How the bottle bill will help

By SUE KAPLAN AND PAT BAKER

It has always been difficult to qualitatively measure the social costs of litter and qualitatively measure the benefits of conservation. Energy waste and environmental destruction are irrecoverable losses. Let's not be fooled by the bottle and canning companies that seek to increase these social costs by encouraging a no-deposit, no-return attitude by society towards our environment.

In May, 1974, John Quailes of the Environmental Protection Agency testified that "discarded beverage containers were estimated to comprise 19.7 per cent of highway litter by item and between 54 and 70 per cent by volume." These bottles and cans have become an eyesore to our natural landscape and a sad testimony to the priorities of our society.

Consumers have become the natural garbage disposals for industry. Not, it is the consumer who, upon littering, (if caught) must pay the penalty for the disposable container and not the manufacturer who provided no alternative.

In Oregon and Vermont, the two states that have passed similar laws, the volume of littered containers has decreased 83 per cent and 76 per cent respectively. The public's tab for litter collection is down as well: Vermont's annual state litter bill is decreased $40,000 upon passage of the legislation. With litter pick-up costing Mass. over $3,000,000 per year, the tax savings would be significant. This savings becomes even more attractive when we realize the load that it would take off sanitary landfills (dumps).

Both natural and people energy are used in the production and pick-up of disposable bottles and cans. Mr. Quailes of the EPA documented that "studied show, taking into account the energy demands of both manufacturing and refilling process, a refillable bottle making 5 trips has been found to use one-half less energy than that required merely to produce one non-refillable glass or aluminum container. This is significant energy savings when we realize that most returnable bottles make upwards of 10 trips, and 25 to 30 trips is not usual". Without the Bottle Bill, statistics show that "by 1980, the 55.7 billion figure for containers consumed is expected to rise 80 billion units."

ON NOVEMBE
THERE'LL BE A ECONOMICS
Yes

Some people argue that the price of liquid refreshments will soar with the bottle bill proposal. But note: In a throwaway system, most of your money is spent on the container. The rest is divided between the cost of the beverage and the profit for the industry. In a returnable system, the container and the decreased energy use by the manufacturer will mean greater savings than any increased cost in handling. In Oregon, prices did not increase any more than what was expected due to inflation.

Anti-bottle bill people argue that banning returnables will cause unemployment and be bad for the economy. Let's get the facts straight. Assuming for a moment that there will be any unemployment, the short-term loss of jobs has to be weighed against the other social costs; the direct cost to the consumer upon purchasing the throw-away containers, the indirect costs in the form of taxes for picking up and disposing of these throwaway containers (which means both state workers and sanitary landfills), and the additional and unnecessary expenditure of energy and natural resources to manufacture these containers.

In any case, the facts show that there will be a job increase. The Federal Reserve Bank conducted a study which concluded that between 87 and 1,380 jobs with an increased yearly payroll of between $900,000 and 1,000,000 would be created by passage of the Bill. The returnable bottle involves a labor-intensive process as opposed to an energy-intensive process of the throwaway system.

Interestingly enough, ever since the throwaway has appeared, hundreds of local bottlers and brewers have gone out of business in Massachusetts and have had to lay-off their employees. The present system is highly centralized through a few large breweries and bottlers - most are out of state. Note these facts: In 1948 there were 6,359 people employed in 221 beverage firms in Mass., in Jan. 1975 only 3,637 worked in 91 firms. At this present time, the state has only three can manufacturing plants, two bottle manufacturing plants and one brewery. Since 1975, a can manufacturing plant employing 350 people closed in Needham has announced that it will close before the end of the year.

People individually have to weigh the pleasure or (marginal utility) of throwing away a container with the pleasure of a clean, beautiful environment, more energy to heat homes, offices, etc., and more jobs for their communities. A national survey taken by the Opinion Research Corporation in Princeton, N.J. noted that "60 - 70 per cent of the U.S. population would support legislation to ban non-returnables." They have obviously sifted the truths from the propaganda, join them - vote tomorrow for the Bottle Bill.

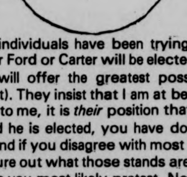
Responsible abstention

If there is one thing this great country has to offer its citizens it is "the lesser of two evils." We may choose between inflation and unemployment, cold houses and pollution, poverty and taxes, "The Blue Knight" and "Charlie's Angels", staying in school and being unemployed, Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. Well to tell the truth, I've grown rather sick of forever selecting one of two alternatives when I find both of them immensely distasteful. So this year I am taking the third alternative and refusing to make the choice at all.

This is the first election of any sort that I am eligible to vote in, and it irks me not a little that I must be faced with such an extraordinarily rotten choice of presidential candidates my first time out. And there simply comes a point where I am no longer willing to sacrifice my political principles and vote for the lesser of the two very evils.



Many well-meaning individuals have been trying to convince me that since it is fact that either Ford or Carter will be elected, it is my obligation to choose the one who will offer the greatest possibility for progressive change (which I support). They insist that I am at best irresponsible for not making the choice. But to me, it is their position that is irresponsible. For if you vote for Carter and he is elected, you have done nothing more than legitimize his actions. And if you disagree with most of his stands on issues — if indeed you can figure out what those stands are — your vote implies a tacit support for actions you most likely protest. Now that is irresponsible.

In democratic societies elections are held to maintain the input and support of the masses. When the political system fails to maintain that support, it is time for a new system. We cannot possibly show our displeasure with the two-party status quo by voting for its candidates — we merely lend it further credibility, credibility it does not deserve.

I am consequently left with a final decision — whether to register my protest by voting for a candidate sure to lose, or not to vote at all. This is a difficult choice, but I have opted for the second alternative. Perhaps if I felt very strongly about one of the "alternative" candidates, I would vote for her or him, but I don't. Thus it seems that the most powerful statement of protest I could make would be to join the 50-plus per cent of the eligible voters in this country who are not going to vote for any presidential candidate.

> We cannot possibly show our displeasure with the two-party status quo by voting for its candidates — we merely lend it further credibility, credibility it does not deserve.

It has been said that voter apathy is a healthy sign, for people are finally recognizing the severe inadequacy of our present system. It is not, however, out of apathy that I refuse to vote for president, but rather out of political awareness, I would like to think. And by no means am I advocating abstention from all voting. There are numerous crucial issues to be decided upon in this election, especially in Massachusetts where we have important referendum questions on the ballot.

I urge any politically 'in-tune' people who are disenchanted with Ford and Carter to "ask for the alternative," instead of imbibing the addictive two-party narcotic we have been born and raised on. I have deliberately avoided going through the tired old comparison of the two major candidates here — I know we've all suffered enough of that. I would hope, though, that I have exposed some of the folly involved in voting for "the lesser of two evils." Don't we deserve better?

Problem of communication

To the Editor:

We are writing in response to the article, "Which Direction Sister," submitted by Nasser Ega, on Friday the 22nd of October.

The basic problem between black men and black women is caused by lack of communication, which leads to actions based upon assumptions and previous experiences. We feel for this reason neither one of you acted incorrectly. Nasser, you were victimized by the black woman because of the white woman's implied familiarity towards you. The black woman assumed that you had an ongoing relationship with the white woman, and therefore snubbed you. We too would have reacted in a similar manner.

There is a definite lack of what we'd call eligible black men, those not obsessed with preserving the male image. What are we to look for in an alternative relationship, if eligible black men are involved with white women and seem uninterested in black women? For us, the white male is one potential alternative; although the majority seem to be fearful about relationships with black women. Are there suggestions? We urge response from both the Third World and white populations.

Get behind Carter and Mondale

By SPENCER VIBBERT

It is, I suppose, tactically unwise to suggest to one's fellow college students to "vote the party, not the candidate" in tomorrow's Presidential election. College students of our generation are not particularly well-known for filing in on the Party line every four years. Eugene McCarthy, Robert F. Kennedy and George McGovern all enjoyed considerable student support. Each was, to one degree or another, repudiating "politics as usual." A vote for either of these men was a vote against the Vietnam war; against the party hacks who had manipulated Democratic war politics for a century; a vote against deceitful Presidents like Johnson and Nixon who had conned, lied to, blustered, and intimidated their fellow Americans from the day they took over the Oval Office to the day they left.

As children of the Imperial Presidency we were schooled in the politics of repudiation; voting against rather than for things. This is our legacy. For better or worse.

Now that we are on the brink of installing either a former House Minority leader or a former one-term Governor in the highest office of the land we find less than half the electorate (let alone college students) willing to pull either lever. Presumably it was the double-action fire of Vietnam and Watergate that allowed students to succumb to (that lovely media word) apathy. Now we find it's a national disease.

Is the situation really so precarious that a rainy day might make a Republican victory? What consolation in smug apathy if we see a beaming Gerald Ford on the front-page of Wednesday's Collegian? What honor in being nit-picked by media sociologists for the next six months because Richard Nixon's hand-picked successor was elected president and college kids did nothing about it? There is no dignity in any of that and I propose we turn out at the polls in droves precisely because Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale are the lesser of two clearly defined evils.

> What honor in being nit-picked by media sociologists for the next six months because Richard Nixon's hand-picked successor was elected president and college kids did nothing about it? There is no dignity in any of that and I propose we turn out at the polls in droves precisely because Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale are the lesser of two clearly defined evils.

I am confident there is no such luxury as apathy in the hearts and minds of hard-line Republicans. Give these people their due. They settle for the best they can get and they vote for it. Leave it to the Democratic party, year after year, to have a monstrous numerical advantage and then allow the likes of Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford to set foot in the White House. Non-voting Democrats aside, we'll have only the Maoists, black radicals, feminists, students, independents, and Revolutionary Student Brigade aesthetes to blame for yet another shameful Republican "mandate."

Let us suppose, hypothetically of course, that James Earl Carter does not bring the average New England college student to political orgasm. Let us then list the many other things we might vote for with an "x" beside his name:

1) a coherent energy policy that makes it more difficult to throttle the discriminated-against New England consumer every winter
2) a speaker of the House from Cambridge, Massachusetts who could bargain with a President of his own party with the result that employment in the region might be stimulated
3) a housing program that might make it plausible for a college graduate, four years from now, to purchase a home for his or her family
4) the beginning of the beginning of a federalized health care system that makes getting sick once again affordable
5) an administration that does not take it upon itself to undermine court-ordered desegration in South Boston, Massachusetts.
6) legislative and executive leadership that professes unwillingness to send American young people to South East Asia to die for fascistic dictators
7) Supreme Court nominees, department secretaries and military leaders who have at least a minimal regard for the intelligence of the American people (as opposed to Nixon's Carswell, and Ford's Butz and Brown)
8) some attention paid to corporate and white collar crime and a vigorous prosecution thereof (as well as looking into Congressional bribery, influence peddling, and illegal campaign contributions, by the Attorney General)
9) some attention paid to discriminatory hiring practices in the applications of blacks, women, Spanish speaking people, old people, and others for employment
10) an economic leadership that does not find 7.8 per cent unemployment acceptable since college graduates entering the labor force are most severely hit by administrative neglect in this

These are just a few of the programs one might endorse in voting the Carter-Mondale ticket. It does not imply the young voter be "born-again" or that he temper his lustful proclivities. What it does imply is that simply self-interest, much less moral altruism compels a vote against Candidate Ford. There are many other reasons one might think of to dirty one's hands in the Democratic process. One look at a speech by Robert Dole might prove sufficient.

For whatever reason, be it punitive or affirmative, one based on personalities or party platforms, we must turn out at the polls for Carter-Mondale. The alternative is far too ominous and far too likely. VOTE THE CARTER-MONDALE TICKET NOVEMBER 2nd.

Bottle bill in Maine called 'inconvenient'

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — The Maine Sunday Telegram says passage of the state's bottle bill referendum would be a "modest step" toward conservation and litter reduction, but would result in somewhat higher beverage costs and inconvenience to consumers and small store owners.

In an editorial Sunday, the Telegram declined to take an editorial stance on the controversial measure that is to be decided at the polls Tuesday. The proposal would require a nicket deposit on all beer and softdrink containers.

The state's only Sunday paper said that instead of adding another voice to the hard fought debate, it would examine the validity of basic arguments advanced by both sides.

The Telegram said the measure was originally conceived to reduce roadside litter and that there is "ample evidence to support that belief." I said passage of the proposal would also help solve the solid waste disposal problem.

The paper said the bottle bill would not prohibit the use of cans, except by banning fliptops and plastic containers. "It does, however, create a cost structure which is clearly designed to drive cans off the market...Indeed, that trend is clearly in evidence in Vermont and Oregon — the two states that now have similar laws."

The paper said it believes the cost of the measure to consumers would be a slight increase in prices, assuming that consumers are "willing to be inconvenienced by returning bottles in order to reclaim their deposits."

Opponents have claimed that consumers would have to pay up to $16 million in additional costs, while proponents have said consumers would save $10 million a year.

The Telegram claimed that similar legislation in Vermont has acted as a "major hardship" to small convenience stores less able to deal with returnables.

The paper said that because Maine represents only one half of one per cent of the nation's population, passage of the measure would have "no discernible effect on either energy or raw materials. Similar referenda in the populous states of Massachusetts and Michigan would, if approved, have far more impact on energy and conservation."

The "most compelling argument in the bottle bill," the Telegram said, "is the message of conservation it conveys...It is a continuing educational lesson that we must learn to curb our wastefulness of the earth's resources."

Hawaiian man bears gifts

By DENNIS STONE

HONOLULU [UPI] — James T. Ownby likes bears and children.

When he launched "Good Bears of the World" in 1973, Ownby, a broadcaster and businessman, hoped to bring warmth and love to children everywhere with a gift — teddy bears.

GBW celebrated its third anniversary Wednesday, Oct. 27 with over 1,000 members in many nations, all sharing the "good bear" goals.

"Bear Dens" are popping up in the United Kingdom, New England, Canada and elsewhere.

In Texas an association of kindergartens with 80 chapters wants to adopt the good bears' purpose and let the youngsters make their own bears.

The Good Bears have an annual bear poster contest and publish a newsletter, "Bear Tracks."

"Our ideal is so simple," Ownby says. "The teddy bear has become a growing symbol of love and friendship to people of all ages."

GBW, headquarters in Bern bear, Switzerland, and operating out of Honolulu, works with hospitals and rehabilitation centers by presenting an official teddy bear to their patients.

The teddy bear dates back to Teddy Roosevelt who inspired the teddy bear theme by refusing to shoot a small bear cub during a hunting trip in Mississippi in 1902.

An immigrant Russian toymaker, Morris Michtom, picked up on a cartoon about the incident, and made a toy bear which he called "Teddy's bear."

Ownby's middle initial "T" stands for Theodore. He says his mother is Roosevelt's fifth cousin and that he was named after the Bull-Moose president.

Ownby says the teddy bears, with their "understanding" and "sympathetic eyes," are good for adults too.

Two conditions are necessary for the referendum to overturn the decision by town meeting.

First, the referendum must obtain a majority vote. Second, twenty percent of all registered town voters must show-up to vote in favor of the referendum.

According to the Town Meeting Handbook prepared by the League of Women voters of Amherst: "The 20 per cent minimum is required to prevent a small proportion of the electorate from reversing a decision that has been made by the representatives of the entire electorate."

The Amherst Rent and Eviction Control Act presented by the ATA at town meeting would termporarily freeze rents to those charged the occupant for the month of May, 1976. It would also establish a five-member rent control board to regulate maximum rent adjustments "at levels which yield to landlords a fair return on investment", as well as carry out other provisions of the act.

Singers in concert

The world famous Fisk Jubilee Singers will appear in concert in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall at UMass Wednesday, at 8 p.m., as part of the UMass Art Council's Chamber Music Series.

The group was formed in 1871 with the original purpose of raising funds to support Fisk University. On Oct. 6 of that year, the Reverend George L. White, treasurer of the school and professor of music, set out with a gallant group of four men and five women on a concert tour of the North to raise funds. This first tour, which lasted three months, established the fame of the Jubilee Singers and literally saved the University.

Under the direction of Matthew Kennedy, himself a noted concert pianist, the Jubilee Singers program will include "Roll, Jordan, Roll," "Wade In The Water," "I Want Jesus To Walk With Me," and many of the all-time favorite spirituals.

Tickets are now on sale at $5, $4, and $3, with special prices for students and senior citizens. The Fine Arts Center box office is open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, telephone 545-2511.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

'MUA broadcasts election analysis

Immediately following tonight's 10:00 news, WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will broadcast an editorial preview of Tuesday's election.

Tonight's program of analysis and commentary is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Masakowski.

Mosakowski will review the hard-fought races for the presidency and the U.S. representative seat in he first Congressional District and, in a break with precedent, is expected to endorse candidates in each of these important contests.

Earlier on WMUA's "Off-The-Hook" public affairs series, at 6:20 p.m., Bob Oakes and other members of WMUA's news team will review the nine statewide referendum questions and two local referendum questions which will appear on the ballot.

The positions would involve planning for the coming Spring and Summer series, which would include sharing in responsibility for the following: soliciting and selecting workshop proposals, designing a brochure, publicity, registration, scheduling, ongoing facilitator contact and evaluation.

Qualifications include a committment to developing educational alternatives for women, committment to feminism and commitment to working collaboratively.

If interested, please call Marilyn or Linda at 545-0812 to arrange for an interview.

Lecture note pickup in SW

The Student Senate Lecture Notes Service (LNS) will attempt to offer a lecture notes distribution service in the Hampden Student Center in Southwest if there is sufficient demand for this convenience. At present, lectures note must be picked up in the Student Union.

If enough subscribers sign a special petition, the LNS is willing to open a second distribution center in Southwest so that residents of that area will not have to walk to the Student Union to pick up their notes.

Because of the added expense of operating a second distribution center, an additional charge will be required for notes that are picked up in Hampden. Since the decision to open a second distribution point will not be made until the results of the survey are available, Southwest residents should purchase regular lecture notes tickets for the second half of the semester.

If the Hampden distribution center is opened, those students who have signed the petition will be contacted and offered a chance to exchange their lecture notes cards for special Southwest cards for a nominal charge.

Copies of the petition are avialable in room 402 of the Student Union building, where lecture notes subscriptions are sold.

Greek area session on sexual health

Aftermath of cosmic exam

Welcome, time-travelers, to November. It's the month named after Novem, the latin number 9, because it was the ninth month on the Roman calendar. On the 13th day of Novem, the Romans celebrated a sacred banquet in honor of Jupiter, the Epulum Jovis. It might be nice to re-commemorate the jovial planet's feast this time around the Zodiac because several planets will oppose Jupiter around mid-month and if we haven't communed with the father of joy we may get self-ish.

Now for the mind weather on this first day of Novem: the Sun is at the tenth degree of Scorpio, focusing our spiritual energy on partnership-productivity. The Moon is in Pisces thru Tuesday nite, focusing our emotional energies on sharing our dreams with compassion. Beneath the solar-lunar rhythm, we're in the after-waves of a tension that peaked this morning at 6:42 as Mars (god-of-war) formed a harsh square angle to Saturn (stern guru). Mars is in Scorpio, trying to regenerate towards nobler purpose — or degenerating. Saturn is in Leo, trying to help us learn how to structure our "act". Of course, to insure that Mars is learning, Saturn gave a little test — a big test, actually, the mid-term exam. If our martial energy passed that test without a big blow-out, we'll enjoy the day with only a few minor problems. But if we failed the test and didn't learn how to effectively channel our energies, we may fail several little quizzes this afternoon.

Several challenges may come up as the Moon swims thru the watery-emotional realms of Pisces, feeling hyper-sensitive and perhaps lost in a dream. Towards 1:04 p.m. she forms a difficult square angle to Neptune, the dream-weaver. Without compassion, we may sink. Towards 5:48 p.m. she squares Venus, goddess of love. Venus is in Sagittarius (sign of wisdom) along with Neptune. "Sag" is the sign governed by Jupiter, whose aim is expansion into higher meaning. If our venusian or passive nature has not found an outlet for our wish to expand — to travel with love — our emotions may get a bit tear-some. But only a bit as the Moon travels fast and by 9:17 p.m. she'll form an harmonious 120 degree angle with Mars, which should give us an energetic uplift.

Around 9:30 p.m., if we meditate on the rational meaning of our dreams, insight will be available. Flashes of "truth" and sudden insight will become increasingly available thru tomorrow afternoon. If we catch them and put them into action, tomorrow could be beautifully enlightening. Otherwise, we have a week until the next big exam.

Campus Carousel

by Tony Granite

LET'S TRY AGAIN CAPER... a harried page editor cut a recent Carousel in half so that the piece was not permitted to rise to its ultimate. Therefore, in the interests of keeping our faithful readers happy, we are repeating the item.

EXCUSES, EXCUSES... is the way the editors of the Miami-Dade (Fla.) Community College Falcon Times headed a feature on the tearful tales the faculty there is hearing from students who don't do their assignments.

"I got mugged on the bus on the way over and the thief took my briefcase with the homework inside."

And a student in Freshman English was overheard telling his prof the tragic story of a fire at her home the previous night. The story had a semi-happing ending, the Times reported, because the firemen were able to save everything but her homework.

But the real clincher, says the Times, is so absolutely true that no one believes it. A young lady who was trying to repair a broken fingernail with Super-Glue somehow got her homework paper involved. The resulting very sticky situation left no paper to turn in and a skeptical prof.

ADD HEADY HEADLINES, from the Arizona Daily Wildcat: "Edible underwear put new bite in brief business."

AND FROM THE WORLD OUT THERE comes the intelligence that American companies spend $68 billion a year on business correspondence and roughly 65 per cent of the nation's business men and women are unable to express themselves clearly in writing.

Now, there's a market for Journalistic Studies majors!

IF DAVE CAROL of Amherst College has his way, the Amherst Student says, the Prom will rejoin the campus scene here, as it already has at Princeton, Yale, UVirginia, Darmouth and John Hopkins.

Carol is the organizer of Sphinx, a group dedicated to resurrecting the social event that died in the late Sixties, when students considered them trivial in view of the social conditions of the time.

Word of the plan to resurrect rented tuxes, chiffon evening gowns accompanied by the strains of big band music has aroused generally favorable reaction, Carol says.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Monday, November 1 — Born today, you are one of those sensitive, yet at times overly sentimental persons who is inclined to form excessively close attachments much too soon in any given relationship. You do not enjoy the company of people in general; indeed, your enjoyment decreases dramatically as the number of people occupying the same general area as you do increases. On a one-to-one level, however, your enthusiasm, eager interest and downright pleasure in the company you keep knows no bounds. You need only take care that you do not grow to depend upon being alone with another in order to enjoy him or her; after all, isolation is not always possible.

Of quiet temperament, you are drawn toward quiet occupations and leisure-time activities. Although family activities are high on your list theoretically, when it comes right down to it, you prefer to act alone rather than to enter into projects and endeavors with others, even when to do so would be to solidify family relationships and to progress with at-home projects. You crave cultural advantages; ironically, unless you are willing to work in harness with others -- perhaps en masse -- such advantages may elude you.

You not only desire intellectual stimulation, you actually need it for your health and happiness. You take a great deal of interest in the activities of those dependent upon you for their well-being -- but you are not necessarily interested to the point of taking part in those activities.

Tuesday, November 2

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care that you don't take another's good will for granted. You could easily misjudge your position on the employment scene.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A group is not particularly welcome in your life today. Make sure that the words you use do not boomerang.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Turn your attention to projects almost but not quite completed. Waste time on trivia and you will later regret it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — An associate's nervousness may cause you more tension than you are able to deal with calmly. Redirect an inquiry for results in the evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Shore up an old friendship. This is no time to stand on principle; make an effort to communicate your wishes without direct comment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — A dogmatic attitude toward the behavior of younger family members may cause considerable disturbance on the home front. Broaden your base.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Take care that small problems don't become large ones through lack of interest on your part. Indulge in nothing whimsical.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You can't stretch the time available; cut down, then, on the activities scheduled. Take your time; reflect on the future.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — New contacts make it difficult for you to keep to an old schedule of activities. Take special care not to frighten the young.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22) — Exceptional success accrues to the Leo who is able to judge his own work with absolute objectivity. Don't be too quick to say no to a friend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Prestige is gained through the action of a close friend early in the day. Wait no longer to assent to plans for a change on the home front.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Receive another's ideas with enthusiasm. You may well find yourself in an "in" position before day's end.

Support the demonstration called by the Unemployed Workers Organizing Committee for Nov. 2 in Boston

Politicians fight for $$ interests.
We must fight for our own.

On Election Day we're supposed to give our mandate to more of the same: Unemployment, inflation, rotten housing, rotten schools, and the threat of war. Our rulers say, "If you don't vote, don't complain". This is an outrage, blaming us for refusing to vote for these miseries.

They have offered us two candidates, Jerry Ford or Jimmy Carter, a chance to choose our fate, to name our poison for the next four years. But the real candidate is their "Free-enterprise System", which means nothing but wage-slavery for the millions of workers and great hardship for the majority of people.

They say we can't advance unless we fall in behind them. The truth is we can't advance unless we stand up to them! They say we're no good for anything but pulling levers for them. We say that militant actions on Election Day will show people that there is another way, a real road out of the misery the powers that be have in store for us. They say Carter and Ford represent our interests. We say they do not represent us, they attack us; that to choose between them is no choice at all; that the future they represent is not future at all — more of the same and worse; that all they can offer us is "lesser evils" and we are tired of their evils and are out to put an end to them.

We say no to that future. The only decent things we have in this country, we fought for. On November 2 we support UWOC in saying hell no to the attacks of the elections. On November 2 we support the Unemployed Workers Organizing Committee demonstration around the slogan Politicians Fight for $$ Interests, We Must Fight For Our Own. These demonstrations will take place in 30 cities including Boston.

B's lose to Sabres

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] – Buffalo defenseman Jocelyn Guevremont scored his first two goals of the season on long slapshots to give the Sabres a 4-1 National Hockey League victory over the Boston Bruins Sunday night.

The loss snapped a four-game Boston winning streak.

The Sabres broke to a 2-0 lead on goals set up after penalties to their club ended.

Guevremont opened the scoring with a 40-foot slapshot at 4:11 of the first period, 11 seconds after coming out of the penalty box, and defenseman Lee Fogolin made it 2-0 at 14:45 of the second period on a feed from Bill Hajt, nine seconds after a penalty to Hajt expired.

Boston's Gary Doak scored 17 seconds after Foglin's goal to cut the margin to 2-1.

JV Football

Delayed gridders await AIC

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

For the UMass junior varsity football team so far this year, it hasn't been a matter of winning or losing, it's whether they can play anyone at all.

They say lightning doesn't strike in the same place twice, but last week it did for the JVs. First, their scheduled game against Rhode Island was cancelled due to the fact that the Rams no longer field a JV team, and secondly, yesterday's long-anticipated clash against Boston College was also called off.

"BC said that they couldn't field a team because of injuries," explained UMass coach Tom Mullen. "Whatever the reason was, it sure was a big let-down to our guys because the season is short enought as it is."

Into the fray stepped UMass' saviour, associate athletic director Bob O'Connell, who made a few frantic phone calls and lined up a game against American International College as a substitute. The Minutemen and the Yellow Jackets meet today at Alumni Stadium in a 1:30 contest.

Anyway, UMass will be shooting for its second straight win, and first at home. Mullen expects to start the same lineups as he has for the season's first two games. Quarterback Mike McEvilly, who has been the sparkplug of the offense, will have a backfield of halfback Cliff Pedrow and fullback Hank Sareault to work with.

McEvilly will be throwing to flanker Kevin O'Connor, who has caught two touchdown passes this year, split end Dan Clerico, and tight end Dave Federici. In addition, reserve right end John Ferranti should see a lot of action, particularly in goal-line, two tight end situations.

On defense, linebacker Bob Wilson is out for the season with an injured knee. Tony Grasso is slated to start in his place, while reserve Ted Fiffy should also get in the game.

For AIC, meanwhile, it will be the season's opener. The Yellow Jackets have scrimmaged just once this year.

"With all the budgetary cutbacks, it's hard to put together a solid schedule," said AIC sports information director Larry Silber.

However, the Yellow Jackets have gone undefeated over the last two seasons. They are coached by Chuck Seccombe, who doubles as an offensive line coach for varsity.

Offensively, the Yellow Jackets run from a wing-T, with quarterback Paul Korik directing the attack. His backfield is comprised of Terri Goldson, Mark Androchuk, and Dominic Toscano, while fullback Isaac Crawford doubles as a wide receiver. AIC also has two tough tackles in Todd Lyon and Bob Supino.

On defense, look for end Joe Schroepfer and linebackers Mike Phillips and Jim Vallis to be stickouts. The latter also handles the Yellow Jacket kicking chores.

Midnite Cruisers cop Co-Rec football title

By BILL LOCKE

Any doubts that the only thing the 13th floor of John Adams Tower could do is throw excellent parties were laid to rest Thursday night when the floor's intramural team, 'The Midnite Cruisers", won the 1976 Co-Rec Football Championship. The Cruisers defeated strong team representing the Tri-Psi Fraternity 12-6 in a hard-fought game.

Rookie Sue DiRocco opened the scoring in the second quarter when she scored on a 15 yard pass from veteran player-coach Dan Will.

Tri-Psi evened the score in the third quarter. With the score still tied late in the fourth quarter, it looked as if the championship game would go into overtime for the second consecutive year.

However, veteran safety Paul Tosti intercepted a Tri-Psi pass on the Tri-Psi two yard line and returned it all the way for the game winner. The Midnite Cruiser defense, led by Captain Jack Rossen and hard-nose tackle Diane H.L. Sweeney, held on to capture the team's first championship.

The win helped erase from the memory of many veterans the bitter loss the team suffered in last year's finals. In that game the Cruisers were defeated in riple-overtime, 6-0. These same veterans came back to lead an awesome 1976 team that outscored opponents, 81-16 in eight games. Tri Psi was the first team to score any points on the Cruiser defense in three playoff games.

Coach Will had this to say while savoring the victory with some of his players in the Blue Wall late Thursday night, "The victory was a solid team effort. We entered the season knowing there was no next year. Everyone put everything into their effort because of this." The Midnite Cruisers final 7-1 record certainly attests to that fact!!

Dolphins zap Pats; Grogan has off-day

MIAMI [UPI] – Bob Griese found Jim Mandich open in the end zone for a 16-yard score and a rejuvenated Miami Dolphin defense stopped the explosive New England Patriot attack Sunday for a 10-3 victory.

The Dolphins sprung the mild upset by building a 10-3 halftime lead and then handing the game over to an aggressive defense, which apparently got an emotional lift when Miami rehired defensive coach Bill Arnsparger after he was fired as head coach of the New York Giants last week.

The Dolphin defense, led by linebackers Bob Matheson and Steve Towle, had been rated statistically among the worst in the NFL going into the game.

But the Patriots' high-scoring offense was forced to punt frequently and was held without a first down in the first 13½ minutes of the third quarter.

The Dolphin offense was led by Griese and Benny Malone, who carried 21 times for 120 yards.

Patriot quarterback Steve Grogan hit Marlin Briscoe for what appeared to be a 70-yard touchdown pass with 71 seconds to go in the game but the play was called back because of an offsides penalty.

Miami had taken a 10-0 lead in the second quarter on Mandich's TD and a 46-yard Gary Yepremian field goal. New England scored with three seconds to go before intermission when John Smith hit a 43-yard field goal.

Grogan and the Patriots stormed back by driving from their own 34 to the Miami 25 where Smith made it 10-3. Sam Cunningham contributed two big plays, gaining 16 yards on a draw and 14 on a screen pass.

The victory, regarded as a "must" by the Dolphins, evened their record at 4-4. The Patriots are 5-3 and still in the running for a wild card playoff berth.

The win reversed an earlier 30-14 loss by the Dolphins at New England in the second game of the season.

Patriots' safety Prentice McCray nearly rips the shirt off Dolphin tight end Jim Mandich, after Mandich was on the receiving end of a Bob Griese aerial during first quarter action yesterday. (UPI)

The Chicago Bears took advantage of two short punts for touchdowns in the first and fourth periods Sunday to score a 14-13 victory that dealt the Minnesota Vikings their first loss of the National Football League season.

Walter Payton ran 39 yards for a touchdown in the first period and Johnny Musso plunged three yards in the fourth period for the Bears. Payton's TD run came after a 15-yard punt by Neal Clabo and Musso's TD climaxed a 32-yard drive following a 16-yard punt by Clabo.

The Vikings, who entered the game as the NFL's only unbeaten team, suffered the loss despite an outstanding passing performance by Fran Tarkenton. Tarkenton completed 24-of-46 passes for 272 yards raising his career total to 40,421 yards, an NFL record. Tarkenton's mark surpasses the total of 40,239 yards gained by John Unitas during his career.

Booters tie BC; defense immense

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL — The UMass soccer team failed to score a goal for the fourth straight game, but managed to come up with a scoreless tie against Boston College on Saturday.

"It was an exciting game," said coach Russ Kidd. "There was about four or five real good scoring chances in the game."

Bob McChesney probably had the best chance to score, but his direct kick just went over the crossbar. Fortunately for the booters, the defense and goalie Mark Hanks were once again outstanding.

"Our defense was immense," Kidd said. "It was a game between fullback Ed Niemiec and their big fullback."

Besides Niemiec, Kidd cited the play of sweeper Larry Aronson, Pat Veale and Mark Vassalotti.

BOOTER BANTER: UMass is no 2-8-1, while BC is 7-5-1...The game was played on astroturf, which, according to Kidd was not as good as the surface at Westfield State, where the team dropped a 1-0 game last Wednesday...The varsity will scrimmage the JV, who lsst 3-1 to Springfield College on Friday, this afternoon at 3:45. At the same time, the varsity's second 11 will go at it against the JV's second team...On Tuesday, the booters host powerful Springfield College in a 2:30 game.

Harrier reserves gain respect at Albany St.

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

While the men's varsity cross country first unit was easily winning the Yankee Conference title, the second and third units were gaining a measure of respect at the Albany State Invitational.

In the varsity division, UMass was second to Keene (NH) State by a score of 50-61. Keene is currently ranked seventh in New England, so in effect, UMass has two varsity teams in the top ten in NE which says a lot for Coaches Ken O'Brien and Arnie Morse's program.

In the sub-varsity division, UMass steamrollered the opposition en-route to a sweep of the first six places and a victory margin of 15-89 over its nearest rival, Plattsburgh (NY) State. The winning score tied the record for the low score in the meet. These two performances definately establish UMass as a favorite in the New England and IC4A sub-varsity races.

In the sub-varsity's 4.25 mile run, UMass rooters were treated to the exhile rating sight of five maroon and white clad runners showing the way to the rest of the field. For about 2¼ miles, Matt Mangan, Tom Wolfe, Steve Hilyard, Steve McDougall and Craig Bloodgood toured the course in a tight pack.

After a one mile loop, Mangan broke out of that pack and running the race of his life, smoked it away from the rest of the field to win in the record breaking time of 21:27.

Freshman Hilyard managed to disengage himself from Wolfe, and finished second. Wolfe finished right behind in third, while Bloodgood and McDougall were fourth and fifth, respectively. Andy Levy poured it on with a strong kick to finish sixth and complete the sweep. Glenn Lyle and Pete Descamps were not far off the pace as they were 11th and 12th respectively.

The varsity runners gave Keene a battle, but in the end lost out because of two outstanding performances by Keene runners. Kurt Shultz and Henry Phelan were first and third respectively, which more than compensated for UMass finishing four men in the top 15.

John Sheer ran a good race as he continually improved his position until he finally finished seventh, with a time of 25:40. Kevin McCuster also broke the top ten as he finished ninth in 25:48. Matty Wolfe ran a steady race to finish 12th at 26:02, closely followed by Kevin McCaffery at 26:04. Closing out the top five was Scott McKenzie, who ran his best race of the year to finish 20th at 26:20. Also in the top seven were Jay Legere and Bobby Neil at 30th and 31st, respectively.

after the first half mile. Middlebury also went out well and the Minutewomen, with the exception of Lafreniere were never able to break up their three-women convoy.

Another key to the third place finish was the amount of time that the women's times dropped from the NE race to this meet, as compared to Middlebury's. The latter's times varied anywhere from 22 to 30 seconds worse, while UMass' times dropped from 30 seconds all the way to 1:04 slower. This allowed Middlebury to open up even more of a gap than it had at the NE meet.

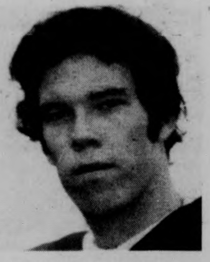
Injury wave strikes gridders

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

As if Saturday's 24-7 loss to Rutgers Saturday was not disheartening enough, last night's medical report had to send a wave of panic to the already up and down Minuteman football team.

Only two weeks ago, UMass enjoyed the best physical health it had all season. Now, two games and two defeats later, head coach Dick MacPherson finds two of his strongest areas, tight end and defensive backfield, quickly depleting.



Kevin Cummings

At the tight end spot, junior standout Kevin Cummings and sophomore Charles Balboni are out for the year. Cummings, the Minutemen's top receiver, will be operated on tomorrow for a knee injury suffered Saturday, while Balboni dislocated his shoulder.

Dave Croasdale

In the defensive backfield, the bad news came as Dave Croasdale, a junior, suffered a severe bruise on his shoulder and is "very doubtful" for this weekend's encounter with Holy Cross according to MacPherson.

With Moses Williams still sub-par at tight end from his neck injury in the UConn game, and Todd Holt and John Van Buren already gone for the year in the defensive backfield, UMass has taken a severe blow. And with senior defensive standout Steve Telander unable to play at all this year, and cornerback Greg Sprout still nursing a hip-pointer, the list becomes frightening.

"They just all hit at once," MacPherson said last night.

"That wrecks the hell out of our tight end position," he added. Just two weeks ago that was our strongest position and now two of the three are gone.

"And in our defensive backfield we're just riddled with three guys out. But we'll just have to do it withoute them now," MacPherson said. "We just have to do what we can."

Powerful Chiefs shutout stickers to snap win streak

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

The five game winning streak of the UMass field hockey team was broken this Saturday as Springfield College outplayed and outscored the Minutewomen, 2-0.

From the first minute of play, the Minutewoman were never really in the game, as Springfield took the ball into the UMass zone and kept it there for most of the half. And when a team applies that much pressure, it's only a matter of time before the ball goes in the net. That was the case as Springfield fullback Wendy Anderson went one-on-one with UMass goalie Kathy Gipps and put it past the UMass netminder, giving Springfield a 1-0 lead.

The Minutewomen continued to let Springfield take the initiative in the second half, as right inner Nita Lamborghini scored for Springfield early in the half. Although that was the last goal of the game, it didn't mean Springfield didn't have any more chances. The Chiefs continued to keep the pressure on, throwing a total of 25 shots at Gipps. She stood up well under the onslaught, keeping the score close even though the game wasn't.

Coach Davidson felt that the defeat was mostly due to the attitude of her team. "We were very tense and nervous in the game," she said. A large part of yesterday's game had nothing to do with physical skills. Springfield out-psyched us."

Springfield did indeed play with confidence, stickhandling, passing, and playing so touch that they limited the Minutewomen to a meager two shots on goal. "We never took the initiative in this game," said Davidson. "We let Springfield play the ball, instead of going after it ourselves."

Springfield, seeded first in the regional AIAW playoffs this week, finished third nationally in the AIAW's last year. Coach Davidson feels that this past success serves to make Springfield tougher now: "A very big part of their success is because they have had good teams before and they've built up a lot of confidence. I really believe that we could have played Springfield better than we did, because the ability is there."

Always optimistic, Davidson is looking ahead to the Minutewomen's final regular season game on Tuesday against Northeastern. Although they have an aggressive team, she feels that UMass is definitely better and should win.

Saturday's loss will not affect the AIAW seedings, with UMass seeded fourth. The defeat brings the Minutewomen's record to 9-4.

Karen Zimmerman (C) and her teammates couldn't muster enough offense to upset powerful Springfield, as they succumbed to the Chiefs 2-0. With a record of 9-4, the women hope to get on the winning track again against Northeastern Tuesday. (Staff photo by Chris Bourne)

Volleyball team splits tri-match record still under .500 mark

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The UMass volleyball team failed to even its season record (now 8-10) over the weekend as the Minutewomen split decisions in its tri-meet with a defeat to UNH 26-15, 13-15, and a victory against Williams College, 17-15, 15-2.

The Minutewomen came out flat in their match with UNH, despite the magnificent performance they put on only a few nights ago in the Mount Holyoke match. They appeared to be standing around and not really on top of their game; the concentration just wasn't there. This was especially evident in their serve-receive play, as they mishandled many opposing serves and even had some fall in, right at their feet.

The team seemed to get better as time went on sparked by freshwoman Deb Kuzdeba and senior Sue Sabia who served well particularly in the second game with New Hampshire.

Against Williams, the momentum started to avor the Minutewomen. They seemed to jell as a unit and began to serve-receive better, especially Jayne Greenberg and Shelley Soules. Greenberg also played well in the setter position, providing precise setup passes to the spikers, Diane Mandragouras and Dianne Bunker-Hannula.

Bunker-Hannual was the crowd favorite as she displayed her leaping form and blasting spike. When the spikes were being setup by the first two ballhandlers, you could hear the crowd rising to the occasion, in anticipation of a booming shot by Hannula. One member of the crowd constantly yelled, "bang", as Hannula strode into position.

The first game with Williams was just as close as the score indicates. The Minutewomen were trailing 9-12 when Jayne Greenberg and Heidi Dickson made two strong serves each to give the Minutewomen the lead at 13-12. Both teams then had trouble taking advantage of their serves and the game was knotted at 15. UMass, then scored two very quick points and came away with the victory and with swelled confidence.

The confidence carried with the Minutewomen into the second game as they just totally dominated Williams. Bunker-Hannula was spiking on nearly every offensive play and everyone was serving solidly. The game lasted only about 10 minutes, which is extremely short.

two and three checkpoints, with 9:13 and 14:23 timings respectively, the opinion among the coaches was that Clark would wait until the last half mile to make his move.

Indeed, Clark made his move, but he made it much earlier than expected. At the 3.5 mark, Clark took command and opened up a 25 yard lead over Quinn.

But Quinn reached back, dug in, and took off. Coming over the last 100 yards, Quinn running as smooth as a deer, sped to the finish line with a 30 yard lead over Clark, who looked fatigued.

"Quinn really gave me a battle as McGrail did last year," said Clark. "I don't think we went out too fast and the pace wasn't too strenuous," he added. "I didn't think Quinn was going to catch me when I made my move on him. Quinn's strength really surprised me."

On the opposite side, the victorious Quinn felt he could have taken Clark earlier. "I could have taken him sooner and I had a lot left at the end of the race. The strategy was for me to stay with Clark and let him control the race till the last mile," said Quinn.

Not only did Quinn finish strongly but the rest of his teammates came on like "gangbusters". McGrail really picked up the last three miles and said he felt very strong at the end of the race. Likewise for Farmer, Panaccione, Staples, Carroll and freshman Martin.

Coach David Hemery of Boston University and former 1968 Olympic gold medal winner of the 440 Intermediate Hurdles figures next week's New England championships will be a cross country classic.

"It's going to be really tough to pick a winner. Providence (rated third in the country) is really strong and Northeastern is coming on very fast. But UMass can surprise. It's going to come down to the wire and the race will be decided in the performances of the 3rd through 5th runners," said Hemery.

Quinn leads YanCon romp

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The UMass harriers went over the first hurdle to New England supremacy, smoothly and effortlessly Saturday as Mike Quinn led a swarm of seven UMass runners in capturing its seventh straight Yankee Conference crown.

UMass garnered 22 points, seven points shy of a shutout, while its nearest competitor UConn, had 44 points. Maine took third with 75 while URI, Vermont, UNH, and B.U. followed, respectively.

With an estimated 150 spectators looking on, sophomore Mike Quinn led the UMass rout, outlasting UConn runner Bruce Clark and 48 other competitors for top honors. Running on a sunny, mild, windy day, Quinn's time was 23:59, 41 seconds behind the recently broken course record of 23:18 held by Bob Hodge of Lowell State.

Other scorers for UMass were John McGrail-3rd, and Chris Farmer, Lou Panaccione, Cliff Staples, and Fraak Carroll who swept the 5th through 8th positions. Freshman Bob Martin, running his first collegiate championship race, was impressive with a 10th place showing.

McGrail, running with stomach cramps for the first two miles, finished strongly on his way to a 24:12 timing, seven seconds behind Clark. It was a dogfight for the 4th-9th positions with UConn's Pat O'Neil just finishing a yard ahead of 5th place Farmer.

The time difference between O'Neil and 8th place Carroll was only five seconds. Many of the UMass runners were utterly surprised by the freshman O'Neil's running performance.

Although it seemed like a "cakewalk" for UMass, coach Ken O'Brien termed it a "pleasing but conservative effort."

"I was really encouraged with the fairly fast times and calm and relaxed efforts of most our runners. But I don't think our team ran very hard," O'Brien said.

"We could run the rest of the year like this and do well. But if we are to beat Providence and Northeastern for the New Englands and the IC4A's, we must run harder," he said.

O'Brien said that he would like to see all of his runners run 10-15 seconds faster than their YanCon performances and concentrate their efforts on the second and third mile.

"If we want to be a super team, our 3-7 runners must stop running comfortably in a pack and go out and try to be as close to McGrail or Quinn as possible. The next two weeks should tell what kind of gut motivation this team has," O'Brien said.

In last year's Yankee Conference championship which UMass won handily 28-71 over Vermont, it was a dogfight between UMass' McGrail and UConn's Clark for first place, with Clark narrowly beating the Minuteman captain for top honors. This years battle was no different except for the UMass contestant.

Clark, who will be remembered for running the fastest mile ever recorded by a New England Collegian, 4:00:6, was picked to repeat as YanCon champ. But someone forgot to tell the sophomore upstart from UMass.

Clark and Quinn were "neck and neck" for the entire race until the final half mile. Checking in at the ALBANY, N.Y. — SUNY — State University of New York — this time it's Albany, "where the state legislature meets." SUNY — the Rathskeller, a bogus band, Luigi's, the Hyatt House, videotheque and, oh yeah, the women's Eastern cross country championship.

Penn State made a mockery of the EAIAW (Eastern Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) championship held at SUNY Saturday. The Lady Lions amassed 17 points to easily hold off Middlebury, which totaled 59 points and UMass which had 81.

Penn State, which finished second in the AIAW Nationals last year, and which is probably the number one team in the country this year, took the top three individual places, along with fifth and eighth overall to cop the team title. Kathy Mills and Kris Bankes tied for first with a time of 17:01.1, a new course record.

New England runners Marina Buckley of Amherst and Lavinia Muncy of UConn ran well as they finished in 7th and 10th respectively.

For UMass, standout harrier Julie Lafreniere was the top finisher, as she was 13th overall and eighth in the team race. Seemingly looking ahead to track season, where she's a half miler, Lafreniere displayed a blazing kick that almost carried her past her arch-rival Mo Thorpe of Middlebury, who was 12th. Lafreniere ran a respectable time of 18:08 for the three mile course.

One of the keys to the team battle was the pack of three runners Middlebury was able to finish in front of UMass' next runner. Maggie Crowley was that next runner, as she was 22nd overall, 14th in the team race in a time of 18:42. Not far behind were Johara Chapman and Sue Swartz. Chapman was 25th overall and 16th in the team race. Swartz was a place behind her in both. They ran times of 18:56 and 18:57 respectively.

Jane Welzel, Debbie Farmer and Anne Bradshaw completed the UMass team in 37th, 39th and 41st overall and 26, 28 and 30 in the team race, respectively. Their teams were 19:41 for Welzel, 19:46 for Farmer and 19:49 for Bradshaw. Incidentally, the difference in time and overall position was due to individuals who were dropped from the team standings since they did not represent full teams.

Two factors may have had an effect on the Minutewomen's performance. The cold weather had a numbing effect on the runners extremities, making it difficult to warm up and run loosely during the race. The pressure of the big meet may have had some effect on them as well.

The slower times reflected a trend apparent in the other races held Saturday. For some reason, the times over the course, which looped through the SUNY campus over grass, sidewalks and dirt trails were slow, even though the footing was good. That last statement should be amended somewhat, since the first and last 200 yards of the course were run through a near quagmire.

From the gun, Penn State went to the front and stayed there, at times seemingly cruising effortlessly. UMass established itself in good position, but failed to do anything with it, as the women were fairly static

Knights behead injured gridders

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. — Everywhere you go in this mid-Jersey industrial city, the slogan seems to jump out and slap you in the face.

Scarlet Spirit. It appears on bumper stickers, pennants, T-shirts, and posters. It is also the first thing to catch your eye in the Rutgers football guide.

During the winter, of course, it refers to the Scarlet Knight basketball team, which went 30-0 before finally losing to Michigan in the semi-finals of the NCAA tournament last March. But during the fall, it is associated with the football squad, which upped the nation's longest winning streak to 15 last Saturday and brought its record to a spotless 8-0 this season.

And Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, was imbued with that spirit last Saturday as the Scarlet Knights displayed a deadly passing combination and a swarming, hard-hitting defense while making UMass its 15th straight victim, 24-7, in a game played at Rutgers Stadium.

The aerial duo of quarterback Bert Kosup to split end Mark Twitty connected seven times for 135 yards, including a 63-yard bomb which set up Rutgers' first touchdown. The defense, meanwhile, limited the Minutemen to a mere 58 rushing yards and 10 first downs in the contest.

"I'm really disappointed, that's all I can say," said UMass coach Dick MacPherson." "Their defense really did the job."

Indeed it did, as UMass was able to punch the Scarlet Knights end zone only once. An 11-yard run by halfback Rich Jessamy around right end after taking a pitchout from quarterback Brian McNally early in the first quarter was the extend of UMass' offensive production.

The Minutemen were able to move the ball somewhat effectively in the first period, but a fatal error killed what could have been a second scoring drive and led to what MacPherson felt was the turning point of the game.

The Minutemen held Rutgers for the third straight time, forcing the Scarlet Knights to punt. Joe Moss' boot was returned 35 yards by Dave Croasdale to the Rutgers 22 on a brilliant run, and McNally decided to go for the kill all at once. However, his pass intended for tight end Kevin Cummings was intercepted by safety Jim Teatom on the two-yard line.

"That interception after the punt return hurt us bad," said MacPherson.

Rutgers capitalized on the miscue to score its first TD. The long pass to Twitty, who got behind UMass cornerback Vic Jeffries, was the key to the drive. It came on a third and four situation, and moved the ball to the UMass 29. From there on it, it was smooth sailing for the Scarlet Knights. Another Twitty reception brought the ball down to the three, and from there flanker Mark Lassiter bounced off two would-be tacklers and into paydirt.

The play which put Rutgers ahead to stay also came with stunning swiftness in the second quarter. A John Romboli punt from deep in his own territory was blocked by a charging herd of Scarlet Knight rushers, led by Earl Williams, and was recovered for a touchdown by Dino Mangiero.

"I thought that was the second play of the game," said an obviously dejected MacPherson.

It was all downhill for the Minutemen after that. Rutgers' rushing offense, which had been held to minus two yards by a charging UMass defense in the first half, suddenly came to life in the second. The Scarlet Knights wound up with 155 ground yardage on the day. In fact, a 12-yard run by fullback Glen Kehler and a 10-yard burst by halfback Mark Fisher set up the third Rutgers touchdown. It was scored on a one-yard Fisher run around right end.

Rutgers scored its final three points on a 37-yard field goal by Ken Startzell in the fourth quarter. Two long romps by Kehler and Lassiter brought the ball into range.

Incidentally, Lassiter wound up with 86 yards in 10 carries, while workhorse Kehler ate up 82 yards in 16 attempts in the game. Kosup's passing log showed a nine for 16 day, good for 162 yards.

While Rutgers was able to get its offense to jell, the Minutemen couldn't get theirs going at all. The best play of the second half was a 43-yard pass to reserve halfback Dennis Dent. Fullback Billy Coleman wond up with only 44 yards in 14 carries, while Jessamy could garner just 28 in seven.

McNally completed seven of 18 passes during game for 131 yards, but had two picked off.

Although UMass lost, several defensive players had outstanding individual games. Nose guard Phil Puopolo sacked Kosup twice behind the line of scrimmage, while defensive end Dennis Fenton and safety Ron Harris got to him once. In addition, rover John D'Amato, making his first start of the season, had 10 individual tackles.

"We've had two rough weeks in a row now," commented MacPherson. "Now we've just go to get the team back up and make them believe in themselves again."

"Eldridge Cleaver: When Pigs Come Home To Roost"

By MGWANA GIKUTI

Sometime in mid-May, 1967, about a week following the armed demonstration held in California's state capital at Sacramento by the Black Panther Party for Self-Defense, another group of Panthers — the San Francisco-based Black Panther Party — held a pay affair. Following the creation of the Black Panther political party in Lowndes County, Alabama by SNCC (Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee), Black Panther parties had spontaneously formed in different sections of the country, connected to the original Lowndes County party only in spirit. The San Francisco-based Black Panther Party was formed in August, 1966.

Two months later the Black Panther Party for Self-Defense — the organization of Huey Newton, Bobby Seale, and soon, Eldridge Cleaver — opened an office in Oakland, just across the bay. Other independent panther parties formed in Los Angeles, New York City and elsewhere, but the one that is most remembered today is, of course, the Oakland one formed by Newton and Seale.

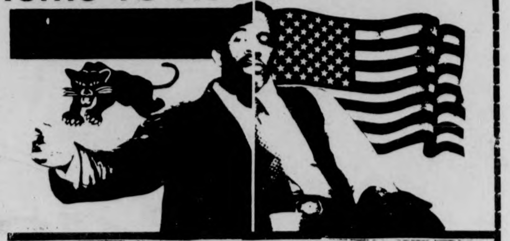
On a weekend in mid-May, the San Francisco Panthers were in the process of hosting a pay party at the home of Aaron Chapman, one of its members. In the midst of activities the doorbell rang, and in walked a not too friendly contingent of Oakland Panthers with guns drawn, led by Minister of Information, Eldridge Cleaver. While the party continued in the rear of the house, members of the San Francisco Panthers were urged to withdraw to another room where they were informed the Minister of Information wished to speak to them. While Huey Newton and Bobby Seale, among others, held guns on the group, Mr. Cleaver informed these San Francisco Panthers that a great deal of confusion had arisen over their use of the Black Panther Party name — in spite of the fact that this group had been the first in the region to employ the symbol and that as a result he was ordering them to disband their group. They did have the option, he informed them, to join the Oakland Panthers as individuals, however. When the offer was politely refused, fighting broke out, whereupon Chairman Bobby Seale stepped into an adjoining room and fired several rounds from his .45 into the apartment below. Fortunately, no one was home. The courageous Oakland Panthers then fled the scene, taking with them some thirty-odd dollars in proceeds from the affair which lay in a small box by the door....

An hour later the phone rang at Aaron Chapman's house. On the other end of the line a tearful Minister of Information begged the San Francisco Panthers not to call the police, as he would most certainly face an immediate return to prison. In retrospect, police action then would have saved "the race" a whole lot of grief for years to come, but already the San Francisco Panthers had decided upon another tactic. As Mr. Cleaver's monetary support and media exposure came from an interesting little magazine known as Ramparts, a decision was made to drop the issue squarely on the latter's doorstep. A few days later Ramparts was picketed by the San Francisco Panthers, who charged the magazine with interfering in the affairs of the black community. Miraculously, tension between the two bay area Panther groups came to a formidable halt, and thus was blood shed narrowly averted.

Those who are acquainted only with the media image of the Black Panther Party may find the above account somewhat incredible. The Panthers, if anything, have been pictured mainly as courageous victims of police repression and of counter-intelligence activities plotted by the FBI. That much is true. On the other hand, there is another side. If one fails to distinguish between the dedication and valor of the organization's general membership on one hand, and the political and moral bankruptcy of its self-serving national leadership on the other, one will never understand the Panthers' spectacular rise and decline. (Nor, it can be added, will one ever understand the ludicrous posturings of Eldridge Cleaver today.) The physical intimidation and robbery which the San Francisco Panthers experienced was not an isolated incident. Other organizations, black as well as white, would undergo similar treatment by the Oakland group during the coming years. For example, the independent Los Angeles Black Panthers, led by John Floyd, were given two days to disband.

Eldridge Cleaver, in the same way as others in the national Panther leadership, was (and remains) primarily a creation of the mass media. Through his attorney, Ms. Beverly Axelrod, Cleaver's early writings were published in Ramparts magazine. On his release from prison in late 1966, Attorney Axelrod, Ramparts editor Warren Hinckle, and journalist Robert Scheer (known most recently for his Playboy interview of Jimmy Carter) set about building a media image for Mr. Cleaver. Over a year had passed since Malcolm X has been brutally assassinated, and every attempt was made to fabricate a parallel between the life of Bro. Malcolm and that of Mr. Cleaver. Malcolm X had served time in prison; so had Cleaver. While in prison, Malcolm X had joined the Nation of Islam; so had Cleaver. But there the similarities quickly faded: where Malcolm X had undergone a profound metamorphosis in his personality and thinking, Cleaver's "criminal mentality's remained intact. Cleaver attempted to trace his ideological genealogy from Malcolm X, and attempted to reconstruct the Organization of Afro-American Unity — the name of Malcolm's former organization — in the bay area. Funds suddenly materialized, and Mr. Cleaver opened up his "Black House" headquarters in San Francisco. The OAAU remained a paper organization, however, mostly because Cleaver proved to be an impossible person to work with. He continued to write for Ramparts magazine even after he gave Beverly Axelrod — to whom he dedicated his first book, Soul on Ice — the worst beating of her life. After leaving the hospital she departed for New Mexico, where she began working with Reyes Tijerina and his group.

In early 1967 Cleaver had become preoccupied with the Oakland-based Black Panther Party, with which he had become recently acquainted. One person, Julian Richardson still remembers Cleaver quite vividly. Richardson, a black printer whose shop can be found on McAllister Street in San Francisco, had produced a pamphlet for the Black Panther Party for Self-Defense. One day Cleaver called Richardson to inform him that the Party desired the pamphlets, but did not have the funds to pay for them. Wouldn't Richardson rather have the sexual services of two, 16-year-old Panther Party females? Cleaver inquired. Richardson literally exploded, and slammed down the phone. To my knowledge those pamphlets are still sitting somewhere on the floor of the print shop.



Make no mistake about it. Here is Cleaver in his own words:

> I want to say to the ladies, and I remind you that we're not playing any games, that a very serious situation exists. You have the power to bring a squeaking halt to a lot of things that are going on, and we call that pussy power. We say that political power, revolutionary power grows out of the lips of a pussy. (Post-Prison Writings and Speeches, pp. 142-43)

One does not have to be a Victorian to fully appreciate the depravity of Mr. Cleaver's mind. A victim of this society, yes, but also an active and continuing perpetrator of this society's sicknesses. Like the old folks say, "The boy just ain't right."

Following the attempt by California parole authorities to return Cleaver to prison in late 1968, the latter was offered political asylum in Cuba. It is interesting to note Cleaver's anti-Cuban diatribes today, particulary in light of the fact that he was deported from Cuba for anti-social activities. Panther Party members who travelled to Cuba in the late 1960's were shocked to learn that they would not be accorded the type of media coverage to which they were accustomed in the U.S., that they would not be able to open a BPP office in Havana, and most of all, that they would have to work. Add to this the circumstances surrounding Mr. Cleaver's deportation, and it is no surprise to find that he has nothing but harsh words and prevarications concerning Cuba today. Similarly for Algeria, where Cleaver was at the center of numerous spectacles — including the forced imprisonment of Dr. Timothy Leary for several weeks in Cleaver's home. (The complete story was carried by the Village Voice at the time.)

The point today is that nothing fundamentally in Cleaver has changed — save for the wearing of suit and tie, and the espousing of a conservative and unbridled arrogance, fit in very well with the Cleaver of the late 1960's. The boy weren't nothin' then, and he sure ain't nothin' today! As a "radical" Eldridge Cleaver disgraced both himself and the just cause of millions upon millions of people. As a conservative, however, he is perfectly normal. By all means let reactionaries embrace him, for in the same way as they deserve Richard Nixon, Spiro Agnew, and Ronald Reagan, they deserve every service Mr. Cleaver can render for them. As for our "truth seeking" and "enlightened" DVP, we are wondering how long it will be before they invite Colonel Ponochet to speak, so that he can tell "his side" of the insidious torture and massacre of Chilean nationals which he has engineered, or perhaps even "Seoul brother" Tungsun Park of the South Korean CIA, that we might hear "his side" of the bribery of U.S. Representatives and Senators. As for us, we are quite tired of hooligans and hypocrites — conservative, or otherwise.

Know Yourself, then be Yourself

Pools of bottomless questions trickle through my mind as I stand before my reflection in the mirror...glaring deeply...watching my features change into what I anticipate I will look like as time goes on. "Who am I?" "What am I doing here?" "For what reason was I born"? "And what do I intend to contribute to this body given to me and this world I've been placed in"?

Everyone wants to truely be somebody, not necessarily a movie star. But, when we think of truely living, when we think of true happiness, in fact...I have just described a state of heaven...when we think of these things, our minds shoot to Hollywood and the glamour of having a lot of money. Yet it is so far out of our reach. We visualize Hollywood, lights, cameras, fabulously lavished homes, expensive cars that are in fact, homes on wheels, money..., we visualize all of these things as constituents of heaven. Regardless to the heaven we have been taught of in church..., milk, honey, golden slippers, streets paved of gold and everything lily white, when we close our eyes and think of the happiness we would like to be enjoying, we see all the material wealths of this world.

No one really wants to wear golden slippers when leather is more comfortable. No one really wants to drink milk and honey forever when a sizzling crown steak and a "7up" would just simply taste better. So you see, you heaven is right here on Earth but it starts within yourself.

Staying within armreach of my lifesaver, I'm going to go back to my original question, before I get too far away from my subject and drown. What is yourself or myself for that matter?

Yourself or what you are now consists of many people, many different and conflicting personalities and many, many experiences. But somewhere under all of those influences lies the real you. To see that person come out sometimes may either scare the hell out of your...or send a mile long smile accompanied by total inner sunshine streaming through out your entire body.

You may say something, and immediately stop and wonder, "Where on earch did I get that from"? It's now a part of you and it came from somewhere. Everything you do, see, hear, touch, smell and taste in your life, is picked up and recorded by your subconcious mind...and will reappear at some time in your life.

Why is it that so-called intelligent people guard what goes in the minds of their children? This is why you won't see the Rochefellers or the Nixons' send their children to just any public school. It's not the expense of the school, the wealth of the building and faculty...it's the quality of the education.

The most prized or precious possession one has is himself. Not your body. Your body can be a vegetable; however, you are not classified as dead until your brain stops functioning.

If you can grow and develop your mind into anything you desire, you are in fact, being yourself. Of course, all of our lives are dictated and directly by the influences of this world, which comes in forms from the government to soap operas. You can truely be whatever you want to be, but only by developing your mind. In there, lies the real you.

"As a man thinketh, so is he." Knowledge rules, not the body. This world has got the masses so backward, the women believe all you need to make it in this world is an attractive face and a well-rounded body. Men believe muscles, a hip walk and a good rap will get you anything you want. All of these kinds of minds are still in the same situation. They were before they concluded on what it takes to make it in life, and they will never progress with that kind of thinking.

By all means, look in the mirror if you want to find that special someone you've always heard about. I'm not telling to fall head over heels in love with yourself. But how can you expect love and respect from others if you don't give that much to yourself.

But, if you find that someone within yourself that is really you, for you consist of many people and many personalities...that someone just may assst you in finding that someone else, who is oh so special.

The Glorification of Black People

By WILLIE WHEELER

The inner city is a concrete jungle, there are very few things in large metropolitan areas that confer with the beauty and genius of black people.

In the 1930's the Works Program Association (W.P.A.) during the depression hired painters to do special projects in cities. Prior to this Mexican artists in the 1920's painted symbols of courage, beauty and genius in the form of murals in their community. The murals by the artists in the 30's did not catch on full steam until sometime later.

In 1967 a couple of artists Bill Walker and Jeff Donaldson started the mural movement after they did a piece in Chicago called Wall of Respect.

The murals are a very positive thing, they bring not only aesthetic beauty but they convey the relationships of Black people and their talent and genius which emulates positives reinforcements too.

The University of Massachusetts is in the forefront of the art. Nelson Stevens a departmental member of Afro Am has participated in a number of murals alone in the Springfield area over the past three summers. Nelson is a very fine artist and an industrious promoter of the art program at the University of Massachusetts for our students.

Nelson Stevens has been able to make the beautiful art form of murals good means for artist to continue their studies. Nelson says the University of Mass. has one of largest art departments around.

The murals that were done in Springfield have beautified and glorified and unified that city. Local business people and community people have come to terms and agreements about where the murals could be painted. Business has allowed murals to be painted on the side of their establishments.

In some cases white brutes have destroyed murals because of their superiority complex. The city of Springfield has partially destroyed a mural, they took out the words Wall of Black Music. Wall of Black Music was not meant to be offensive to anyone, it means a tribute to great artists such as Max Roach, Charlie Parke, John Coltrane, and Archie Parker Shepp. And to remind the black community of its genius.

The murals will be continued in the summer of '77 and further. As long as black people do not have any positive reinforcements to identify with the deeper the indignation.

Students Struggle Under Apartheid

In June 16, 1976, to the surprise of the white S-African government, the students peacefully demonstrated in protest against the enforced use of the "Africans" language as the medicine of instruction. The S. African police, as expected by the students, fired at the Black students, and by the end of the week the death toll was 170, 2 white, 168 blacks. African reporters on the scene reported 1,000 killed and many wounded. This student uprising took place about 15 miles away from Hanesburg, where Africans are forced to live in concrete backward blocks called houses.

Africian's, the national language of S. Africa, was enforced as the official medium of instruction of history and mathematics. The Africans identified as the language of the oppressor and a symbol of the whole system of "Bantu Education", which has been a focus of Black resistance since its introduction in 1953.

The Father of Banker Education, Dr. Herdrik Verwoerd described its purpose as - education should start with both fist in the reserves and have its roots in the spirit and being of Bantu society. - There is no place for their Africans in the European community above the level of certain menial forms of labor." The Africans fought its imposition and consider it as "education for slavery." And the current demonstration explosion by African students symbolizes the total rejection of the apartheid system. Apartheid has been designed and constructed to produce and maintain white privilege at the cost of African dispossessors. Under the system, Africans are forced to pay for all their education while whites receive it free up to the high school level.

The accounts of the June uprising by the press has given the impression that the riots were isolated incidents led by holigans. It would be accurate to see them as part of a new phase in the struggle in Southern Africa for liberation, a period of unrelenting military and resistance after a long bill. The brutal repression of the Sharpville incident of 1960, the banning of Black political organizations, and the arrest and exile of Black political leaders.

This thrust has been stimulated by a combination of forces, excluding the victory over colonialism by MPLA in Angola and Frelimo in Mozambique, and the increasing tensions bred by the contradictions of oppression. There have been indications of a guerilla war in the making — a wave of strikes among African workers, the formation of a black student organization dedicated to a radical political charge.

The S. African government as usual blames outside agitators and communists for the violence. Three press talks of "tsotsi" as the intiminder of the people into joining the crowds in the street. But the real causes of the confrontations be in the intensifying oppression of the Blacks by white S. Africans.

Almost 1.5 million Africans live in Soweto, an area artifically created in 1950 by forcing thousands of Black families from the homes in segregated Enclares. As a place to live, Soweto is both a product and a victim of the apartheid system. It has a population of 800,000 officially but an actual population of close to 1.5 million.

The political system that protects white privilege in S.A. has laid down that African's have no permanent rights in the "white" urban areas. They are defined as temporary sojourners whose permanent home is the "tribal areas whose their ancestors lived. Thus the Africans a dispossessed of all economic and political rights in 87 per cent of the land that is reserved for the minority white of settlers. the Africans are to live in the 13 per cent of the total land. To the eyes of the oppressors then this system will provide cheap labor flow for the white owned economy. So the Africans may work in towns and cities but not regard them as homes since key will be migrants from the tribal areas clled "Bantustan," meaning "Black reservations."

In the towns the Africans are not allowed to develop any economic independence not to conduct business "for any purpose other than that of providing for daily essential domestic requirements for the residents."

The Africans under these provisions cannot expand their businesses into viable economic growth and are forced to remain politically powerless.

Standing in the Shadow of Justice

After kidnapping two individuals from the University of Massachusetts Third World community, for a year, the Northampton Justice System have not stopped their lynching. The case of Earl Brown-Craemen Gethers is still unresolved. Apparently, the trend to free their will come from high courts. But the shadows of Justice has not stopped the increase in racism. The Third World community is being pressed in 1976 to repeat its performances (rallies, defense committees, etc.) of last or succumb to the pressures of the masters.

In our Bicentennial year the forces of racism are more apparent and blatent in our present structure. Recently, the attitudes of racism have appeared in the media. Within the past eight weeks the Northampton Puerto Rican community has been with incidents that evolve around cultural racism. On August 11th, the Puerto Rican community was disturbed by a youth who "only threaten to kill all Puerto Rican." Under normal circumstances, an individual who goes around firing guns, would be considered a criminal. Because of the community he was attacking, it is obvious that he was treated with respect even though there was a threat to women and children. One incident would be enough for both sides to understand the picture, but two days later the community was disrespected. A youth apparently borrowed a van from his place of employment without permission. After being pursued by the state troopers in Hadley, the youth was beaten during his apprehension. As usual the reading of one's rights were forgotten, and replaced by the attitudes of racism. "Why don't you go back to where you belong you f ' spic." The next two days in August only emphasize that the shadow of Justice does not stand for the Puerto Rican community in Northampton, Springfield, Holyoke, or other places in the United States.

But the disease of racism is not limited to the Puerto Rican community. The Black community has had continuance disruption by the attitudes. The incidents that resulted into the incarceration of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers have to be seen in the same light. It is obvious that our justice system is not willing to reverse its mistake. In Craemen case the Judge (Hayer) was not willing to accept the expertise of the polygraph examiner. The judge was not willing to listen to the witnesses who could prove Craemen claim, that he was on crutches. It is very obvious that if people could check out the transcripts, we would notice discrepancies among our eye witnesses, the ridiculous picture identification by the state police on displaying one picture before the witnesses, the fact that the witnesses had picked a reverend from Springfield as Craemen Gethers. and racist statement implicating Craemen as ugly, "He's ugly, just like the guy with the shotgun."

Earl Brown on the other hand will be appearing for a motion for a new trial. The problem is that the co-defendant was denied a bid for his third trial. Quite naturally we have to ask what the chances are. The answer lies in the following assertions about what the decisions that have come forth. One, is that the beginning talks in placement of Earl Brown centered on a contract. This has not been used by the Massachusetts system to the extent that other state have applied this method. On February 27, it was disclosed that Earl Brown would be on the work release program, April 16, 1976. Because the Boston Correctional Services had to approve the program, confirmation was not granted until June 1. The time in between the three dates were unproductive. The work release program eased the tension of the people who have marched, written letters, and etc., but in reality it has proven to be another tool used that the system to deceive people.

At any one time the program can be cancelled because of some misbehavior on my part or general investigation by the institution. Secondly, few people realize that one has to pay transportation and living fees. This is a legal form of restitution for a crime that has drawn national attention. As a final note the program could be classified as a rehabilitation project to test whether people can conform to societal values.

Another approach to the upcoming trial date, is that the status of the people involved have some influence. In this respect, Earl Brown was involved in organizational structure that parallel society. Craemen Gethers was a man as the court view it, that had no contacts with the society around him. In the overall picture, the judges are of a certain class status which is higher than the two students currently. But the differences are not held to income status alone, but as we see there are cultural differences as well. The third approach view that no matter what material is thrown in the judge's face, that the work release program should be a satisfactory phrase for this defendent, and that the man supposedly had a fair trial. To reiterate some points, the court's are the last frontier for justice. If this were to be a true statement we must ask how can racism be overlooked in a trial case? In the October trial the picture identification was a very embarrassing position for the court. It was announced that they had made a mistake in the court proceeding, but to no avail. It was obvious from the set that the media played to much of a part in the March trial. Unfortuately, this was the message that the client overlooked. It was in this trial where things are messed up. First, another Robert Brown is found guilty for rape. Supposedly this has no influence on the jury, but apparently the assumption is far from the truth. Secondly, it was in this trial that the Judge (Tamburello) had to go to a conference, and actually imposed his ruling on the jury to come up with an answer (verdict). Thirdly, it was the October trial where the lawyer knew that the decision was going again the defendent and asked that friends and relative check on their car meter time and get a paper. We have to stop here, because the accusations could go on. But a final note, is that the whole process has been in the shadow of justice with an innocent man standing in jail.

In summation, the racist act have continued with the Cumberland farm incident. Where recently two of the three people have been of all matters, while brother Leon Thomas still has to stand trial for possesion of a dangerous weapon (non-chucks). But the new cases only express the intense attitudes that are being perpetuated toward the Third World and White student population. The court system has only acknowledge that there is no justice for these people. For the many people who are political prisoners thoughout whether incarcerated or waiting, we can not relinguish that we all are Standing in the Shadow of Justice.

Speech by Prime Minister Fidel Castro Ruz Regarding October 6th Bombing of Cuban Jetliner

Reviewing the terrorist attacks carried out against Cuba after the US government launched their insolent threats against our country, we have the following:

April 6, 1976: Two fishing boats, Ferro 119 and Ferro 123, are attacked by pirate boats coming from Florida, causing the death of fisherman Bienvenido Mauriz and serious damage to the vessels.

April 22: A bomb is placed in the Cuban Embassy in Portugal, causing the death of two comrades and seriously wounding others, and destroying the offices totally.

June 5: The Cuban Mission to the UN is attacked with explosives, causing heavy material losses.

July 0: A bomb explodes in the wagon carrying luggage destined for a Cubana de Aviacion flight at the Jamaican airport a few minutes before its take off.

July 10: A bomb explodes in the offices of the British West Indies Company in Barbados, which represents the interests of the Cubana de Aviacion in that country.

July 23: A technician of the National Fishing Institute, Dartanan Diaz Diaz, is murdered in an attempt to kidnap the Cuban Consul in Merida (Mexico).

August 9: Two officials of the Cuban Embassy in Argentina are kidnapped. Since then, no news has been received about their fate.

August 18: A bomb explodes in the offices of Cubana de Aviacion in Panama, causing considerable damage.

October 6: While in flight, a Cubana de Aviacion plane is destroyed with 73 passengers.

As one can notice, in only two months two sabotages of extraordinary seriousness were organized against Cuban planes in international flights full of passengers, one of which was fatal. Behind these actions is the CIA. Almost without exception, on every occasion, the terrorist organizations with headquarters in the U.S. that exist unpunished in the territory of that country, essentially the five of them which make up the so-called CORU, claimed responsibility for these events.

I wish to remind all of you that the CIA has been the author of criminal actions which have increasingly been affecting the international community in the last few years. The CIA invented and encouraged the hijacking of planes against Cuba during the first years of the Revolution. The CIA invented pirate attacks from foreign bases as part of their policies of aggression against Cuba. The CIA was the one that invented the destabilization of foreign governments. The CIA re-introduced in the contemporary world the terrible policy of planning and attempting the murder of State leaders. The CIA now has invented the terrible resource of exploding civilian planes while in flight. It is necessary for the world community to become aware of the seriousness of the implications of these events. Even when the U.S. Senate investigated and publicly recognized the endless CIA plans to murder the leaders of the Cuban Revolution, and its dedication to this task for many years, the U.S. government has given no explanation to the government of Cuba of these actions, nor has it made any type of apology. We suspect that the U.S. government has not given up these practices.

On October 9th, only three days after the criminal sabotage in Barbados, a message which had been sent by the CIA to one of their agents in Havana was intercepted. This message, which was transmitted from the CIA's headquarters in Langley, Virginia, says among other things, the following: "Please report as soon as possible any information in relation to Fidel's attendance at the First Anniversary Independence ceremony in Angola, November 11. If affirmative, try to find out complete itinerary and Fidel's visits to other countries on that same trip." Instructions of another day before this reads as follows: "What is the official reaction and what is the particular reaction on bomb attacks against Cuban offices abroad? What will they do to avoid them and prevent them? Who do they suspect are responsible? Will there be reprisals?

We expect the U.S. government would not dare to deny the veracity of these instructions from the CIA's central office as wll as many others which they have sent to the very same persons as open acts of espionage. We have the code, the figures and full evidence of the authenticity of these communications. In this concrete case, the alleged agent recruited by the CIA, from the very first moment and over a period of ten years, has kept the government of Cuba fully informed in detail. The CIA supposed that the agent had been able to place a modern electronic microtransmitter, given to him by the CIA, in the offices of Comrade Osmany Cienfuegos, Secretary of the Executive Committee of the Council of Ministers. That is why they were so certain of receiving all pertinent reports about any trips of the Prime Minister of Cuba abroad well before. Those that imagine that the CIA has rectified its methods of mended even a little bit, as a consequence of all the denunciations made within North American Society against their horrifying methods, are completely mistaken. Their methods, in any case, will become more subtle and more perfidious. Why was the CIA interested in finding out the exact schedule of the possible trip of the Prime Minister to Angola and other countries of Africa on the occasion of November 11th? Why did they want to know which measures would be taken to avoid and prevent terrorist acts? Due to the importance of this event and because it sheds clarifying light on the behavior and the activities of the CIA, we have considered it convenient to make it public, although this will imply sacrificing a valuable source of information.

Three years ago the government of Cuba signed an agreement on air and maritime piracy and other crimes, with the United Stated government. This was, on the part of our country, an important contribution to the solution of the very serious world problem of airplane hijackings. The government of Cuba did not demand any type of conditions, not even the ceasing of the criminal economic blockade maintained by the U.S. government against our country in order to sign this agreement. Cuba, without having any type of legal obligations aside from that, returned to a U.S. enterprise two million dollars that some hijackers had brought with them and which was confiscated by our authorities. On a certain occasion, the Cuban authorities at Rancho Boyeros Airport saved the lives of numerous U.S. citizens who, coming from Florida, had to make an emergency landing after the U.S. police had attempted to stop the plane's take-off by shooting its tires. We would do exactly the same thing in a similar situation strictly for humanitarian reasons.

What a difference from the brutal behavior of those who armed these murderous hands and encouraged the destruction of our plane in Barbados. Cuba has never made and will never make propaganda use of airplane hijackers and is willing to cooperate with any responsible government in the struggle against piracy and air terrorism, but the U.S. government has been incapable of fulfilling the terms of the agreement signed with Cuba. In February, 1976, after the unpunished murder of a Cuban fisherman and the destruction of two boats in a pirate attack near Florida, we warned the U.S. government that if these actions were repeated and if their authors were left unpunished, the agreement would cease to be in force. There was no answer. There was no investigation or punishment of the crime.

The events that occurred afterwards are even more serious, because the terrorist action unleased by the hostility and policy of the United States towards Cuba has culminated in the incredible brutality of destroying Cuban civilian planes while in the air. The agreement signed between the governments of the United States and Cuba on February 15, 1973, cannot continue in force after this brutal crime.

The government of Cuba sees itself forced to necessarily cancel it and will communicate this this very afternoon to the government of the United States. According to the terms of the agreement, it states that at any moment during its period in force and through a written denunciation presented six months in advance, one of the parties can inform the other of its decision to cancel the agreement. Following what was strictly convened and proceeding to communicate this denunciation today, October 15, 1976, the agreement will be in force only up to April 15, 1977. We will not sign with the United States any agreement of this nature again, until there is a total ceasing of the terrorist campaign unleashed against Cuba, until effective guarantees against these actions are given to our people and until all hostile activities and aggressions by the U.S. against Cuba are finally put to an end.

There cannot be any type of cooperation between an aggressor country and a country attacked. If after April, 1977, when the agreement will stop being in effect, any U.S. commercial plane is hijacked to Cuba, both the plane, the crew members and the passengers will receive all facilities to immediately return to their country. Cuba will never encourage the hijacking of planes nor will it be tolerant with hijackers, but it cannot maintain any unilateral commitments to return them and punish them, in the case of a government which is fundamentally responsible for this brutal terrorist offensive against our country.

The agreements signed with Canada, Mexico, Colombia and Venezuela in this regard will continue to be fully in effect. Cuba is also willing to cooperate with Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, Colombia, Jamaica, Trinidad, and Tobago, Guyana, Barbados and all other countries of the Caribbean area and of Central America who act on good will around any set of measures that are considered appropriate to fight these crimes. Cuba is even willing to have discussions with the U.S., whatever government is elected next November, about a solution to these problems. But, I repeat, this must be on the basis of the final ceasing of all acts of hostility and aggression against our homeland.

We could ask ourselves: what is the intention behind these crimes? To destroy the Revolution? It is impossible. The Revolution becomes even stronger in the face of every blow, in the face of every aggression. It becomes deeper, it becomes more conscious, it becomes stronger. To intimidate the people? Impossible. In the face of the cowardice and monstrosity of such crimes, our people become stronger and every man and woman becomes a fervent and heroic soldier who is willing to die.

The Revolution instilled in all of us the ideas of human fraternity and solidarity. It made all of us close brothers, and the blood of one belongs to all, and to each one of us. That is why the pain belongs to all of us, the mourning is by all of us. But the invincible and powerful strength of millions of people is our strength, and our strength is not only the strength of one people. It is the strength of all those people who have already been redeemed from slavery and of all those who throughout the world struggle to eradicate exploitation, injustice and crime from human society.

Our strength is in the end the strength of patriotism and of internationalism. The ideas we struggle for are the banners of the most honest and dignified men of today's world, and the certain and victorious emblem of tomorrow's world. Imperialism, capitalism, fascism, neocolonialism, racism, and the brutal exploitation of man by man in all of its forms and manifestations are coming to an end, as humanity's true history dawns, and their mad servants know it. That is why their reactions are ever more desperate, more hysterical, more cynical, and more impotent. Only that could explain such repulsive and senseless crimes such as that in Barbados.

For the past one hundred years, the shooting of the medical students in 1876 has been recalled and condemned with perpetual indignation. For thousands of years, our people will remember, condemn and hate this horrible murder from the depths of their spirit. Our athletes, who died precisely in the prime of their lives and their capabilities, will be eternal champions in our hearts. Their gold medals will not remain in the depths of the ocean, but will rise as a spotless sun and as a symbol in the sky of Cuba. They will not receive the honor of the Olympic Games, but they have forever climbed the beautiful Mount Olympus of the martyrs of our Homeland. Our crew members, our heroic air workers, and all of our dedicated compatriots who were cowardly murdered on that day, will eternally live in the minds, the love and the dedication of our people.

An ever more revolutionary homeland, more dignified, more socialist and more internationalist, will be the magnificent monument that our people will erect to their meeory and to the memory of all those who have fallen or that will fall for the revolution.

Towards our Guyanese and Korean brothers who died on that day, we offer our most fervent thoughts at this moment. They remind us that the imperialist crimes have no frontiers, that we all belong to the same human family and that our struggle is a universal one. We cannot say that the pain is shared, but rather that the pain is multiplied. Millions of Cubans cry today, next to our beloved comrades who were the victims of this abominable crime. And when a strong and manly people cries, injustice trembles.

Open Letter on Southern Africa

By PLAYTHELL BENJAMIN

In order to clarify my objection, it is necessary to review certain acts regarding Zimbabwe. The beginning of white settlement in Zimbabwe was due to the activities of Cecil J. Rhodes in the late nineteenth century. To whites, Rhodes is remembered as an empire builder; to thinking Africans, he is remembered as a pirate, brigand, and rogue. The history of Rhodes' relations with Africans is replete with treachery and debauchery.

driven by a lust for African land and gold, he made agreements with Africans and then unilaterally disregarded them, smuggled in an army from England while frigning good relations with the African king, and caused the murder of the trusting king, Lubengula, ruler of the Ndebele people. The direct result of Rhodes' thievery and murder is contemporary Zimbabwean society. The difference between South African and Zimbabwean society is like "Tweedle dee and Tweedle dum"; you have six on the one hand and a half dozen on the other. It is impossible to believe that the specter of ignorance prevails so heavily at C.B.S. News that no one understood these facts.

There is, however, one big difference between the Zimbabwean situation and that of South Africa. The Zimbabwean government is universally regarded as illegal. It is viewed as such by the United Nations and Britain — who is responsible for the white presence there. Most nations of the world treat the Smith regime as outlaws in their foreign policy. Even the U.S. government, with a long history of reactionary alliances, does not recognize the present government — though they continue to violate the U.N. embargo by virtue of the Byrd Amendment.

Finally, the issue here is why is C.B.S. so unabashedly partisan to white minority rule? Enlightened world opinion has soundly denounced the Smith clique, yet you possess the unmitigated gall to openly defend them. To quote as credible information Ian Smith's remark that "majority rule means marxist rule" appears to me as a willful dereliction of reportorial duty. It also lends the lie to any contention that C.B.S. News attempts to be objective on all issues.

Many of the American people must wonder why the Marxists are so often on the winning side. To say that Marxists are supporting the liberation forces in Zimbabwe is in our opinion to sing their praises! There is no more just cause in the world today than that of the black people of southern Africa, including that of Israel which you all support. With the highly effective investigative capacity of C.B.S. News, I am amazed that you appear unable to see through Ian Smith's charade. I therefore believe your blindness to be willful.

If there be any reader who, having followed our argument thus far, remains unconvinced, we submit a final piece of evidence. Thursday morning, May 20 C.B.S. News presented a series of interviews with whites in Zimbabwe. They were all pro-minority rule and represented Europeans as well as Americans. One of the characters most prominently featured was the white American who directs the psychological warfare effort for the Smith regime. There he stood, reflected on the silver screen, pasty-faced and foggy-minded, spouting pious platitudes in a vain attempt to justify white minority rule. He then went on to bore us with sophomoric tales of super whitey.

There were other Americans who argued that the white minority should remain in power because "the streets of Salisbury are safer than the streets of Los Angeles." It seems that C.B.S. has an infinite capacity for nonsense when apologizing for white racism. This seems an almost inescapable conclusion after carefully scrutinizing your commentary and reportage on southern Africa. If we are to accept the argument that a white facist minority should rule Africa by virtue of superior technology and the ability to impose order, then it is equally valid to argue in defense of the Nazi Reich's right to rule in Europe.

Here again, the only difference between the two phenomena is that in one instance the victims are black and in the other they are white. There is no difference between the methods used by Hitler in his conquest of Europe and those used by all European nations in Africa. This was adroitly pointed out by the distinguished West Indian scholar, George Padmore, thirty-five years ago. And no one can deny the superiority of German technology in the Nazi era, nor is there any question about their ability to impose order.

Let us be abundantly clear on one final point: The capitalist nations of the world created the problems in southern Africa. It is they who created the anti-democratic colonial systems in Africa while at the same time proclaiming the virtue of democracy. In South Africa, blacks outnumber whites four to one and in Zimbabwe twenty-two to one. The black liberation movements in southern Africa (the P.A.C. and A.N.C. of Azania, the A.N.C. of Zimbabwe and S.W.A.P.O. of Namibia) enjoy a dedicated, articulate and intelligent leadership. They have demonstrated their commitment to their people through devoted struggle. They have gone far beyond any reasonable expectation in seeking a peaceful solution. The leaders of the capitalist world consistently turned a deaf ear to their pleas for justice.

If the southern African leadership now turns to the communist for aid, it should be viewed as an eloquent expression of poetic justice for the capitalist West. To suggest that the black leadership should be more concerned with the preservation of white capitalism than black liberation is a vulgar racist fantasy! It is amazing that it is necessary to argue against slavery at all in this day and time. For as the great nineteenth century Afro-American leader, Fredrick Douglass, said, "There is not a man beneath the

The People Must Be Fed and Sheltered

The problem of famine and destitution has variously been explained, and its causes has been advocated to be a result of the drastic change in the physical and meterological phenomenan, disruption in the demographic structure, apathy of the people etc. Common among this is the demographic argument. Demographers look at the problem from the point of view population growth, essentially in the third world, in comparison to food production. Convinced by their narrow and one sided conclusions, they warned of possible holocust resulting from this so called trade-off between population and food production.

Indeed, it is desperately urgent to sound the alarm — but not because eternal laws of nature make it possible to feed the globe's population. The alarm must be sounded because the economic and social system of a class society condemns untold multitudes to privation, degradation and premature death. The alarm must be sounded because the economic and social system of capitalism and imperialism prevents the urgent needed full mobilization of the potential social surplus and the attainment of rates of economic advancement that can be secured with it. The alarm must be sound because the system of exploitation and plunder negates the rational and meaningful utlization of social surplus.

In the era of imperialism famine is not a result of absolute want, rather whatever its incidental origin, is developed from the policy of throw away prices which the profiting classes launch against the laboring masses. Only the oppressed people of the world are vulnerable to famine and hunger. It is against this background that famine, hunger, malnutrition, desease and all the other ills of a class society must be seen. It is also against this background that the poverty, destitution, and degradition of the impoverished people throughout the world must be seen. It is with the same background that the poverty, ignorance, and total deprivation of the American Ghettos must be understood.

As a social scientist once wrote, "what at one pole is the accumulation of wealth, at the other is.. the accumulation of poverty, suffering, slavery, despotism ignorance and moral degradation." The essence of class society is this very connection.

Famine in History.

Even though some times it would seem so, hunger is not a problem endemic to the contemporary world, not a calamity of today's impoverished masses alone. Hunger has affected in an almost identical manner the oppressed classes throughout history. Hunger is an unquestionable phenomenan in a CLASS SOCIETY WHERE THE EXPLOITATION OF ONE BY THE OTHER IS A GOVERNING PRACTICE.

A recorded 450 famines were known in Europe between 1000 to 1850 A.D. In period of extreme famine cannibalism was practiced and merchants traded in human flesh. In fudal times the inhabitants of towns besieged by the famine ate wild grasses, roots and barks of trees,and like some animals practiced a kind of collective hibernation. They spent four or five of the coldest months of the year in a semi-lethargic state, sleeping most of the time, making the least possible movement and only taking care of their most urgent needs.

In the 18th. and 19th. Century, when colonialism dedicated to the lofty task of forcefully introducing its economic-social practices and thus disrupting the existing social relations, millions were forced to purish. Half the populations of Madras, Mysore and Hyderabaddin India died of starvation. In 1868 more than 300,000 Algerians died for the same reason. In the same century 100 million people also starved to death in China.

In Ethiopia, as ealse where in the neo-colonial Third World countries, famine, poverty, malnutrition and deprivation is the sickening reality. It was estimated that in late 19th. century a quarter of a million people lost their lives. This same period also witnessed the loss of millions of heads of cattle. The situation in the present century, though quite drastically changed for some countries, is still the same for the majority of the colonial and neo-colonial countries. The perpetuation of famine during this period of monopoly capital is because the structural intigration of these societies to world imperialism has given rise to the condition of immobility and 'under developingness!'. This relationship has also resulted in the creation and ascendence to power of a wasteful and subservient class within this neo-colonial countries, which more than any thing has been the chief agents in the perpetuation of hunger, ignorance, unemployment the general backwardness.

The situation in Ethiopia

In Ethiopia, since the outbreak of the famine hundreds of thousands have died and twice as many left homeless. The then Emperor has shown total indifference. In fact there was a total cover up of this human tragedy, until Ethiopian students, other progressives and the international progressive media exposed it.

Today the situation, though not as grave, is still bad. The current anti-people military junta though has propegated a major campaign against the famine, has in fact done very little to better the condition of the starving masses. In its bloody attempt to suppress progressive forces, particularly the Eritrean freedom fighters, hundreds of thousands of people, whose houses were bombed, whose farms were destroyed were made refugee in neighboring countries. In the Sudan alone there are over one hundred thousand refugees, under conditions which has no parallel in present day history.

Finally we appeal to all progressives and humanitarians to come to a Fund Raising Night. The Fund Raising Night will be held at the UNITARIAN CHURCH OF NORTHAMPTON, 220 MAIN ST. on Friday, the 29th of October at 6:00 p.m. There will be slides, speaker and an Ethiopian Dinner will be served. Donation will be $2.50 (including dinner). Tickets will be sold at the door. For information call, 739-8978.

Framed Unionists Win Growing Support

HOLYOKE, Mass. — A broad support movement is growing here for two union organizers who face frame-up conspiracy charges.

The two organizers, Allex Markley, a staff representative in Western Massachusetts for the United Electrical workers union (UE) and Tony Suares, an activist in the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW), were indicted last August on charges of conspiring to blow up several trucks. The charges were linked to an 11-week strike that UE Local 259 waged against the Worthington Compressor Co. plant here in fall 1975. Markley and Suares face up to 60 years in jail and a $60,000 fine if convicted.

The indictments are based entirely on the testimony of an informer for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms [ATF], a division of the U.S. Treasury Department. The circumstances surrounding the arrest of Markley and Suares suggested ATF was trying to force them to inform on other unionists and act as spies for the agency. The two are scheduled to go to trial in a Boston federal court next February.

The indictment alleges that Markley and Suares transferred toilet paper tubes filled with gun powder and fuses to others as part of their alleged conspiracy. One alleged recipient was an ATF undercover agent named T.G. O'Reilly.

But Markley and Suares charge that it was O'Reilly "who repeatedly urged the use of explosives and initiated many conversations for this purpose." Markley says he was introduced to O'Reilly during the first week of the strike and that O'Reilly badgered him for the next nine weeks. O'Reilly represented himself as a sympathizer who was not a member of a labor organization, a believable "cover" since there was a considerable community support for the strike.

Suares, a friend of Markley's who dropped by the UE hall one day when O'Reilly was there, ended up a codefendant.

According to Markley, when ATF agents arrested him on July 18, eight months after the alleged offense they held him incommunicado for 12 hours in Springfield, Mass. There they interrogated him on UE affairs and other area unions and pressured him to become a paid informer-provacateur under their control.

"They made it clear that I could be a great help to them because of my position in the union," continued Markley. This "great help" included collecting damaging information and "(framing) leaders of other unions on similar charges."

ATF agents implied that if Markley helped them, his indictment would be dropped. "They even mentioned that when I wasn't under indictment, money could change hands in exchange for information," said Markley.

ATF has refused to comment on the case beyond stating that Markley was identified to them as a "potential violator of the law," that the Bureau targets individuals, not groups, and that ATF has the explosive devices they claim Markley and Suares supplied.

The ATF is an increasingly active member of the "intelligence community," according to Frank Donner, a leading civil liberties attorney and expert on the political police. "The ATF has a long history of the most unrestricted and unscrupulous use of informers," said Donner in an interview with the Guardian.

"They've been exposed in three instances in recent years. One of their informers, acting as a provocateur, infiltrated several Chicano groups in Los Angeles and was exposed when he tried to sell them some weapons and entrap them on gun charges. A similar incident occurred two years ago in Seattle. And finally, one of their informers was Sara Jane Moore, the woman who tried to shoot President Ford last year."

The Markley-Suares case has sparked solidarity from many unions and civil liberties organizations. The Pioneer Valley Central Labor Council and the Holyoke Central Labor Council, representing 52,000 workers in the area, have recently joined in calling for dismissal of the charges.

The UE is solidly behind Markley and Suares. A resolution mandating actions in their support was voted at the UE convention last month in Cleveland.

A mass rally to defend Markley and Suares will be held Oct. 28 at 7 p.m. at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst campus. Another support demonstration will be held in Springfield Oct. 30.

The defense committee is also raising funds for the trial, since federal law prohibits unions from spending money for legal fees.

Five College Black Studies

The Five College Black Studies Executive Committee's Faculty Seminar on "Blacks and Whites in the American Political Process," scheduled for November 3, 1976 has been postponed. The seminar was to be held at 7:30 p.m. in the 1886 Room of Mary Woolley Hall, Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.

Its rescheduling will be announced.

Miriads of time shall pass and your life as you know it will mean nothing. Earth shall have changed its recognizeable form to new dimensions in space. Beings from evoluted time shall inherit the newly formed Earth still suffering from its evil past inhabitants. Beings that were once considered oppressed Beings that will once more clean up the devils mess.

Southern Africa Support Committee

The SASC is organized to increase awareness and to promote support through Education, Political Action and the Raising of Funds and Resources in the Five (5) College area, for the National liberation movement in Southern Africa.

From the meeting held Sunday, October 24, 1976: We are establishing our new office in New Africa House. Billy from the Amherst SASC volunteered to coordinate the office. We still need people to staff the office and to help in communications and activity planning. This will include helping to screen and catalogue all incoming mail and correspondence. The office will also serve as a community resource center on southern Africa.

One of the events planned this coming week is a political and cultural poetry reading organized by the Smith College SASC. The reading will be held in the Cultural Center at Smith College on Friday, October 29, from 2-5 p.m. Include will be the work of Bhaki Langa and Andrew Salky and will feature "Poems from the Battlefield", poems written by African national liberation fighters.

Our next meeting will be at 8 p.m., November 1, Room 114, New Africa House. Work on the November 1 agenda will include:

1. A Max Roach-Archie Shepp Southern Africa Support Committee benefit concert sometime around the 10th or 11th of December. Sponsors, speakers, place for the event, publicity, and other important details will be worked out at this meeting.
2. Hope from Smith SASC discussed working on a "Five College Lecture Fund" and will need the support of the entire SASC to put this proposal together.
3. A clothing drive for the peoples of southern Africa. We must co-ordinate a central drop-off point at each campus and within the larger working community.

The committee members present discussed the importance of not selecting speakers who might exploit the situation in southern Africa for their own personal or organizational gains.

We urge people to attend this next important meeting. Come prepared and try to be prompt.

AS IN VIETNAM YESTERDAY, SO IN SOUTHERN AFRICA TODAY!

Prospects for Free Social Existense

On Nov. 19-21, 1976 Hampshire College is sponsoring a conference entitled, "Anarchy: Prospects for Free Social Existence." The conference will consist of small workshops, lectures, and film, theatre and music events which approach anarchism from a number of perspectives.

We are looking for people who would like to lead workshops as well as have other ideas for the conference. We hope to attract a large number of interested people from the East Coast. The difficulty of keeping coops alive in our capitalist society is one possible subject for discussion ya'll might find particularly relevant.

H· Rap Brown to be Freed

NEW YORK [LNS] — After nearly ten years of intense government harassment, eighteen years on the FBI's most wanted list and five years behind bars, black revolutionary H. Rap Brown will soon be freed from prison. In late September, a U.S. Court of Appeals in Louisiana overturned Brown's conviction for interstate transportation of firearms while under indictment in 1968.

Center for Constitutional Rights lawyers had filed a motion for a new trial in June of 1974 on the basis of disclosed FBI counterintelligence activity (COINTELPRO) against Brown, as a leader of the black movement. In addition to the COINTELPRO evidence, Brown's lawyers also argued that his trial and five year sentence violated due process of law because trial Judge Lansing Mitchell has been determined to convict him.

Judge Mitchell's bias was revealed when a New Orleans patent lawyer reported statements he had heard the judge make at a bar association meeting in Mississippi just before presiding over the trial. The attorney testified that Judge Mitchell said he "was going to be very sure that he didn't get sick because he was going to get that nigger."

The Appeals Court's September 24 decision overturns that previous conviction on the grounds that the judge was racially motivated; remands the case for a new trial; and requests that the new trial judge examine all FBI COINTELPRO documents pertaining to Brown.

Brown was first attacked by the government on incitement to riot and arson charges stemming from a speech he made in Cambridge, Maryland in 1967. He was later arrested on other charges designed for harassment, severely restricted in his travel and was shot in the face with buckshot by a Maryland deputy sheriff.

On March 9, 1970, the day his trial for incitement to riot was set to begin, Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) organizers Ralph Featherstone and Che Payne were blown up by a bomb set in their car — a bomb that many said was meant for Brown. That same day, Brown went underground.

Eighteen months later he was wounded and arrested by New York City police in an incident in which he was charged with a robbery attempt on a bar and known hangout for narcotics dealers in the black community. After serving five years on assault and robbery charges stemming from this incident, Brown was granted parole on September 24. He is scheduled to be released on October 21. Brown would have had to begin serving his sentence on the 1968 federal firearms conviction if the appeals challenge against it in Louisiana had not been successful.

"I'm tremendously excited," said attorney William Kunstler about the court's ruling on Brown. "However, the persecution of this man has ripped his family apart, contributed to the death of his mother, and (his wife) Lynn Brown's mother and father, kept him in jail for five years and deprived the black people of one of their most dedicated and capable leaders. He is a classic case of political persecution."

Speech Delivered by David Sibeko at the 31st General Assembly Session of the United Nations

Mr. President:

The person who should have been addressing this August assembly is not available. For 16 years now he has been a prisoner of the South African white minority regime in one form or another.

In 1960 he masterminded a political campaign which almost toppled the apartheid regime; he was arrested, tried and sentenced to 3 years hard labor. When he finished his sentence, served in prisons all around the country, a special law was enacted and he became the first political prisoner in this century to be detained in the notorious former leper colony, Robben Island maximum security prison. He was kept there for six years, after which he was removed and placed under house arrest and a maze of other restrictions in Galeshewe Village — an African township in the diamond city of Kimberly. He has been there ever since.

As you all know I am talking about Mangaliso Sobukwe, the President of the Pan Africanist Congress and National leader of the Azanian people. I am honoured to be standing here in tte name of this truly great son of Africa to address you on behalf of the struggling African majority in my country.

South Africa is today in the grips of the worst political crisis since Sharpeville, the acronym of the political campaign Mangaliso Sobukwe masterminded. The world is marvelling at the impassioned and raw courage of Azania's school children who are battling well armed para-military police, many of whom are veterans of anti-guerilla campaigns in Zimbabwe and Namibia.

The para-military police move in armoured cars, are supported by helicopters and are armed with modern pistols, rifles and machine guns. The young freedom fighters move on foot and they have only stones, clubs, and petrol bombs as weapons.

Dating from June 16 when Black anger burst out following the cold-blooded murder of a young school boy by police, during a peaceful, and indeed jovial demonstration against the imposition of Afrikaans in Soweto schools, the writing on the wall clearly spells out that the Azanian masses are joined in a final thrust against hated white domination. The non-stop demonstrations, defying wanton killings of thousands of school children and other demonstrators, are sufficient evidence to prove that this struggle will not let up until apartheid colonial rule is overthrown.

As a result, the white minority regime no longer governs, it is simply fighting for survival.

Countless demonstrations leading to violent confrontations with the police have and are taking place all over Azania. The police are absolutely brutal and they have killed thousands, and not 377 as they claimed yesterday. Tsietsi Mashinini, who personally led several of the demonstrations in Soweto, tells how, when he visited a mortuary after the first shootings in Soweto, he counted up to 365 bodies. At that time the police were claiming to have killed no more than a few dozen demonstrators.

The heightened resolve of the Azanian masses to make every sacrifice necessary in order to attain their freedom makes the National Uprising at home a unique event in the annals of the African liberation struggles. The white colonial regime in Pretoria desperately tries to put on a business as usual facade but the realities are too stark for anybody else to join in the pathetic selk-deception.

Successive white minority regimes have attempted to insulate the white oligarchy in South Africa from the flowing tide of revolutionary violence which has brought down Portuguese colonial rule in Angola, Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique, and is now buffeting the brittle dykes of white domination in Namibia and Zimbabwe. At the same time the forces of national liberation in Azania, agains the most formidable odds, have laboured steadily to create favorable conditions for popular armed struggle against our mortal enemy — white settler domination.

The struggle in Azania has not been favoured with base areas along our borders. The rebellion had to grow from within. The Pan Africanist Congress has always followed this approach to the struggle. In the Revolutionary Message to the Nation of September, 1967, Acting President Potlako Leballo warned combatants not to heed the fulminations of the reactionary chorus that says "Guerilla warfare can't win in South Africa". He stressed that objective conditions for armed revolution are ever present in the South African situation. "By objective conditions we mean that the vast majority of the people of Azania have been completely alienated from the Herrenvolk state. They owe it absolutely no loyalty; they consider its police and army as forces of occupation; its industries, commerce and farming as machines of their enslavement; its white made laws as devoid of all morality, and the philosophy of apartheid as absolutely repugnant."

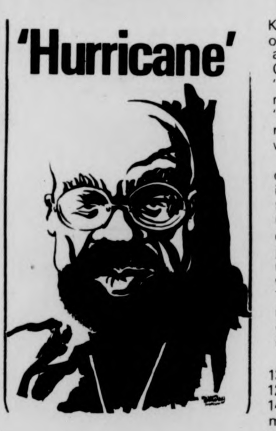
Prosecution Pressures Black Woman to Testify Against Hurricane Carter

By LESLIE FEINBERG



NEW YORK — Carolyn Kelley, a former associate of Rubin (Hurricane) Carter, stated that the Passaic County Prosecutor's office has tried to pressure her to testify falsely against Mr. Carter in his current trial. He is charged with murder stemming from an incident in a Patterson, New Jersey, tavern, and has maintained his innocence all along.

Mr. Carter, a well-known boxer who had spoken out against racism, and his co-defendent John Artis were framed up in 1967 and sentenced to life imprisonment. Due to tremendous public support, they won a new trial last March on the grounds that evidence had been withheld at their first trial.

PROSECUTION OUT TO GET CARTER

Ms. Kelley said that she was interviewed two weeks ago by four staff members of the Passaic County Prosecutor's office and that they urged her to make incriminating statements about Mr. Carter concerning his alleged ownership of a shotgun shortly before three persons were killed in 1966 in the tavern.

In still another interview Ms. Kelley explained how on the night of Sept. 28, Martin R. Kayne, as assistant prosecutor in Passaic County, and three investigators "ried to pressure and convince me" to make false statements. "But they added things that were not true in the statement they wanted from me," she added.

This unexpected turn in the case came as the start of jury selections is moving slowly. The defense and the prosecution have asked Passaic County Judge William Marchese to call for a new pool of prospective jurors. If the judge grants the joint motion, then the start of the trial will be delayed at least a month. The trial is being held in Jersey City rather than Passaic County because of the prejudicial pre-trial publicity in Passaic County.

Demonstration on November 13th in New York City beginning at 12:00 . Demonstration will start at 14th Street and Union Square and march to the United Nations for a rally demanding Freedom for the five Puerto Rican Nationalist Political Prisoners, Independence for Puerto Rico, Freedom for All Political Prisoners.

Demonstration called by Attica Now!, Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee, Puerto Rican Socialist Party, El Comite, Workers World Party, Youth Against War and Fascism, National Alliance Against Racism and Political Repression, Nationalist Party of Puerto Rico and others.

Three busses are being organized to travel to the demo. from western Massachusetts. Based on fundraising projections the ticket price to NY will be $5.00. Folks without the necessary money can put down what they can afford and go with that.

250 Rally in Harlem to Save Black Center

By NICK DE FREITAS

NEW YORK — "We won't let the racist forces take the Schomburg out of Harlem," declared the chairman of a gathering of over 250 residents of this oppressed Black community who paced the Harlem YMCA in support of the campaign to save the world-famous Black library across the street.

Organized by the Citizens Coalition to Save the Schomburg, the evening's event was called in response to the policy of racist discrimination that has left the Schomburg, a Harlem landmark and treasure of irreplaceable documents and manuscripts of Black history, in a state of decay.

Chairing tonight's meeting was Larry Holmes, a leading organizer of the Citizens Coalition and a member of the Center for United Labor Action (CULA).

The New York Public Library system, it was charged by the all-Black panel at the meeting, has callously neglected its responsibilities in maintaining what amounts to the world's largest repository of Black history, purchased in 1926 for $10,000 from Arthur Schomburg, a Puerto Rican of African descent.

Paul Williams, a member of the Schomburg staff and activist in the struggle to save the Schomburg, explained to the audience at the meeting that while monies are allocated to other libraries outside of Harlem, such as the Lincoln Center and 42nd St. libraries, invaluable documents housed in the rapidly deteriorating Schomburg Center have been ruined simply because a leaky roof could not protect materials from the seeping rain or because the lack of air conditioning caused documents to wilt in the steaming hot summers.

Third World Women Speak: Impressions of Natalie

By ANGELA THOMAS

The opportunity for a personal interview with Natalie Cole was given to the Third World Women's Center, following Natalie's sell-out performance at the Fine Arts Center on October 26, 1976. The interview is presented in question and answer form. Different conclusions will undoubtedly be drawn from the interview. My conclusions and comments follow the interview.

Q. As a Third World woman, did you feel the environment of UMass was alienating?

A. Yes, black students only numbered roughly 200 and the black women on campus were the working units of the black struggle. As a result of their efforts beneficial black instructors were brought to the campus. I'm very grateful to the black community at UMass, it helped me to develop a higher level of black consciousness.

Q. What are the difficulties faced by a black woman in any attempt to make herself known and felt in society?

A. One must be assertive. Know exactly what you want and remember superficial things do not mean anything, and most important find out about yourself. An education is important in helping preparing for the challenge.

Q. On the theme of a message in the music, what is your message to the people?

A. Love and getting one's self together. Coming together isn't as hard as it looks. I meet many types of people from businessmen to janitors, and all have things in common.

Q. As a Black woman in the entertainment field, how do you relate to the present situation in South Africa?

A. I don't. The problems that exist in South Africa that are creating the revolution are the same ones that exist in this country. We are Black Americans not Africans, and I feel that we should first be concerned with our own problems. I would go to my child first before I'd r[illegible] to someone else's.

Q. Do you plan in future record recordings to comment on the oppression of Third World people?

A. Eventually, but at this point I'm too young and not very discrete about the things I say. I tend to be full of emotion and stinging so I will take it slow in making political statements.

Q. If you were to make a political statement at this time, do you feel it would be harmful to your career?

A. To this question, Natalie simply nodded yes.

Natalie states that her stay at UMass helped raise her level of black consciousness it is obvious that she, like so many of us, have yet a long way to go in advancing our level of consciousness. Her music which speaks so beautifully of love and unity, is silent to the factors contributing to the division. Life, unfortunately, consists of love, as well as hate, good and evil, freedom as well as enslavement. To center on one aspect of life such as love, though beautiful in thought, does not hold when placed in the light of reality. Many like to think of love as all embracing, but there are many places where the embrace of love is weak or absent. South Boston and South Africa are two examples. When Natalie sings to us, the masses of people about love and unity, the message is communicated and heard. It can not help but be heard, for Natalie has a gifted talent for singing which she does do well. The fact that she is an established performer, insures that whatever Natalie records will be heard.

Singing of love and unity but not the causes contributing to the lack of it, Natalie and other like her, help let those in power who create and sustain the negative conditions that plague our society and the world, go unnoticed and unchallenged.

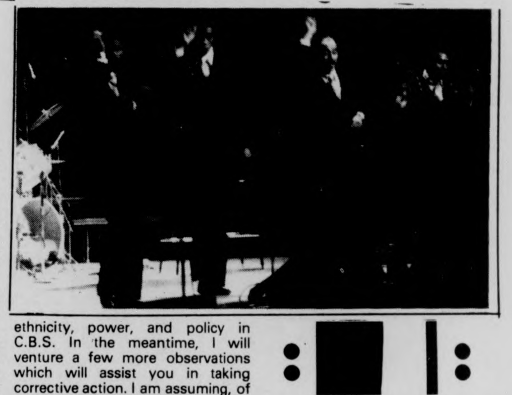
I do not expect Natalie to be a Gil-Scott Heron or Nikki Giovanni who uses poetry to deliver her message often with the accompaniment of gospel music. But as a black Third World woman, and a former student confronted by the many hostile elements that are especially peculiar to Third World students at UMass. I looked for something in Natalie and her music that would be relevant and inspriational to those of us, who in our many different ways, are presently engaged in struggle. What I found is a person who does not realize the extent of her influence upon others. Natalie's music which presently represents the most popular type contains no expression of self-awareness toward her people, possible a reflection of the direction she would like to pursue in time to come.

A person who professes a deep religious belief, Natalie credits the creator with her success, her beliefs giving use to her message of love. This is a difficult situation to be in thinking of the problems in society. Problems needing change are generally accompanied by strong resistence that often results in violence.

Difficult because one has to remember to love even those against you. People who may stop at nothing in their efforts in opposing you. The late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was in this position. At the time of his death, his ideology of love and the turning of one's cheek for the other, was beginning to change. The result of which we will never know.

Yes, Natalie has reached that position some call stardom, I hope she will not be satisfied with her present state but will expand with her music in all directions. Before this happens, Natalie will have to develop a sense of awareness. She is not alone, for many of use are in this situation.

At this time I will continue to listen to such beautiful ballads as inseperable, and rocky tunes such as this will be and Mr. Melody, but I and others will also be anxiously waiting.



An Open Letter On South Africa

canopy of heaven who does not know that slavery is wrong for him."

There are so many questionable aspects to C.B.S.'s posture on this matter that it would be easily possible to double the length of this discourse. However, we recognize the virtual impossibility of overcoming a lifetime of racist indoctrination in a single discussion. We fully recognize the limitations of our discussions due to the restrictions of time and space. Still we feel the reader is likely to learn more from this analysis than anything yet presented by C.B.S. News on African affairs.

There is a larger issue which haunts this entire discussion. That is the absolute disrespect shown to millions of Americans of African descent by C.B.S. No other ethnic group is treated with such abject disregard when discussing issues relevant to their motherlands. This is not meant to suggest that individual blacks born in America do not regard themselves as Americans, but Africa is the traditional home of the black race. As has been pointed out elsewhere, the slavery experience and the constant onslaught of racist propaganda emanating from the mass media resulted in a rejection of Africa by many black Americans.

One of the consequences of this rejection of Africa by black Americans is that whites have been free to pursue any sort of racist policy toward Africa. Well, as you will see, those days are long gone! This letter represents the beginning of a comprehensive investigation into the racial policy of C.B.S. One of the major questions we seek to answer is: Why does C.B.S. think it can consistently insult over thirty million Afro-Americans with impunity! We seek to know if this attitude can be correlated to an absence of blacks in management and ownership positions in C.B.S.

The idea for this study grew naturally out of my investigation into the character of your reportage and commentary on southern Africa. I could not help but notice the vast qualitative difference in your handling of issues relevant to the Jewish community. For example, on one of the same morning news programs in which C.B.S. presented a characteristic defense of white facist rule in southern Africa, a Dr. Alexander Luntz of the Soviet Union came on to discuss the plight of Jews in the U.S.S. R. He was given a generous amount of time to state his case. We think this is an excellent case in point!

None of the representatives of the African liberation movements, to my knowledge have been provided such an opportunity. Dr. Luntz's appearance is such a good example because it dramatizes the qualitative difference between oppression of Jews in Russia and blacks in southern Africa. It also demonstrates the qualitative difference between C.B.S.'s response to the two situations. Hence, we are provided with an opportunity to kill two birds with one stone. The first bit of evidence I wish to submit in order to prove my case is Dr. Luntz himself.

To begin with, Dr. Luntz is a highly trained scientist and the director of a major scientific institute in the Soviet Union. It is well known that under the Soviet system, access to highly specialized education, as well as appointments to important posts, are political decisions made by party commissars. The fact that Dr. Luntz's education and position is not a typical for Soviet Jews supplies incontrovertible proof that anti-Jewish discrimination is not institutionalized! This is not to deny any prejudice against Jews in Russia, but it is a qualitatively different phenomena from the institutionalized racism directed against blacks in southern africa or the U.S.A.

There is such a great difference in the two situations that one outstanding Jewish American Scholar, (a Columbia trained Ph.D) Dr. Herbert apeteker, could bring himself to write a book entitled The Myth of Anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union. One could argue that because of Dr. Apeteker's well known commitment to socialism, he is unable to comment objectively. However, there are two obvious flaws in such an argument. Firstly, one would have to assume that Dr. Apeteker was more committed to exonerating marxist doctrine than aiding the survival of a Jewish community under attack. Secondly, it would therefore follow that black Americans committed to capitalism would deny the oppression of blacks under capitalism.

It is clear that both assumptions are patently absurd! There is probably no one more committed to capitalism than Senator Edward Brooke or Professor Andrew Brimmer, and neither would deny the oppression of blacks in southern Africa or the U.S.A. The simple fact is that the situation of Jews in the Soviet Union is in no way comparable to the oppression of blacks in southern Africa. The Zionist case in the Middle East is not above contention either. For no impartial observer could conclude that the Palestinian case is without merit. The fact is that the United Nations general assembly has declared Zionism is a form of racism. Why then is C.B.S. News so blatantly partisan to the Israeli argument? Why does C.B.S. News speak out so strongly in favor of Jewish freedom in the Soviet Union, while simultaneously attempting to justify the enslavement of Africans by an alien white minority?

These are some of the questions we will attempt to answer in our forthcoming study of ethnicity, power, and policy in C.B.S. In the meantime, I will venture a few more observations which will assist you in taking corrective action. I am assuming, of course, that you will recognize the seriousness of this matter and act accordingly. I suggest that you take cognizance of the fact that the legacy of white racism in America has resulted in a monopolistic control of wealth and the flow of information by upper class whites.

The result of this situation is that non-white Americans — along with most white workers, students and radical intellectuals — have no access to the major media institutions. One of the obvious consequences of this state of affairs is that the major media caters to the special interest of select class, racial, and ethnic groups. Indeed, as the outstanding Afro-American social theorist, Harold Cruse, has pointed out, the mass media, as it presently exists, represents an extension of the power of the ownership class. One could therefore argue that perhaps a great deal of C.B.S.'s attitude on the southern African issue might simply reflect your special relationship with the U.S. corporate elite.

My Wish

By Annie Carpenter
c 1976

My wish is for A World of love living
Outside of space and time
A World
Where letting go is an honor and grabbing is a sin
A World
where all man can look to each other as one would look to the early morning sunrise
A World
where hello is never meant as goodbye
A World
where capitalism is cast into the sea of dark-damn-ness
A World
where no man can wish peace and togetherness to his brother
A World
where mans' soul is his, soul is his Manhood
A World
where envy is a word that is heard and forgotten
A World
where man and woman stands side by side absent of lies
A World
where no one pains
A World where pleasure is an on going thing
A World
where man strives to reach the highest points of truth in humanity
A World
where man realizes that he and all of creation are one
A World
where love is love, is love, is love is strong
But
I am a dreamer so say that of man
My wish is for my dream to be lived
My wish is the dream of the creator for his creation
We are the creation
the creators workmanship
I wish
I wish
I wish
for a world of peace and togetherness
A World
where work is a joyful play and man look for no pay
A World
where love is the great Oneness of creators work
I wish
I dream
I wish
I know
maybe someday my dream will be yours
I wish
I wish
my wish will come true

Fishing

She sees more than boats.
And she says,
openly, "We all fish alone for a living on land, where we fight salt and endure."

She sees more than waves. And she says, simply, "Our catch leaves us, and comes back to us, always, expensively wrapped."

She sees more than idols.
And she says,
justly, "Helping others to make us poor is earthly damnation by man, not by God."

Unity Ensemble to Provide

Food for the Spirit at the Steak Out

Sulaiman Hakim and Chris Henderson

This week the Pioneer Valley Community has the opportunity to witness a musical experience which transcends the realm of entertainment to achieve enlightenment.

The Unity Ensemble will be appearing at Steakout from Wednesday, November 3, 1976 to Sunday, November 7, 1976. The group, which features Chris Henderson (drums and percussion) and Suliman Hakim (Reeds) will present music originating from reflections on the Black American experience. The program will be a reflection of the Black American experience as heard through music and seen through dance.

Suliman recently returned from a tour of the Chicago area with Max Roach and Henderson just returned from a tour of the New York area with organist, Charles Erwin. In a recent, exclusive interview with Nummo News, Henderson said: "We are proud to say that Black American Music is the only music in the world which displays the potential of reaching all people. It is America's only original art form."

Now both artist are back in the Valley to once again present the Unity Ensemble, with extra added attractions. They intend to present a show with many images of the unity for the listener. The show will be reflecting images of the struggle, strength and power of the black community in America, with vibrations coming from the world black community.

Other members of the group will be: "Sa"; percussionist for famed trumpeter, Freddier Hubbard; Art Mattews, on piano; Alex Blake, (who has worked with such artists as the masters, Billy Cobham Jr., McCoy Tyner; Freddie Hubbard; Max Roach and Dizzy Gillespie). on bass; and Bill Pierce on tenor sax.

Dancing with the Unity Ensemble will be a sister from New York City, who goes by the name of Lore. Extra added attractions will be a surprise guest female vocalist.

The members of the group feel very priviliged to be members of the black community here in Amherst to carry on the struggle in the music. "People in the community generally feel good when listening to the Unity Ensemble. The group produces some of the more relaxed progressive music.

The music is produced from the energy given off by Black Americans. Unfortunately it seems as if most Black Americans are unaware of all the energy which they give off and thus fail to support their local musicians.

Whatever we don't understand about the music we don't understand about ourselves. The music is just a reflection of ourselves. People all over the world realize this. The last couple of times they performed at the Steakout, the place was jammed packed. Come down and check them out and don't operate on C.P. time.

Be There!!

From "The Black Book"

By J. WALKER

It probably has run through everyone's head, one time or another about how white people sold blacks.

It may have gone through everyone's mind, how blacks were actually thought of. Or how blacks felt about bondage. To those of us who have these questions, I suspect you read the following.

Public Sale of Negroes
By Richard Clagett

On Tuesday, March 5, 1833 at 1:00 p.m. the following Slaves will be sold at Potters Mart, in Charleston S.C.

I've been a victim
The Belgians cut off my hands
In the Congo
They lynched me in Texas....

And they sold us like beasts, and they counted our teeth... and they felt our testicles and they tested the lustre or dullness of our skin... Cesaire

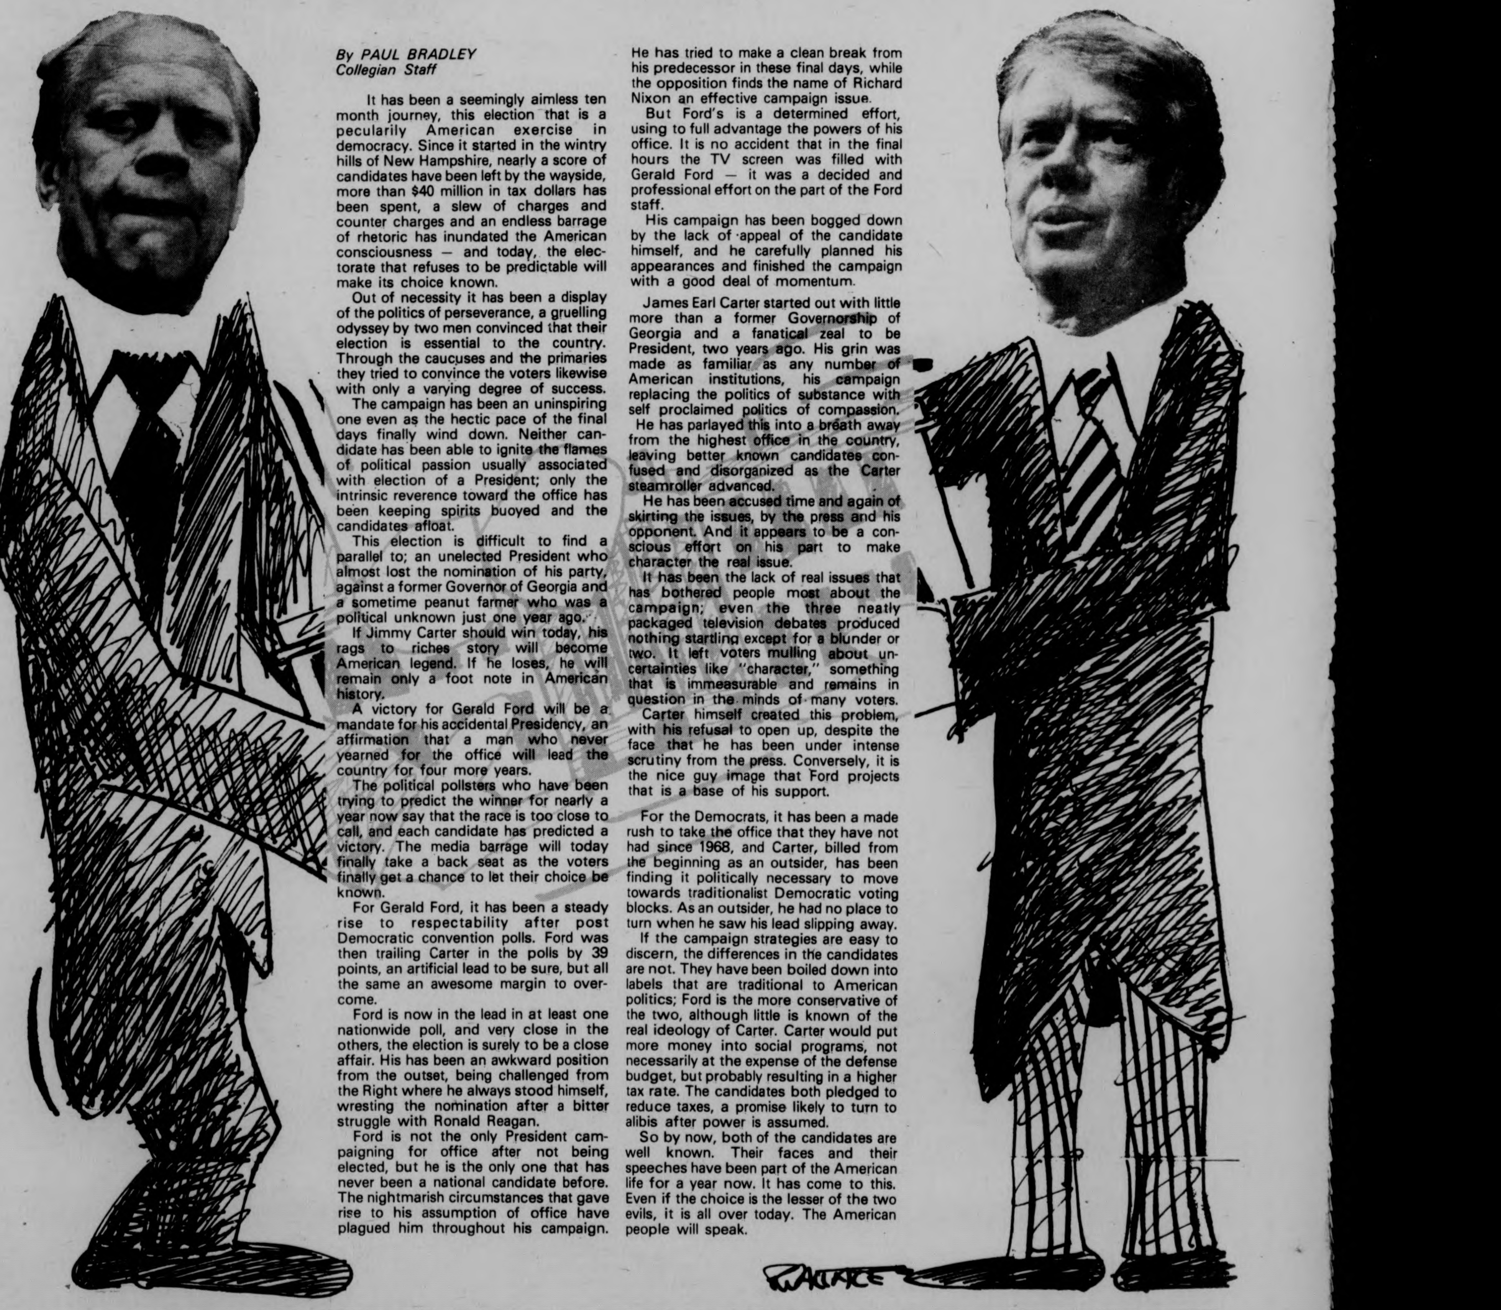
Election day today



By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

It has been a seemingly aimless ten month journey, this election that is a pecularily American exercise in democracy. Since it started in the wintry hills of New Hampshire, nearly a score of candidates have been left by the wayside, more than $40 million in tax dollars has been spent, a slew of charges and counter charges and an endless barrage of rhetoric has inundated the American consciousness — and today, the electorate that refuses to be predictable will make its choice known.

Out of necessity it has been a display of the politics of perseverance, a gruelling odyssey by two men convinced that their election is essential to the country. Through the caucuses and the primaries they tried to convince the voters likewise with only a varying degree of success.

The campaign has been an uninspiring one even as the hectic pace of the final days finally wind down. Neither candidate has been able to ignite the flames of political passion usually associated with election of a President; only the intrinsic reverence toward the office has been keeping spirits buoyed and the candidates afloat.

This election is difficult to find a parallel to; an unelected President who almost lost the nomination of his party, against a former Governor of Georgia and a sometime peanut farmer who was a political unknown just one year ago.

If Jimmy Carter should win today, his rags to riches story will become American legend. If he loses, he will remain only a foot note in American history.

A victory for Gerald Ford will be a mandate for his accidental Presidency, an affirmation that a man who never yearned for the office will lead the country for four more years.

The political pollsters who have been trying to predict the winner for nearly a year now say that the race is too close to call, and each candidate has predicted a victory. The media barrage will today finally take a back seat as the voters finally get a chance to let their choice be known.

For Gerald Ford, it has been a steady rise to respectability after post Democratic convention polls. Ford was then trailing Carter in the polls by 39 points, an artificial lead to be sure, but all the same an awesome margin to overcome.

Ford is now in the lead in at least one nationwide poll, and very close in the others, the election is surely to be a close affair. His has been an awkward position from the outset, being challenged from the Right where he always stood himself, wresting the nomination after a bitter struggle with Ronald Reagan.

Ford is not the only President campaigning for office after not being elected, but he is the only one that has never been a national candidate before. The nightmarish circumstances that gave rise to his assumption of office have plagued him throughout his campaign.

He has tried to make a clean break from his predecessor in these final days, while the opposition finds the name of Richard Nixon an effective campaign issue.

But Ford's is a determined effort, using to full advantage the powers of his office. It is no accident that in the final hours the TV screen was filled with Gerald Ford — it was a decided and professional effort on the part of the Ford staff.

His campaign has been bogged down by the lack of appeal of the candidate himself, and he carefully planned his appearances and finished the campaign with a good deal of momentum.

James Earl Carter started out with little more than a former Governorship of Georgia and a fanatical zeal to be President, two years ago. His grin was made as familiar as any number of American institutions, his campaign replacing the politics of substance with self proclaimed politics of compassion.

He has parlayed this into a breath away from the highest office in the country, leaving better known candidates confused and disorganized as the Carter steamroller advanced.

He has been accused time and again of skirting the issues, by the press and his opponent. And it appears to be a conscious effort on his part to make character the real issue.

It has been the lack of real issues that has bothered people most about the campaign; even the three neatly packaged television debates produced nothing startling except for a blunder or two. It left voters mulling about uncertainties like "character," something that is immeasurable and remains in question in the minds of many voters.

Carter himself created this problem, with his refusal to open up, despite the face that he has been under intense scrutiny from the press. Conversely, it is the nice guy image that Ford projects that is a base of his support.

For the Democrats, it has been a made rush to take the office that they have not had since 1968, and Carter, billed from the beginning as an outsider, has been finding it politically necessary to move towards traditionalist Democratic voting blocks. As an outsider, he had no place to turn when he saw his lead slipping away.

If the campaign strategies are easy to discern, the differences in the candidates are not. They have been boiled down into labels that are traditional to American politics; Ford is the more conservative of the two, although little is known of the real ideology of Carter. Carter would put more money into social programs, not necessarily at the expense of the defense budget, but probably resulting in a higher tax rate. The candidates both pledged to reduce taxes, a promise likely to turn to alibis after power is assumed.

So by now, both of the candidates are well known. Their faces and their speeches have been part of the American life for a year now. It has come to this. Even if the choice is the lesser of the two evils, it is all over today. The American people will speak.

Only 11 miles and 200 years away is a chance to see America as it was — Historic Old Deerfield, living heritage to America's colonial past.

Cooperating with the Trustees of historic Old Deerfield, Mason I. Lowance, an English professor of Early American Literature at UMass, is providing students a chance to study and learn in the environment they would be reading about.

Lowance takes his Early American Literature class, with sometimes as many as 150 students, to Old Deerfield every semester to experience the culture as soon through the example of the recently restored village.

Lowance said he has tried to embody in his course some idea of colonial culture in the restorations of old Deerfield.

This semester's excursion involved a day's tour of the village, famous for the two Indian massacres that took place there, especially the devastating attack of 1704.

The students spent the day touring several of the homes along the village green, and getting a "flavor" of early New England life of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

One of the most notable events of the day was the preaching of an original puritan sermon, at the White Church, a short distance from the town common. The church, which was built in 1837, is in use today, and still echoes with the sound of rousing sermons, similar, but probably not as long, to those preached by the great revivalists.

The group of 18 also toured the Parker-Russell silver shop, a fully equipped and working silver shop, noted for having the second largest collection of Paul Revere's silver.

The class had a lunch of traditional colonial fare at the "charming and quaint" atmosphere of the Old Deerfield Inn.

Presently, this experience offers but a taste of the early culture, Lowance hopes that it may be expanded to a separate course to be taught in Old Deerfield.

Teaching assistants familiarized with services

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

Nearly 50 UMass academic teacher's assistants (TA) were familiarized last night with some of the teaching and counselling services available here by directors of various University organizations and academic departments.

"We're trying to do some advance preparation to get graduate students ready for their roles as TA's," acting dean of the Graduate School Vere Chappell said.

The TA's will be assisting in teaching courses next semester. "We can set them up with experienced teachers to whom they can talk about their approach to teaching. There may be a student needing help that the TA doesn't know what to do with. In this case we want to make them aware that there could be a counselor right down the hall whose jog it is to help this kind of student," Chappell said.

Michael R. Federow president of the Graduate Student Senate, spoke about a unionization movement that is presently in hearing before the State Labor Relations Commission that could affect the TA's.

"A union," he said, "would freeze all regulations governing TA contracts. Further, it would forbid extensive official discussion of possible changes in TA contracts."

The Center for Instructional Resources and Improvement (CIRI) director Sheryl Riechmann said there are "many services for faculty in general" to improve teaching methods and course design, including a focus on "special teaching behaviors" such as the introduction of new material in classes.

Judith Davis, the coordinator of the Resource Network, said the resource staff has both professional and peer counselors available for TA's.

"Since you (TA's) pay for the service, the counselors must be responsive to your needs," said Davis.

"The more TA's know about the options, the more appropriate your suggestions will be on them."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery attended the meeting and said that being a graduate student was a "privilege."

Central area

Money allocated, slot filled

By ROSEMARY CONWAY

Linda Fuller of Wheeler dormitory was elected to the Student Judiciary Committee and money was allocated to Baker House for a coffee house, at last night's Central Area Government meeting.

Fuller, a junior majoring in Zoology, said she felt she would maintain a balance between sympathy for the student involved and respect for the law. Fuller will be working with Marc Cohen, also a judge from the Central Area.

Robert Stone, of Baker House, proposed that the government allocate money to that dormitory for a coffee house to be held Thursday night, from 9 to midnight.

Stone said that entertainment will be provided free of charge by Wayne Burns. Stone was appropriated $30 for refreshments and $15 to rent sound equipment. The event will be free to all Central Area residents.

President Janice Perry, spoke on the Vice-Chancellor's Invitational Conference, which she attended last weekend. Perry said, "The prime focus of the meetings were that students are trying to figure out how to have more effective input and control in the University decision-making process. There are alot of things I question about how the conference was."

Perry said a lot of her questions went unanswered, and that some were evaded. No one was exactly sure what were the accomplishments and objectives of the conferenece, she said.

In reference to both the conference and the senate report, which outlined the senate's rationales for rejection of proposed budget increases, Nkrumah Olinga a Central resident said students have to get together to get anything done. Only when people are so apathetic do all these ridiculous rules come in.

Proposals were adopted to invite various speakers to come before the Central Area Government. Those invited to speak will be the speaker, treasurer and co-presidents of the Undergraduate Student Senate, Arthur Warren of Food Services and Robert Morioty, coordinator between New England Telephone Company and UMass.

The government was told that the South Africa Support Committee is sponsoring a movie tomorrow night at 8 entitled "The Harder They Fall," and admission will be .50 cents.

The Assistant Area Director Selection Committee for the Central-Orchard Hill areas will present its recommendation for that position Sunday night at an open meeting from 7 to 9 in the Baker room 123. The candidate, who will be selected from 13 finalists this weekend, will be subject to final review at this time.

According to Fuller, the Assistant Area Director is responsible for heads of residences, running area centers, the success of the residential college, and the general safety of students.

Co-Vice-President Mark Zinan gave the budget report for the Racism-Sexism Center. He said that little of its allotted $1000 had been used as yet, because directors were appointed in mid-October.

The New World Center reported that $450 had been spent so far on speaker David Sebeko and on a film.

A motion was passed to pay a deficit of $115.48 of a general debt incurred last year.

Tenants' problems may be town's

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Amherst apparently would have no problems with a proposal to help tenants.

A revision, proposed by the Massachusetts Dept. of Public Health, calls for local boards of health to respond within five days to a tenant's health and maintenance complaint.

The proposal is good for tenants but it could be an administrative problem for some building inspectors, according to Chester Penza, director of inspection services for the Town of Amherst.

"It probably won't be a problem in Amherst because most of the landlords of apartment complexes take care of maintenance and health complaints within a week and we don't receive too many complaints concerning this," said Penza.

But, he said, if Amherst had the inspection complaints that some cities and towns do, his inspection services division could not take over the extra work and still do an adequate job.

"The state does not want to hire any more full time inspectors because they don't have the money and that's what's going to be needed if this revision is passed," Penza said.

The revision of the state housing sanitary code says, if landlords do not take care of health and maintenance requests within five days of the request, tenants should call the Mass Dept. of Health. The dept. must then respond within five days or within 24 hours if the conditions alleged by the tenant are dangerous to the tenant's health.

The entire proposal is due to be examined by the executive committee of the Mass. Board of Health by December 31, and is passed, the new sanitary health code would become state law.

Under the present housing code, it is at the convenience of the board of health to investigate tenants complainns.

Amendments to the investigation of the tenant's complaint by the building inspector would include a mandatory report by the inspector that will be sent to the tenants and landlord concerning all health and maintenance violations. The violated areas will be reinspected within five weeks of the complaint.

If the building inspector upon reinspection finds that the landlord has not complied with the building inspectors report, he-she will be fined not less than $10 but no more than $500 each day the violation continues. The landlord does have the right to appeal the board of health's decision in a court of law.

If the maintenance problem concerns hot water or heating facilities, the board of health must respond within 24 hours of the tenants complaint and the landlord must then comply with the violation within seven days or be fined.

Joanne Levenson, spokesperson for University Off-Campus Housing, calls the revision a major breakthrough for tenants who face abuse from landlords concerning maintenance and health requests.

"This proposal, for the first time, defines for tenants that in a reasonable amount of time, their requests will be adhered to without fear of landlord reprisals," said Levenson.

Penza said that this proposal would be the first step in the right direction for agreement between the state building code and the state sanitary code.

"It is imperative that these agencies come together and iron their differences because right now there are numerous structural conflicts between the two codes and it makes the job of the health inspector much more difficult," he said.

Penza cited the conflicts between state housing code and the maintenance standard of sanitary codes in lighting and electrical facilities, ventilation ducts, and mandatory exits.

Jono Sher

Chester Penza

Penza said all maintenance and health complaints should be made aware of to their landlords before coming to the board of health.

"Some people are afraid their landlord will evict them if they complain. I think that for the most part landlords would be happy to take care of maintenance problems as soon as possible before more extensive damage is done to their property," he said.

The Amherst building inspector also urged that landlords tell their tenants that the building inspectors may investigate their apartments if the need arises.

"Sometimes tenants are totally surprised when we come around and they have a right to be. It is the tenants right not to allow us to enter unless we have a court order but a lot of times problems wouldn't arise if there was better communication between landlords and tenants," said Penza.

Penza also felt that the mandatory multilingual inspection form for building inspectors is necessary and another step in the making for a uniform inspection for all state inspectors.

Penza felt that there is relatively few major complaints by tenants with the Amherst area apartment complexes.

"Unless it's a major plumbing or exterminating problem, I would say that all the major Amherst apartment complexes usually take care of maintenance problems within a week," said Penza.

"We have as building inspectors no axe to grind with either the tenants or the landlords. We want to be objective and solve the problem if it exists as soon as possible for the good of both parties," he said.

Dog policy enforcement beginning

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

If you take a dog to the Campus Center, you may be in for a rude surprise — your dog may end up in the Amherst Dog Pound. Starting yesterday, the Campus Center began to strictly enforce its dog policy.

The policy says that no pets of any kind will be allowed in the Campus Center-Student Union Ballroom complex. The only exception will be for seeing eye dogs, according to Dudley Bridges, head of building operations for the CC.

Bridges said the Amherst Police Dept. has no jurisdiction on campus. This was part of an agreement worked out between the state and the town.

The CC now has its own dog catcher, the only one on campus, said Bridges.

"We had one fulltime person up until last year, but he retired," said Bridges. The CC hired a student to try and keep the dogs out of the building, but there were several problems. "He could only bring the dogs out the door and then they would just run back in," said Bridges. "We were unable to provide him with a car to take the dogs to the pound."

Since the beginning of the semester, the CC has been looking for a student but no one was willing to put in the time, according to Bridges. Finally, they decided to hire another fulltime person.

The biggest problem with dogs in the CC is the mess they leave behind, said Bridges. "The janitors don't like to clean up that kind of stuff and they shouldn't have to," said Bridges.

Another problem with the dogs is that state law prohibits animals from public eating places. "We had complaints from George Reed (environmental health and safety specialist) about the dogs going into the Coffeeshop, the Hatch and the Bluewall," said Bridges.

Under the new policy, any dog found in the CC will be taken to the Amherst pound at Wagner's Farm on North East Street. Each animal will be kept there at a rate of $2.50 a day for a maximum of 10 days, after which it will be given away or "put to sleep."

"If the dog has a license, the owner will be notified immediately," said Bridges. "Otherwise, they'll hold onto the dog until the 10 days are up."

JS program to be reviewed

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Lawrence D. Pinkham, the new director of the Journalistic Studies (JS) program, said yesterday journalism faculty will meet next Tuesday with an English dept. committee to work out a full JS program on campus.

The JS committee, responsible for overseeing the JS program, will ask the long-range planning committee to consider "a series of needs or demands" it is going to place before it.

Pinkham, who accepted the position of director last week after the recent resignation of Howard M. Ziff, said the program is now hampered by an "incredible imbalance" of students and faculty as compared to the rest of the English dept.

About one-third of the English majors here also major in Journalism, but the JS program has only five faculty members while 80 to 90 English dept. faculty teach English courses.

The English department at a meeting yesterday passed a motion over the objection of the JS committee that included plans to increase JS faculty over the next five years to ten members, the extra faculty to be taken from within the English dept.

JS faculty object to the plan because the extra faculty would not be recruited from the ranks of professional journalists and there was no indication who the added faculty would be, or whether they would be willing to enter the program.

The JS committee is now finishing the draft of a document it plans to send to the chairperson and the long-range planning committee of the English dept. before next week's meeting.

Pinkham said the document takes up the question of what is possible for JS in the English dept. He said it concerns what the JS person needs to do and what must happen to bring it about.

BDIC offers meaningful alternative

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

If you're having trouble choosing a major or are finding that none of the traditional majors match your interests, the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) program might prove a meaningful alternative.

How would you go about it if you wanted a major in urban affairs, musicology, or consumerism ... BDIC enables you to design a major that draws from more than one department. For example, if Colonial American Culture were your thing, you might be interested not only in history courses, but in areas of fine arts and black studies as well.

Most BDIC students start the program — four consecutive semesters — in the first semester of their junior year. To do this one must contact with the BDIC office as early as possible in the second semester of the sophomore year. Deadline for candidates who want to begin the program next semester is the last day of pre-registration counselling week, November 20. Keep in mind that the application process generally takes four to five weeks.

If you want to be a BDIC major, you still must complete University core and graduation requirements. While you're a BDIC major you must take at least 12 credits in your major field each semester and you must submit two written reports each semester. These reports indicate your growth as well as the direction your learning is taking.

You may wonder what kind of success BDIC students have with graduate schools and employers. Joan Stoia, assistant director for administration in BDIC, said their office has received only one unhappy letter from a BDIC graduate out of about 700 in four years. No graduates have reported rejections from graduate schools, and there have been some exciting success stories with jobs, Stoia said.

BDIC began as a pilot program. The first 36 students started in the fall of 1970 and graduated in May of 1972. A poll was taken in 1974 and of past graduates and the majority of respondants reported they were doing what they wanted to.

Information for voters

Referenda may set trends

BOSTON [UPI] — Massachusetts voters will answer nine referenda questions today which could profoundly affect the lives of private citizens and businesses. At least two questions could help set national trends.

Considerably more money — at least $2.5 million — was spent on the referenda than most political contests, an indication that passage or defeat of some questions will have more impact on the state than the candidate races.

The six most controversial questions call for a ban on no-return bottles and cans; the outlawing of private handgun ownership; a graduated state income tax; equalized electric rates; expansion of public power and adoption of a state equal right amendment.

The so-called bottle bill, question six, would require a deposit on all bottles and cans. Two states — Vermont and Oregon — have banned throwaway containers. If Massachusetts follows suit, it will be the first major industrial state to do so.

For this reason, opponents of the bill from across the country, mostly bottlers, canners and brewers, have spent more than $1.2 million to bill the measure.

The gun question, number 5a would restrict handgun ownership to police and the military. If it is passed, Massachusetts will be the first state to impose such a ban.

The gradtax question, number two, would amend the state constitution to permit a graduated rather than flat rate income tax. Under the gradtax, the amount of state income taxes would be a percentage of the individual's income.

The electric rate proposal, question seven, calls for flat or uniform rates for all users. Industrial and large commercial users currently pay a much lower rate than residential consumers.

The public power question, number four, calls for creation of a state authority to build all new power plants. The proposed authority also would be empowered to buy existing facilities with the approval of local officials.

The ERA question, number one, would add to the state constitution a provision that equality under the law cannot be denied or abridged on the basis of sex, race, creed or national origin.

Question three, absentee voting for religious reasons, asks that people who cannot vote on a particular day because of religious beliefs, be allowed to vote by absentee ballot.

Conte vs. McColgan

The incumbent in the First District, Republican Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield, has been the representative from this district since 1958 — 14 years. He has been on the Labor-HEW transportation and Foreign Operations Appropriations Sub-Committees. He was ranking member of the Small Business Committe, co-chairperson of the New England Congressional Caucus, member of the steering committee of the Northeast-Midwest Economic Advancement Coalition, and vice-chairperson of the Members of Congress for Peace through Law.

His opponent is Democratic Edward A. McColgan of Northampton. McColgan represented the First Hampshire District in the Massachusetts Legislature for five years. He resigned in January of 1974 when he was appointed executive director of the Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission. He taught American History at Hampton Institute in Virginia and at Westfield State College.

Conte advocates a continued policy of a.) developing alternative energy sources expeditiously while b.) holding down oil and gas prices, by Federal controls when necessary. He says he has led Congressional battles for stronger funding and other incentives for development of alternative energy sources, including additional $95 million for solar energy; regional oil storage; environmentally safe refineries to process off-shore oil; and energy generation from solid wastes, with greater safety, health concerns at nuclear plants.

He co-sponsored the recently-enacted $3.9 billion Local Public Works Employment Act, which, he says, created local jobs to build public projects. He claims his top priority in Congress is to promote economic development by reducing New England's energy and transportation costs.

He co-sponsored legislation to create a Joint Congressional Committee on Intelligence Operations to conduct continuing oversight of foreign intelligence operations.

McColgan endorsed the Energy Conservation and Production Act of 1976 and called for the development of a solar energy industry of Massachusetts to stimulate the Commonwealth's economy, lower consumer fuel costs, and conserve resources. He has called for a full employment program to take people off welfare and unemployment. By stimulating the demand for goods and service, he says, and lowering interest rates, employment opportunities in the private sector could be expanded. McColgan also supports a federal program of public service employment for workers unable to find jobs in the private sector.

He says he believes all covert intelligence actions should be prohibited, with the creation of independent special prosecutors to scrutinize and prosecute violations of laws regulating intelligence agencies.

Democratic Party — Jimmy Carter, president; Walter Mondale, VP

Socialist Worker Party — Peter Camejo, president; Willie Mae Reid, VP

Kennedy faces 3 challengers

There are four candidates this year for the US Senate seat for Massachusetts.

The incumbent is Edward M. Kennedy. a Democrat, who has held the position for the past 14 years. His Republican challenger is Michael Swing Robertson, who is the president and chief executive officer of Robertson Factories, Inc., of Taunton.

The candidate for the Socialist Workers Party is Carol Henderson Evans, a women's rights leader and participant in pro-busing movements. H. Graham Lowry will be running for the US Labor Party. Lowry is a National Committee member of the Labor Party for Massachusetts.

Kennedy supports a national energy conservation program development of low-sulphur, deep-mined coal resources and substantially increased research and development in solar energy. He also supports legislation controlling the on-shore impact of off-show development. He supports maintenance of controls over crude oil prices and efforts to reduce oil prices to consumers.

Robertson says he favors the complete and extensive exploration of offshore drilling sites to "answer a lot of questions" about New England's energy dependents. Development of a refinery in New England is essential, he says, as is the exploration of alternative sources of energy such as solar, as rapidly as possible.

Evans feels the real source of energy problems is that the oil industry is a multi-billion dollar business concerned with making profits not meeting the energy needs of New England. She says she would introduce legislation to nationalize the oil industry and support measures to develop alternative sources of energy.

Lowry believes that controled thermonuclear fusion must be readied by 1982. His new "infrastructure" will require the transformation of the present facilities and the "massive upgrading of the world labor force."

Several seats uncontested

There are several other races which will confront voters when they enter the voting booth today, many of them not much of a contest because the candidates don't have an opponent.

For Governor's Council, the only person running from the first district is John Britland, a Democrat from Fall River. The same goes for clerk of courts, where Democrat Salvatore A. Polito of Easthampton is facing no opposition in Hampshire County. There is a contest in Franklin County, however, as Thomas W. Merrigan, a Democrat from Springfield, is facing Republican John R. Mosely of Montague.

The Clerk of Supreme Judicial Court is being sought by only one candidate, John E. Power, a Democrat from Boston.

The Registers of deeds in Hampshire District is also uncontested, as Robert F. Czelusniak, a Democrat from Northampton, is also unopposed.

The most interesting contests will be for the position of county commissioner. Commissioners have charge of county property and management of county business. In Hampshire County, Democrat Paul R. Dineen of South Hadley is running along with another Democrat, Robert J. Garvey of Amherst, for two seats.

In Franklin County, there are a whole slate of candidates for the position. John F. Bassett is a Democrat from Turners Falls; Richard E. Ouimette is also a Democrat, from Conway; Margaret H. Herlihy of Deerfield is a Republican, Edmund F. Smith of Buckland is also a Republican; and Randy Kehler is the Independent

Nation's first results in

DIXVILLE NOTCH, N.H. [AP] — President Ford narrowly edged Jimmy Carter 13-11 Tuesday morning as voters in this pristine resort community cast the first votes in the nation.

Another vote was cast for independent Eugene McCarthy and the final ballot was voided because the voter chose three candidates for president.

Twenty-five citizens of this White Mountains hamlet braved the ice and early snows of New Hampshire, where the presidential race started with its first-in-the country primary in February, to vote before television cameras.

The 26th ballot was an absentee ballot.

In the race for New Hampshire governor, conservative Republican Meldrim Thomson led by a much wider margin, outpacing Democrat Harry V. Spanos 21-5.

In the 2nd Congressional District, veteran GOP Rep. James C. Cleveland led Democrat Joseph Grandmasison 19-4.

Except for 1972, when residents of this community favored Richard Nixon over George McGovern by a 16-3 margin, voters around the nation have not followed Dixville Notch's early lead.

Election too close to call

Ford and Carter scramble for votes in final effort

United Press International

Pounding home in a dead heat, President Ford and Jimmy Carter scoured the big-ticket states of Ohio, California and Michigan Monday and took prime evening television time for one, last personal plea to the American voter.

Each predicted victory for himself in the Tuesday polling that will end — possibly by one of the closest votes in modern times — Carter's 22-month, up-from-nowhere presidential campaign and Ford's year-long, underdog drive to become an elected president.

Ford, rated a one-point leader in Monday's final Gallup poll, climbed atop the roof of his moving limousine at Ohio's Akron-Canton airport and led 6,000 boosters in victory cheers while a Secret Service agent clung to his belt.

"That old Buckeye spirit!" he shouted. "We'll win tomorrow!"

Carter, a one-point leader in the Harris poll, exhorted party workers to get out the vote and help him snatch California's 45 electoral ballots, the biggest single prize of all, away from Ford.

"It's going to be very close," Carter told a Democratic breakfast rally. "I feel very deeply that we, together, tomorrow, are going to win."

The campaign finale for both was in Ford's native Michigan: the President, trying to hold the state in his column, coming home for a wild, night-time parade in Grand Rapids: and Carter, flying in from California, stumping blue collar Flint and Detroit in a drive for Michigan's tossup vote.

Carter's running mate, Sen. Walter Mondale, made one last pitch for the rich electoral vote hauls of New York and Pennsylvania before joining Carter in Flint, center of the unionized, industrial area whose votes could tip Michigan into Carter's column. The final Detroit news poll Monday said Ford led Carter by only 42 to 41 per cent statewide.

Sen. Robert Dole, the Republican vice presidential candidate, campaigned in Illinois — another major electoral vote state rated a toss-up, with a slight edge for Ford — and then worked the farm belt states of Iowa and Missouri.

Centerpiece of the last-day campaigns, however, was an evening, prime-time television blitz by both candidates. Each blocked major networks for a filmed appeal to voters produced by some of the top media experts in the business.

Pollster Louis Harris, who rated Carter ahead of Ford by only 45 to 44 per cent in his last survey, predicted those television efforts could decide the election. Pollster George Gallup issued his last poll Monday and put Ford ahead for the first time since the conventions, by one point, 47 to 46.

At election eve rallies and at airports and on television, Ford and Carter summarized the familiar themes behind their claims to the presidency.

Ford, addressing cheering crowds in Canton and Columbus, said he is the proven leader who can deliver lower income taxes, more jobs, a balanced budget, less government intervention and an America at peace in the world.

Carter, touring California with popular Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. said he is the leader to get America moving with new force and purpose.

"This election tomorrow is about one word and that word is 'leadership'," he said in Sacramento. "I think it's accurate to say Mr. Ford is no leader."

In another respect, too, Carter had to close out the campaign the way he spent much of it — trying to recover from sudden, unexpected controversy.

The Georgian called a news conference to disassociate himself from the action of Plains, Ga., Baptist church elders who refused to admit a black clergyman to membership Sunday, and to suggest the applicant's move was a "politically inspired" effort to embarrass him.

Dole barnstorms the midwest; overflow crowd greets Mondale

[UPI] — Robert Dole spent his final campaign hours Monday in a swing through traditionally Republican areas of the Mid-west, where he told one gathering of voters "it's up to you now."

En route to his native Russell, Kan., the GOP vice presidential candidate made appearances in Illinois, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri, including Kansas City where President Ford chose him as a running mate 10 weeks ago.

He accused Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale of "playing a shell game with the American taxpayers" and criticized Mondale for injecting the Watergate issue into the presidential campaign.

Addressing a Republican gathering in Peoria, Ill., Dole said: "It's up to you now — we've already done all the good or all the damage we can do."

In Council Bluffs, he was asked how the campaign has gone, the Kansas senator said, "We've had enough. We've peaked at just about the right time. There's momentum there and it's on our side."

Dole, 53, has never lost an election since he entered politics about a quarter-century ago. He will vote Tuesday in Russell, a town of about 5,000 in central Kansas where he and Ford made their first campaign appearance the day after the GOP convention ended.

Walter Mondale's stretch drive for the vice presidency got a boost Monday from Sen. Hubert Humphrey, D-Minn., and one of the biggest crowds of the candidate's campaign.

Mondale was greeted in Buffalo by an overflow crowd of nearly 5,000 persons, who jammed into a downtown hotel to hear him speak.

Earlier in the day, he got a warm welcome in Philadelphia from Mayor Frank Rizzo, who predicted a big vote for Jimmy Carter in the city will swing Pennsylvania to the Democrats.

During Mondale's Buffalo appearance, Erie County Democratic chairman Joseph Crangle placed a telephone call to Humphrey, who is recovering from major cancer surgery.

Blacks defend Carter

PLAINS, Ga. [UPI] — Black leaders in Georgia and elsewhere defended Jimmy Carter Monday in an election eve controversy over segregationist policies at his hometown church, claiming the incident may have been "a Watergate-type trick" staged to embarrass Carter.

But the black minister turned away from the Plains Baptist Church Sunday denied there was any political motivation behind his act. And, in Harrisburg, Pa., Betty Ford suggested Carter is simply getting what he deserves.

"It is a segregated church and obviously that's how he feels about the problem of segregation," Mrs. Ford said.

Black politicians and clergymen supporting the Georgian's candidacy reacted angrily, however, and a Cleveland, Ohio, minister claimed the Ford campaign was trying to capitalize on the issue by sending election eve telegrams to black clergymen in his area.

"I have just received a two-page telegram from President Ford's committee decrying the activities of Jimmy Carter's church in Plains, Ga., yesterday," said the Rev. Alfred M. Waller, pastor of Shiloh Baptist Church.

"The prevalence of such a telegram to so many black ministers in the Cleveland area to me seems to be conclusive evidence that this whole episode is designed to embarrass Mr. Carter. I think it is obvious that those barred from Carter's church are part of the conspiracy."

Campaigning in Sacramento, Calif., Carter pledged to fight racial discrimination within his local church but also suggested the sudden effort by four blacks to worship there Sunday — when church deacons barred them — was "politically inspired."

Mozambique says it's under attack

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania [UPI] — Mozambique said last night that tank-led Rhodesian troops with bomber support have invaded two sections of its territory in the white regime's most extensive cross-border raids against guerrilla sanctuaries.

"Fierce fighting is still going on." the Mozambique Information Agency said in a communique.

Rhodesia, which reported the attack Sunday, had said its security forces conducted a "hot-pursuit" operation against guerrillas-typically a hit-and-run assault of short duration. Mozambique said the Rhodesian troops had been across the border for more than 24 hours and were an invasion force.

Mozambique said Rhodesian troops using tanks, mortars, cannon, aircraft, including bombers, infantry and mounted troops crossed into Mozambique at 4 a.m. Sunday, entering Gaza province where Rhodesia, Mozambique and South Africa meet.

Other Rhodesian forces reportedly crossed into Tete province in northwestern Mozambique at 5:25 a.m. Sunday.

The communique said the Rhodesian force in Gaza province was trying to drive deep into Mozambique and that the invaders already had cut lines of communication, including a railroad.

The statement reported battles underway in five different areas of Tete province.

Mozambique contends Rhodesian forces have made more than 50 strikes into its territory since Mozambique closed its border with Rhodesia last March.

"According to information coming from these areas the People's Forces for the Liberation of Mozambique are fighting off the attackers and are firm in their determination to expel the invaders although fierce fighting is still going on," the communique said.

At the border town of UMtali, Rhodesia, a military commander threatened sharp retaliation in case Mozambican forces or guerrillas attack to retaiate for the raids on the guerrilla bases across the frontier.

BELFAST: A volley of shots by an Irish Republican Army guard of honor is fired over the coffin of Maire Drumm, an IRA leader. UPI Telephoto

Trouble in Northern Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland [UPI] — About 500 mourners surrounded and stoned Andersonstown police station yesterday while returning from the peaceful funeral of Mrs. Maire Drumm, one of Northern Ireland's most promiment Roman Catholic figures.

An estimated 5,000 persons formed a cortege and marched a mile and one-half from St. Agnes Church to the Republican Milltown cemetery where graveside services were held under dark skies.

A bomb hoax before the funeral heightened tensions in Andersonstown, but police reported no other incidents during the ceremony.

The hoax occurred when a man was coerced into driving a hijacked van believed to be carrying a bomb to the gates of the cemetery. Army bomb disposal experts said a box in the truck held only two concrete blocks.

A group of the mourners headed for the Andersonstown police station after the burial service and began throwing rocks.

The area is a solidly Catholic neighborhood of West Belfast. Police can operate there only under British army protection.

News in Brief

Territorial waters opposed

TOKYO [AP] — Japan expressed its opposition to American and Canadian plans for 200-mile sea economic zones as the three nations opened a six-day conference Monday to discuss mutual fishery problems.

Buichi Oishi, Japanese agricultural-forestry minister, said "such unilateral actions undermine international efforts to establish a new international marine order."

He called on the United States and Canada to await an international consensus at the United Nations Law of the Sea conference before taking final action.

The U.S. Congress has already approved extension of U.S. territorial waters to 200 miles from shore for fishing and other economic purposes. It takes effect March 1, unless the Law of the Sea conference completes international legislation before that time.

The talks here are expected to center on the assessment of fishery resources in the North Pacific and study of measures needed to limit fishing in the area.

Back to school in Thailand

BANGKOK, Thailand [UPI] — Schools that had been closed since Thailand's military coup Oct. 6 reopened yesterday but fearful students stayed away in mass.

Armed police with orders to shoot at any student demonstrators reported no disturbances. "Only a handful" of students attended classes at the country's 11 universities, one education official said.

At Bangkok's Chulalongkorn University, where more than 20,000 are enrolled, fewer than 500 students reported for class.

Thammasat University, where 41 died in rioting the day of the coup, remained closed while tempers cooled and authorities repaired damaged buildings.

"We're just not sure about security," one student's mother said. "There are rumors about arson and terrorism and the like."

A student at padlocked Thammasat said her friends from other campuses "feel an unknown fear. Of course, we usually don't go back to school the first couple of days, it's sort of a tradition.

The questions answered

Listed below are our deeply considered endorsements of the referendum questions.

On all but the constitutional issues (graduated income tax and state ERA) the legislature will be free to amend and even repeal.

To be approved, all questions must garner a vote equal to 30 per cent of the number of total ballots cast, as well, of course, as a plurality of votes cast on the issue. Thus, by blanking a question, you are making it more difficult to succeed.

1. Equal Rights Amendment. Vote Yes.
2. Graduated Income Tax. Vote Yes.
3. Absentee voting for religious reasons. Vote Yes.
4. State Power Authority. Vote No.
5. Ban private handguns. Vote Yes.
6. "The Bottle Bill". Vote Yes.
7. Uniform electric rates. Vote Yes.
8. Off shore oil refinery and port (non-binding). Vote No.
9. Repeal Sunday Closing laws. Vote No.

Women Voters' endorsements

To the Editor:

We never support or oppose any candidate or political party. When, however, after careful study our members reach agreement about their position on an issue, we act to support that position. The League of Women Voters of Massachusetts and the Amherst League strongly endorse "yes" votes on four of the questions appearing on the November 2 ballot:

"Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged because of sex, race, color, creed, or national origin." This is the proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the state Constitution. Its passage will finally bring a Constitutional guarantee of equal rights for all people. It is a statement of principle. We urge you to vote YES on Question No. 1.

The League has long supported amending the state Constitution to allow the legislature to set graduated rates for our income tax, rather than the flat rates we now have. It is irrefutable that a graduated income tax is more progressive, fairer. We urge you to vote YES on Question No. 2.

Handguns kill people; people using handguns kill people. Handguns are easily accessible, concealable, deadly. Referendum No. 5 supports a ban on the private sale and ownership of handguns with a barrel length of 16 inches or less. There are exemptions for the police, military, and historical museums and antique weapons. We urge you to vote YES on Question No. 5.

A "yes" vote on referendum No. 6 will place a refundable deposit on soft drink and beer containers. The deposit would act as an incentive to keep the empty cans and bottles out of our rubbish and off the streets, parks and woodlands. It would also be an incentive to return to refillable bottles, thus conserving energy and natural resources now going into the production of disposable beverage containers. We urge you to vote YES on Question No. 6.

President

Working people and unions

But they had not gone twenty yards when they stopped short. An uproar of voices was coming from the farmhouse. They rushed back and looked through the window again. Yes, a violent quarrel was in progress. There were shoutings, bangings on the table, sharp suspicious glances, furious denials. The source of the trouble appeared to be that Napoleon and Mr. Pilkington had each played the ace of spades simultaneously.

Twelve voices were shouting in anger, and they were all alike. No question, now, what had happened to the faces of the pigs. The creatures outside looked from pig to man, and from man to pig, and from pig to man again; but it was impossible to say which was which.

— George Orwell
Animal Farm

Everytime I heard a Woody Guthrie or Pete Seeger song, when I was a little kid, I thought unions were the best things to happen to this country. Anything that could inspire men to write about a sense of community, or working together, with such great optimistic power had to be a good thing. Anything that could get the working man a fighting chance at survival had to be good. And things were good — for a while. No more blood shed, no more inhuman working conditions, no more child abuse in labor. Things were better for the worker, for the country.

Today the union leader is a white collar worker whose job is arbitration between two different forces; paper shuffling and all the things that mark someone as "management". Of course, I am generalizing. The local level union leaders are still, basically, of the people and still, to a great extent, working toward the original purpose of unionization. These are the men who work with the others they represent. These are not the people who worry me.

The people who concern my disillusionment are those who have become detached from the mainstream of a working man's life. Detachment is the key word here. How can one comprehend the life of someone several social classes down from them, several economic levels? How can someone who drives from the suburbs to downtown offices with switchboard operators and private secretaries comprehend the needs of the man who takes the bus from the four room apartment shared by his wife and three kids to the factory at the outskirts of town?

It's the unions' contention that management can't make this kind of transition in dealing with their workers without being patronizing or unfair. What makes the union "management" think they can make this leap? I am not talking about farm workers' unions. I am talking about the AFL-CIO. Granted, the men in the union bureaucracy have been voted in office by the rank and file members of the union, but there is no real moving up the ranks and once there — they never seem to leave.

Now, it bothers me that after helping this country grow, one of the red-tape cancers that plague us now is the over-grown union, the insensitive union, the bureaucratic union.

There are anti-trust controls on the large corporations, but as the unions' structure becomes more corporate it is not watched, not kept down to a workable, sensitive size, where people with like problems can work them out together, where truck drivers work with truck drivers and the man in the field talks to the man in the next field. Or as the union grows it should have more checks to keep the men in power from becoming unlike the people they represent, so much like the cold corporate structure they fight on paper.

Woody, I think you and I and all the others who gave so much, worked so hard, believed so much have been betrayed — and no one even noticed as the disease spread. They're just out for what they can get and to hell with the working man. It never seems to change.

Two important referendum battles

Of all the referenda items on today's ballot, the uniform electric rate question and the bottle bill proposition have the most significant and immediate effect for the Massachusetts consumer.

Both questions have emerged as a classic showcase between industries seeking to preserve their ways of doing business and a substantial part of the public, which believes that the interests of big business must be subordinated to a greater public good.

There are a multitude of problems with the present electric rate structure.

A sensible solution would have two objectives: 1) to lower electric bills for the small users who have been discriminated against by the existing rate structure; and 2) to discourage the growth and demand for electricity, so as to conserve resources and avoid the necessity of new and costly construction.

Fair Share rates accomplish both objectives in a way easy to understand and administer. The referendum simply requires all electric companies in the state to charge all of their customers at a uniform rate per kilowatt hour — just as gas stations charge all their customers the same price for gasoline.

Opponents of the bottle bill have launched a slick smear campaign with a million dollar war chest provided largely by out-of-state corporations.

The most obvious benefit concomitant with the bottle bill legislation is the reduction of litter.

Less apparent gains are reduced prices for beverages and the possibility of increased employment in the state. The Environmental Protection Agency, citing Vermont and Oregon data (the two states that have adopted returnable container legislation), indicates that return rates would be high and that increased handling costs would not offset savings to consumers who would no longer pay for throw-away containers.

And, according to the Federal Reserve Bank bottle bill impact study, passage of Question 6 "will give a competitive advantage to brewers located close to consumers... and may, therefore, increase employment in Massachusetts by encouraging the development of both local breweries and regional plants of national breweries."

To dispel the myths and confusion big business has created with these two referenda questions, Massachusetts Fair Share and MassPIRG, the main movers behind uniform electric rates and the bottle bill respectively, are linking their efforts today at the election polls; each will be promoting the other's binding initiative petition. But even in this united effort they still have precincts uncovered in some towns (shamefully, including Amherst!) Voters even at this late hour are undecided and a plug urging them to vote "Yes" for Questions 6 and 7 will swing many votes.

So if you can spare time this afternoon or early this evening, please lend a hand if you are at all concerned.

Call MassPIRG at 256-6434 or Mass. Fair Share at 781-4110.

These referenda battles provide a rare opportunity for voters to set the philosophical tone for state government — by initiating social reforms our legislators have chosen to avoid. And it will be another two years before we get another chance.

Welcome to 'Pick the President'

And now it's time to play, "Pick the President!"

(applause)

And here's your host for "Pick the President," Anthony Loafaskelli!

(more applause, whistles, screams; The whole bit)

Thank you, thank you very much. It's such a thrill to be here on this historic occasion when the voting people of the United States, which might not include you, gets to vote for the contestant of his or her choice.

All right, let's get down to business. This year, as all years, we have two contestants vying for the position of president ... what's that? Oh, yes, actually folks, there's about five or six people running for the position but since we only have two chairs and two microphones we select the two candidates who have the most financial backing. Now really, isn't that the fair way to do it?

(wild applause)

Now this is how we play. We have three categories: "insulting remarks," "foot in the mouth," and our final, "But I'm a nice guy." So, sound on in the booths and remember audience these contestants have been briefed before the show so their answers could be stumpers. It's up to you to decide.

First category, "insulting." Gentlemen, you have five minutes. Ready? Go!

"Ford, you wouldn't know a foreign policy if it bit you on the ass!"

"Oh yea?"

"You even pretend to smoke a pipe for your television commercials!"

"Take that back!"

"You voted for everything Nixon put in front of you!"

"Says you!"

"You pardoned the biggest crook this country ever had but you won't pardon those who refused to fight in Vietnam!"

"Listen you peanut faced, buck tooth bag of bull ... ".

BZZZZZZZZZZZZ

Sorry gentlemen, but that buzzer means the category is over. Now we move on to "Foot in the mouth." Ready? Go!

"There is no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe, opps."

"If the good Lord hadn't meant for me to lust over women he wouldn't have given me eyes. Oops."

"Just because the people in my administration show the same lack of character and humanity that kids growing up with no parental leadership do, has nothing to do with my lack of control. Oops."

"The Baptist religion teaches us not to judge or speak harshly of other people. However, President Ford is the biggest goddamn putz I ever saw. Oops."

BZZZZZZZZZZ

The judges tell me that at the end of two categories, we're all tied up. So on we go to the third and final category, "I'm really a nice guy."

"Can't you identify with me? I'm clumsy, my son smokes pot, my wife has the run of the household, I'm always making mistakes, and dogs growl at me. I know the only reason I was selected to be President was because I was so nonthreatening, but I like it up here. I don't need reservations in restaurants, my daughter meets wealthy men, I have good credit, I don't have to mow the lawn ... I'm just a nice guy trying to stay in office for another four years."

"You can identify with me. I'm a winner! I got where I am by hard work and I'll make sure the American people can do the same. The Lord keeps me on the right track as I'm tempted by the same sins you are. I know that I'm in control and that if I have enough confidence in myself then you'll have confidence in me too. I'm a winner, but I'm a nice guy."

Well, that's it. Weren't they great?

(applause)

So now it's time for you to get out and vote but remember, we'll be back in four more years to do the same thing all over again. Hope you're there too. This is Anthony Loafaskelli, thanks for being here.

Plunged in mediocrity

By GREG BRYANT

Let's face it, the current presidential campaign culminating today has been nothing short of unmitigated boredom. The candidates have plunged dismally into a state of mediocrity. The causes are many. Political apathy on the part of the American people--contrary to logic a reflex action to Watergate and Vietnam--is a prime reason. Mostly they want stability and aren't terribly concerned how this is attained. The issues are thus placed on the back burner. Similarly, the American people seem to be striving for an honest government and a non-dynamo executive to create a semblance of it. Well they have had a Presidential campaign custom made for their present state of mind.

Its very tone, for instance, descended into petty name-calling and emphasis on such trivalities as Carter's Playboy interview, Ford's bumble over Eastern Europe, and Butz's earthy language. Such aspects pervade the campaign, providing further evidence of its superficiality.

The debates moreover, only served to perpetuate this mediocrity. Purporting vague issues lost in cumbersome statistics and political rhetoric, they are mere forums of "charismatic" display. An Associated Press poll published October 8, two days after the second debate, reported that viewers seemed to be more concerned with the style of the candidates rather than their stance on the issues. Those who favored Carter, for instance, did so because he displayed "more confidence" and a "better appearance"; while advocates of Ford thought he had exhibited his "experience" and had appeared "more knowledgable".

Possible a special Emmy Award should be created for their performance on the debates. Yet it must be remembered, for those of you who have forgotten, that one of these men will soon become this country's chief executive. Appearance and style have little influence on his ability to make decisions or to provide solid leadership.

The candidates themselves offer little variety between each. Both have the tendency to alter their stance on the issues and engage in blatant contradictions. Carter has repeatedly urged Ford to make public, corporate contributions made to him while a Congressman. When pressed to do so himself, Carter said that they had "lost" the list of contributors to his gubernatorial race.

In his infamous Playboy interview, Carter stated that he was opposed to the Vietnam War throughout the 1960's. In April of 1971 though, he declared an American Fighting Men's Day in Georgia with an expressed desire to show support for those fighting in Vietnam. Carter himself declared his "evolution" in this manner: (New York Times May 21, 1976) "I've always felt and of course my thinking changes over a period of years as I see things from a different perspective, now running for President -- I never thought I would in those days" (i.e. it was not politically expedient to do so "...in those days".

For all his innocence and supposed respectability, the political tricks Ford has displayed are so obvious it's a wonder anyone could take anything he says seriously. Before campaigning in New York a few weeks ago, it was announced that Israel was going to get the heat sensitive equipment it desired. On the surface it's a nice proposal, yet it was not only contrary to previous administration policies, but took the State and Defense Departments by complete surprise.

Before campaigning in the Great Plains states Ford announced that wheat price supports were to be increased by 50 per cent, and the farmers who produce corn and other grains will get larger supports than they had before he also decided it to be politically expedient to do so. Why just last week, Ford ironically stated that Carter would do or say almost anything to be elected.

Thus with the election today and over half the registered voters not intending to vote, the situation does indeed look dismal. Take heart though, for although the faces have changed the nature of the presidential campaign will remain the same. Like all the others, it's just politics as usual.

GOP: For the people

By DAVID E. LEAVITT

Why should you vote Republican? You're probably saying "This guy is crazy if he thinks that I'm voting for any Republican!"

The Republican Party is the party of the people...all for the people. If you examine our platform and compare it with the Democrats, you will see that we are the ones in tune with America.

The number one concern of the American people today is spiraling inflation. The GOP has made inflation its primary concern. Under President Ford, inflation is being curbed by an all inclusive stop sign. Unfortunately, he hasn't received much support from a Democrat-controlled Congress who propose such inflationary bills as the Humphrey-Hawkins Act and the Kennedy-Kormann Act. These are only two examples. In both cases, economic experts haven't even dared to put a price on them.

How much do the Democrats think the American taxpayer can take? Do they think that they have an unlimited supply of cash to hand out to an unresponsive government? Jimmy Carter and Ted Kennedy seem to think so. President Ford, Mike Robertson, and Silvio Conte say otherwise. We should cut back on Federal bureaucracy and Federal waste to effectively curb inflation. The Democrats answer to this bigger government and bigger spending.

On the subject of jobs, we all believe that everyone who wants to work should have a job. The answer to assure this is not temporary make-work jobs as advocated by the Democrats, but sound, long-term employment from the private sector as we Republicans believe.

The Democrats want to slash the Defense budget by as much as $15 billion. A recent Gallup poll showed Americans wish to maintain a strong national defense by almost 2 to 1. We as Republicans believe in an America that is second to none militarially. The Communists, Socialists, and Democrats who want to slash the Defense industry are blind to the amount of jobs that would be lost. 96.5 per cent of the total working force in the United States is employed in a defense related job.

On the amount of taxes that we pay, the GOP favors an increase in the personal exemption of up to $1,000. This will provide more spending money without inflation. The Democrats want an increase in the tax burden for the "wealthy" anyone who earns over the median income. The median income is America is $14,000 per year. Should the Democrats be elected, woe be to the middle class Americans for they will bear the brunt of a free-spending and careless Democrat regime.

In Foreign Policy, the Republican Party and two Republican administrations have given us peace in the world. Nowhere in the world today is there an American fighting or dying on a foreign battlefield. We have averted a potentially dangerous situation in Rhodesia by negotiating Black majority rule cognizant of the rights of the White minority. President Ford has dealt even-handedly and responsibly in a harsh and real world.

Jimmy Carter, on the other hand, showed his ignorance of the foreign policy situation by stating that he would "never send troops to Yugoslavia." The unfortunate statement exemplifies his ignorance and irresponsible attitude and, instead of preserving peace, leads to terrible consequences.

So vote for President Ford. In his two years in office, he has restored public faith, honesty, and integrity in the White House; He is turning the economy back on the track. On many occasions, he has been all that has stood between us and a free-spending Congress. He has served us well through difficult times.

So vote for Mike Robertson. Its time that we had a voice in Washington representing Massachusetts and fighting for our rights. We are tired of Ted Kennedy who has done nothing substantial for us in his 14 years, and who represents only himself and his image.

So vote for Silvio Conte. In his 18 years in the Congress, he has shown genuine concern for his constituents and earned the respect of Republicans, Independents, and Democrats alike.

Today you have the choice. Will it be for the people or will it be for the special interests the Democrats cater to? Vote Republican!

Bad drivers to be hit with surcharge

BOSTON [AP] – Insurance Commissioner James M. Stone doubled and tripled surcharges Monday that will be assessed against Massachusetts drivers involved in a second or third motor vehicle violation within three years.

A driver declared to be at fault in a second accident involving a claim of $50 or more will pay an additional $150; driving under the influence a second time, $425; reckless driving a second time, $225, and other convictions of moving violations, $75.

The new automobile insurance law specified surcharges of $50, $200, $100 and $25 for the first such incidents.

Stone established the following additional surcharges for further incidents within the three-year period:

—At fault in an accident, $300.

—Driving under the influence, $675.

—Reckless driving, $375.

—Other moving violations convictions, $150.

Stone said the insurance companies will assess and collect the surcharges and face stiff criminal penalties if they ignore this obligation. The proceeds will be pooled and later distributed within the several rating territories to drivers with clean records, Stone said.

He acknowledged that the new merit rating law has raised a number of questions that have not been answered and may not be clarified without a state Supreme Court interpretation.

Stone said the insurance companies will determine who is at fault in an accident and motorists can appeal this by paying a fee that he expects will be $5.

While violations or accidents starting this month will count towards surcharges, Stone said there would be no billings before July 1. He said all policies after that date must contain appropriate surcharges.

He expects it will be a year beyond that before the so-called good drivers receive any credits from the merit rating system.

Stone told a state house news conference that he has promulgated the schedule of surcharges for the second and subsequent violations on an emergency basis. He said a public hearing on the plan will be held at his office Dec. 2.

Payment for second surcharges will be spread over two years and for third offenses, payment will be spread over three years.

Gun turn-in a misfire

BOSTON [AP] – A statewide "domestic disarmament race," a chance for people to surrender their guns with no questions asked turned up a rusty revolver by Monday but not much else.

As police departments waited for the guns that never came, promoters of the three-day turn-in admitted that gun owners probably will not give up their weapons unless they are forced to.

The event was meant to publicize a referendum question on Tuesday's ballot that would ban ownership of handguns for everyone except police and museums.

But a survey of 22 police departments on the second day of the program showed the turn-in drive being ignored almost everywhere.

The only reported weapon was an old, uncared for revolver delivered Monday to the police station in Littleton, a suburb west of Boston.

Labor dispute at Seabrook

SEABROOK, N.H. [UPI] – About two dozen Teamsters truck drivers yesterday began a walkout at the site of th $2 billion Seabrook nuclear power plant, saying they were involved in a contract dispute with a subcontractor.

The strikers, all members of Local 633 in Manchester, began picketing outside the main gate of the $2 billion atomic generator at dawn. About 30 other craftsmen sat across the road, refusing to cross the picket line.

Shop Steward Paul Gendron would not be specific about why the men were striking, and only said the issue involved a contract fight.

The union's official spokesman in Manchester was unavailable for comment.

"It's an illegal and unauthorized strike...," said Frank Shans, a spokesman for the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, which is building Seabrook Station.

Budget surplus for Connecticut

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] – Connecticut's financial health, on the danger list a year ago, was further boosted Monday by state officials who projected a $29.2 budget surplus for the current fiscal year.

State Comptroller J. Edward Caldwell said the change from his projection of a $24.2 million surplus made Aug. 31 was caused by increased estimates of federal grant revenues.

He said state officials had carried revenue from the Public Works Employment Act of 1976 as a contingency item in the August report and its signing into law by President Ford forced an increase in the projected surplus.

It was last November that Gov. Ella T. Grasso told a statewide television audience Connecticut faced a projected $80 million budget deficit for the fiscal year that ended June 30, 1976.

Kennedy asks for mandate

BOSTON [UPI] – Sen. Edward M. Kennedy asks Massachusetts voters for a mandate today in his first re-election bid unencumbered by personal tragedy.

Legions of Kennedy volunteers readied an election day juggernaut that promised to swell Democrat Jimmy Carter's margin and easily return Kennedy to the Senate seat he has held since 1962.

The 44-year-old Democrat won reelection in 1964 from a hospital bed while recovering from a plane crash. His 59 per cent victory in 1970 was 6 months after an auto accident on Chappaquiddick claimed the life of a campaign worker.

The scale of Kennedy's $752,000 campaign against little-known millionnaire businessman Michael Robertson sparked hopes Kennedy still harbors White House ambitions.

Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., was confident of victory in the Cambridge congressional district he served for 24 years. The portly and powerful 63-year-old House Democratic leader expects to be elected house speaker in January.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Grad students can comment on depts.

During the next two months, graduate students will have an opportunity to comment upon their own departments' policies, practices, and progress in eliminating sex discrimination. Meetings set up by an interview team from the Provost's Office will be held in conjunction with the University's federally mandated self-evaluation under Title IX. The law states: "No person in the United States shall on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

A series of meetings is being scheduled, with the first group beginning in the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

If graduate students are unable to attend the meeting scheduled for their department, they may forward written comments to the Title IX Staff, Provost's Office, Whitmore Administration Building, or call 545-3137.

YOUR BIRTHDAY

by STELLA WILDER

Tuesday, November 2 — Born today, you have great emotional stability, but you are somewhat inclined to pretend otherwise, especially when you believe you can gain your ends by so doing. So long as you don't cause others distress as a result of your "acting," and so long as you yourself realize the extent to which you are engaging in make-believe, there should be no damage done. When and if you discover that your fakery does bring pain to others, then and there is the time to allow maturity its way. There is no point in playing children's games when you seek adult rewards -- but this is something you must come to on your own as, ultimately, you will. At such time, you will begin to reflect your true feelings all the time not only when make-believe fails you.

You will have to take special care in choosing a mate; otherwise, you may find that you are permanently tied to a spouse who understands you as little as you do him or her. Because you are not an easy person to "read" and because you do not find it easy to "read" others, you must make an effort to place all your cards on the table before -- not after -- you involve another in your life for keeps.

You have a great deal of faith in your ability to achieve whatever you decide to achieve. On the other hand, you are not so self-confident that you overestimate your talents. You know the limits of your intellectual and physical abilities and of the degree to which you are capable of absorbing emotional shock.

Wednesday, November 3

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You may discover yourself to be more fearful than you had anticipated in the face of a new enterprise. Trust to instinct for best results.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Your reputation for enthusiasm may suffer a bit as the day unwinds. This is not a good time to try to change your nature.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Changes on the home front make this something of an exciting day, as well as an expensive one. Don't give in to threats in the morning.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Consider today's questions from the viewpoint of another. It may be that you have been too narrow in your considerations.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Social invitations should be studied with great care before being either accepted or rejected. You are your own best friend today.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take your cue from one who has been through the mill and come out with a profit and a smile. Seek advice open-mindedly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Bring all your influence to bear upon one who can help you to a higher rung on the ladder of success. Friends speak for you in the evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — There is little outright enjoyment to be had from this day. There is, however, a great deal of opportunity for material gain.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Don't allow another to shake your faith in yourself. Your intellectual integrity should be enough to see you through a difficult time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — The will of another in combination with your own whim should make this an interesting -- though perhaps confusing -- day.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A personality clash with one with authority over you, even if only temporarily so, may lead to more than a little discouragement. Relax!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A sudden change in physical surroundings must not be allow to surprise you into an imprudent move. Concentrate on the future.

The Devil's Crave

Today the main astrological event is the conjunction in Scorpio of Mercury, the messenger, with Uranus, the rebel. We may receive some revolutionary messages in the mail, over the phone, and in our heads. This will be a time when our ideas about sharing love and friendship may undergo a change. Uranus is the planet of the intuitive truth, and it is in Scorpio, the sign of the underworld.

We may be starting to understand it's true we're all possessed, at least to some degree, by the Devil. How many times a day do you sell your soul to him without even knowing it? Like every time you light up a cigarette because your mouth wants that certain indescribable something — where does that crave come from? Or when you're compulsively stuffing food down your throat to end up with indigestion — Rolaids won't take the Devil's crave away.

You know it's true — look around you — how many people tearing down the highway have any idea really of where they're going? or why they're in such a hurry? What are you going to do with your college degree once you get it? What is it you really want out of all this neurotic insanity? And when Prince or Princess Charming finally does come along, all you romantics, do you think you'll even recognize him or her? Every day you spend looking for what you've got already is a wasted one. The time is pressing us to share what we have already. If you could stop long enough to count your blessings, you'd feel like a king or a queen in a matter of seconds.

Doesn't it feel absurd sometimes when you spend so much of your time wishing, waiting, wanting a certain member of the opposite sex — pinning all your hopes and dreams on them — only to find it all exploding in your face when the time for the actual performance comes around? And then you look back on all that wasted time and it feels kind of sad — you look back on all the people you neglected or pushed aside because your all too important goal was demanding all your attention — and every time you weren't with that person you were making plans and thinking up clever things to say — but missing the miracle happening before your very eyes.

Uranus is Scorpio is what's shedding some light on the absurdity of that whole drama. How many times, now, honestly, have you been duped by the Devil? He'll feed your mind with any kind of rationalizaaion that it needs so he can control you; giving you the complete illusion of your own free will. But you know the Truth — the problem is, it's too much hard work to become free — there's too much pain involved — there's too much ego fortification to break down and chip off. So it's easier to be a deaf, dumb, and blind robot.

So think about that the next time you walk into a wall you built yourself. And while you're at it, laugh at yourself. That will take half the Devil's fun away. If you think Bob Hope is funny, just watch yourself for one day — and if you still don't get the joke, tie a stone to your heart and drop it off the nearest bridge.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Spring play production needs few directors

A director, costume designer, set designer and publicity director are needed for a spring production of an original theatre piece: "JOURNEY" — book and lyrics by Daniel R. Kane; music by Stephen Greeley. The production in May at Bowker Auditorium is a BDIC Senior Honors Project for the author and composer.

"JOURNEY" is an inward journey. Set in a mythological framework, the Hero encounters loneliness, failure, a giant, a beast, sexuality, death, joy and the divine. Acting, singing, dancing, Greek-style chorus, pantomime, ritual and the use of masks are part of the play.

Anyone interested in this project is urged to contact Daniel Kane at 546-4602 or leave a message at 545-2661 or 545-2789.

Wing GM angered by Reay

DETROIT [UPI] — General manager-coach Alex Delvecchio of the Detroit Red Wings has reacted angrily to statements by Chicago coach Billy Reay that defenseman Bryan Watson should be kicked out of the National Hockey League.

"His statement is bush," Delvecchio said Monday. "Reay ought to be kicked out of the game along with his whole team.

"His team high-sticked and slashed our team all night, but for some strange reason the only penalties that the officials chose to call were the ones when our players retaliated."

In Chicago's 4-1 victory over Detroit Saturday night, Watson slugged Keith Magnuson, breaking his jaw and putting him out of action some six weeks. The altercation followed Magnuson's high-stick of Detroit's Mike Bloom, an offense that drew blood and left Bloom with a cut on the nose.

Watson was suspended by League President Clarence Campbell pending a hearing in Detroit Wednesday.

"He should be kicked out of the NHL for doing a thing like that," Reay said. "It was the most brutal thing I've seen in my NHL career.

"Magnuson doesn't know yet what hit him," the Chicago coach said. "We knew Watson would get a suspension, but that's not enough."

New look for Giants but same old story

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. [UPI] — The New York Giants' attempts to win a game this season have featured a new stadium, a new quarterback and, on Sunday, a new coach in John McVay.

Nothing works.

And what works least of all is the Giants' offense. It should be added to the welfare rolls.

"The offense has got to learn to believe in itself," defensive end Jack Gregory said after the Giants suffered their second straight shutout and their eighth straight defeat of the season in a 10-0 loss to the Philadelphia Eagles Sunday.

New York safety Rick Volk, who has played on outstanding and horrendous teams with the Baltimore Colts, said the Giants also have begun to resemble a loser in their attitude.

And after being four-point favorites in the Eagles game, the Giants are faced with the dreadful possibility of not winning a game all season.

A home game against the Seattle Seahawks Nov. 28 will be the only other game this season in which New York will be favored and the sad state of the Giants' offense precludes anyone being regarded as an "easy" opponent.

"We're going to beat somebody," Gregory vowed. But he added, "I just don't know who.

"The offense needs to know it can do it (score) anytime it wants."

At this point, the Giants' offense needs to know it can score — sometime.

A look around the NFL...

BUFFALO [UPI] — O. J. Simpson underwent plastic surgery Sunday evening following the Buffalo Bills' 19-14 loss to the New York Jets to repair a deep gash he received under his right eye during the game.

Simpson caught the helmet of New York defensive back Burgess Owens under his double-bar facemask on a pass play early in the fourth quarter.

Simpson rushed for 166 yards in 29 carries against the Jets.

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — It's going to be tough keeping San Diego Chargers' wide receiver Charlie Joiner off the All-Pro team this season.

Joiner caught four passes for 98 yards Sunday in the Chargers 23-0 loss to the Pittsburgh Steelers to increase his league-leading yardage figure to 757 yards on 32 catches.

Joiner, who has had four 100-yard games and missed by six yards or less on two other occasions, has averaged 23.6 yards per catch.

WASHINGTON [UPI] — When the Dallas Cowboys beat the Washington Redskins 20-7 Sunday, it marked the first time either team had won on the road against each other since 1971 when the Cowboys won at RFK Stadium 13-0.

The two teams began their twice-a-season meeting in 1970 and they have split the series each year since. The Redskins will get a chance to win their portion of this year's series when they travel to Dallas Dec. 12.

CHICAGO [UPI] — All was not lost when the Minnesota Vikings fell as the National Football League's only unbeaten team Sunday with a 14-13 setback against the Chicago Bears.

Minnesota quarterback Fran Tarkenton took over the career passing lead in total yards with his 248 yard performance to pass Johnny Unitas with 40,397 to the Baltimore great's 40,239.

Tarkenton already owns the career passing records for most attempts (5,446), most completions (3,065) and touchdowns (297).

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — It was a rough day for San Francisco kicker Steve Mike-Mayer Sunday when the 49ers dropped a 23-20 overtime decision to the St. Louis Cardinals.

Mike-Mayer, who had kicked 10 straight field goals heading into the game, missed a pair of three-point tries against the Cardinals, including a 23-yard attempt in the final two minutes of regulation time that would have won the game for San Francisco.

Mike-Mayer also missed a field goal from 40 yards out and the extra point try following the 49ers first touchdown.

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Pittsburgh's 23-0 shutout of the San Diego Chargers Sunday marked the first time the Steelers have posted back-to-back shutouts since 1942.

Pittsburgh blanked the New York Giants 27-0 last weekend and has now held the opposition without a touchdown for 13 straight quarters.

UMies in pro basketball

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the third in a four-part series on former UMass athletes now active in professional sports.

If you don't know at least one of the former UMass basketball players active in the NBA, you shouldn't be reading this sports page.

But, just in case there are still a few uninformed among us, a doctor has recently set up residency in Philadelphia, after stops in Virginia and New York. Generally assumed by all basketball observers to be the most exciting hoopster active today, the man is the single biggest drawing card in the sport. He, more than anyone, was most responsible for the NBA-ABA merger.

This incredible athlete, of course, is Julius Erving. After leaving UMass after his junior year (1971), Dr. J. has left a mark on basketball.

It is not enough to say that Erving has averaged 27.3, 31.9, 27.4, 27.9, and 29.3 points per game in his five professional seasons. It is also not enough to say that he has never shot less than 50 per cent from the floor in a season. It is also not enough to say that he consistently ranks within the top five rebounders in his league. It is also not enough to say that he has almost singlehandedly led two of his teams to ABA titles.

What is sufficient to relate is that the Doctor holds crowds spellbound with his special brand of basketball magic.

He has made an art of the slam-dunk. During halftime of the ABA all-star game last season, Erving was the winner of the innovative slam-dunk competition. Actually, no one can hold a candle to Dr. J. in this category.

He flies through the air from the foul line on to slam the ball into the basket. He grabs a defensive rebound and dribbles the length of the court for a finishing stuff. People shell out their hard-earned cash just for the pleasure of watching him perform.

But aside from his showmanship, as evidenced by his excellent field goal percentage, Erving also is a fine outside shooter. He can shoot free throws, rebound, steal the ball, and block shots. He was the New York Nets last year, and since his sale to the 76'ers, everyone is writing the Nets off as a team this season. Erving is, if one phrase can suffice, everything anyone ever dreamed could be put in one basketball player. He is it all, and then some.

Dr. J. rewrote the record books during his two varsity seasons at UMass. He is this school's all-time leading career scorer (1370 points), has scored the most points in one season (727), the most points as a sophomore (643), has the highest career scoring average (26.3), the highest single-season scoring average (26.9), and the most field goals in a season (286).

Erving also holds rebounding, minutes played, and foul shooting records galore. He made UMass basketball what it is today through his influence.

Erving's presence lured at least one other player to campus. Al Skinner, a 6'4" forward in his playing days here, also came from Long Island.

Now with the Nets, Skinner was a UMass standout. He holds records for highest field goal percentage for a career (.557), highest field goal percentage in a year (.620), most games played (79), and also ranks high in assists and foul shooting categories.

After his graduation in 1974, Skinner signed with the Nets and made the squad. Converted strictly to guard, Skinner saw limited playing time in his rookie year, but came on to play quite a bit last season. He started a lot, too.

With the addition of Nate Archibald to the Net backcourt, coach Kevin Loughery plans on switching Skinner to a primarily defensive performer role. However, reports out of Gotham have it that he is making a slow transition to his new role.

Former star forward John Murphy is also playing in a pro league in France. Playing for a team out of Nilvange, last season Murphy averaged nearly 30 points a game and 20 rebounds.

According to his father, Murphy has played in about five games this season after returning to France in mid-August and is going at about the same clip this year as last. Murphy works for a company which sponsors the team.

He is following in the footsteps of several UMass hoopsters, including Peter Trow, Tom McLaughlin, and Tom Austin, who have also played professionally in Europe.

Next: The pro hockey players.

Women close, head to tourney

The UMass field hockey team will close out regular season play today at 2:30 when they take on Northeastern University at NOPE field.

A victory today would leave the Minutewomen with a final record of ten wins and five losses following Saturday's disappointing loss to top-ranked Springfield College. A loss like that could demoralize a team, but Coach Judith Davidson was confident that the Minutewomen would prevail: "Northeastern has a very aggressive team, almost to the point of roughness. But, I'm sure that we are the better team skill-wise and we should win."

The Minutewomen should expect another stellar performance from goalie Kathy Gipps, who made 23 saves against Springfield, allowing only two goals. Gipps faced a relentless Springfield offense in that game and did well to allow only two goals.

Although the Minutewomen were outclassed Saturday against Springfield, they remain the fourth seed in this week's AIAW post-season playoff. They will play two games at Brown University this Thursday when the tourney begins, the first game being against Yale.

The field hockey team will leave Wednesday for their three-day tourney bid. Sixteen teams will be represented in the competition; UMass has played some of these in regular season play, but some are "newer, non-traditional" teams that have not yet been encountered.

UMass' fourth seed is behind first place Springfield College, second, UNH, and third, Portland. Springfield has posed the most problems for UMass this season, inflicting two losses on the Minutewomen. Portland dominated UMass once, 3-2, but UMass turned the tables against UNH, winning 1-0.

One loss in the tournament will put a team out of championship, play and into the consolation bracket. In this way, the tournament will run as a single elimination contest, but will ensure each team at least two games of play. The tourney winner and runner-up will go on to the Nationals.

JV gridders trounce AIC 36-6

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Complete and utter domination.

That's the best way to describe how the UMass junior varsity football team handled its counterparts from American International College yesterday. The Minutemen throttled the Yellow Jackets, 36-6, in a game played at Alumni Stadium.

To point how thoroughly UMass controlled the game, one needs only to look at the statistics. They reveal that the Minutemen had 22 first downs to AIC's four, produced 349 yards in total offense (248 of it on the ground) to the Yellow Jackets' 105, and completed 50 per cent of their passes to a measly 33 per cent for their opponents from Springfield.

Mistakes didn't aid the Yellow Jackets, either, as they gave up the ball four times on fumbles to the home squad. UMass, meanwhile, fumbled three times but were able to keep possession after each one. AIC also committed 10 penalties worth 118 yards.

UMass led, 29-0, at halftime, before coach Tom Mullen sent many of his second and third-stringers into the game. The Minutemen also had a 23-0 advantage after the first quarter.

The Minutemen scored the first time they handled the ball. After the first of many poor AIC punts (a wind-hindered 18-yarder) gave UMass the ball at midfield, a 16-yard run by quarterback Mike McEvilly put the Minutemen in field goal range, and Mike Curley booted a line-drive three-pointer which just made it over the crossbar.

Later in the quarter, UMass recovered an AIC fumble and went on a seven-play, 31-yard drive to touchdownville. Fullback Hank Sareault was the workhorse on the march, as he chipped in with 16 and five-yard runs and scored the UMass TD on an up - the - middle two-yard plow job.

On the Yellow Jackets' next possession, another poor punt of 16 yards gave UMass decent field position. On a third and four situation, McEvilly hit flanker Kevin O'Connor with a beautiful 47-yard touchdown pass which lofted right into his arms. By the way, it was O'Connor's third touchdown reception in as many games.

By now, one was beginning to feel sorry for AIC as it fumbled on its first play from scrimmage after UMass' ensuing kickoff. Blessed with the ball on the Yellow Jacket 29, McEvilly rode around left end on the first play of UMass' possession for a touchdown. However, a poor snap from center forced the Minutemen to miss the extra-point attempt.

Just before the end of the first period, Chuck Vuytowecz recovered another AIC fumble and reserve fullback Steve Milkiewicz rambled for a 26-yard gain down to the Yellow Jacket four. From there, sub halfback Bob Ridley carried twice, the second time for a two-yard touchdown jaunt. Again, though, the extra-point attempt failed.

The halftime stats showed that AIC did not gain a first down against the Minutemen, while UMass chalked up nine. Along with the Yellow Jackets' poor punting, they also had a kick blocked by rover Peter Russell.

The only second half score UMass could produce was a 13-yard touchdown pass from McEvilly to reserve tight end John Benoit. AIC, meanwhile, finally got on the board near the end of the game when it blocked a Gerald Flanigan punt and fell on it in the end zone.

Pedrow was the leading rusher for the Minutemen, as he gained 85 yards in 11 carries. Milkiewicz chipped in with 47 yards in eight attempts, while Sareault had 32 in six. McEvilly was five of 11 in the passing department for 73 yards, while substitute Don Roeder completed two of three for 28 yards.

UMass, whose record is now 2-0-1, plays host to UConn next Sunday at 1:00 in its last home game of the season.

Indian ritual sparks to life in Fireball II

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

There'll be a hot time tonight at 8:00 on the intramural fields across from Boyden Gym when the 13th floor of Kennedy Tower's annual fireball game takes place.

The second re-enactment of the classic will pit members of the lacrosse team against 13th floor residents.

The leading force behind fireball is Kevin Patterson, a full blooded Tuscorara Indian who lives on the 13th floor, and is a member of the lacrosse team. Fireball is an ancient Indian game still played on Patterson's reservation.

The game is played with a flaming ball of wound cloth, which is kicked into a goal made of two by fours which are also lit. "It's just an anything goes, animal game, that's all," said Patterson.

The 13th floor residents regards this as a grudge match, as the lacrosse team beat them in fireball last year, 2-0. "Last year was a failure," said Patterson of Fireball 1, "because the ball would not stay lit. Everyone thought it was great, but to me it was a failure."

"This year, I can almost promise it won't be a failure, 'cause I got a ball made by a chief."

So, for an enlightening experience, take a trip down to Boyden tonight and see what may be the premier performance of a new intramural sport.

"It's the only place these people will get a chance to see this, said Patterson. "The only place it's played in the world is up on our reservation."

Bowlers roll on despite problems

The sport of bowling, perhaps more than any other, has the most stereotypes attached to it. In my mind, at least, the ten-pin lanes conjures up images of beer-bellied keglers rolling gutter balls more often than not in their Wednesday night leagues, and guffawing loudly should they happen to get a strike.

It also reminds me of hair-curler headed housewives, cackling to each other as they bowl in their morning leagues while the kids are at a school.

Well, the UMass bowling teams dispels these thoughts of the ten-pin sport. Composed of undergraduates, the bowlers compete in tournaments against other eastern schools within the Tri-State Bowling League. Schools such as Cornell, the University of Lowell, Worcester Polytechnic, Central Connecticut State, and Army and Coast Guard compete against the men's and women's teams.

However, as with most UMass institutions, the bowlers suffered budgetary problems this year. In fact, there almost wasn't a UMass bowling club this season.

The team is funded through the Program Council, as it has been for a number of years. According to Karen James, the team's manager, four days before this year's tournament, the council told the team that its funding for 1976-77 was being taken away.

"We appealed the decision, and finally did get the money back," explained James. "It was a big mix-up, but it finally was straightened out."

But in any case, this year will probably mark the last time that the keglers are financed through the Program Council funds.

"Next year we're going to apply for RSO status," said James. "We see no problem in getting it."

Another alternative for the team is to go through intramurals and become a club.

However, the ideal answer to the funding problem would be to go through the athletic department and be funded as a varsity sport, a la basketball, football, or hockey.

"About half the schools we compete against are funded as varsity sports," said James. "I know that Cornell is, and the rest get their money about the same way we do."

It really is a shame that the bowling team is not able to be funded with athletic department money. It competes in intercollegiate tournaments against other schools, and does quite well. The kegler's first tournament this year saw them winning the women's division and taking third in the men's. However, with the financial shape the athletic department is in, it isn't surprising that bowling is not a varsity sport.

Last season, it was announced that only four varsity sports (football, basketball, women's basketball, and women's gymnastics) would be given scholarship money through the Barber Fund. This leaves other deserving sports, such as baseball, hockey, men's gymnastics, lacrosse, and soccer, out in the cold when it comes to attracting top athletes to UMass.

The scholarship situation here is bad enought, but when a successful group of student-athletes is forced to scrape and worry about their mere existence as a group, well, that's downright shameful.

The UMass athletic department should, by all rights and purposes, be athletes, whether they be football players or bowlers. And until it is, it hasn't fulfilled its role here or its reason for being.

This is a column about the bowling team. But it also mirrors the problems that exist within UMass athletics. Too often so-called "minor sports" are shunted away to some hidden and forgotten corner. But they shouldn't be. They have as much right to be here as football or basketball, believe it or not.

Meanwhile, roll on bowlers, and good luck this season.

It's Carter

Compiled From Wires

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Jimmy Carter won the presidency Wednesday by defeating incumbent Gerald Ford in one of the tightest races in modern political history.

Carter, the former Georgia governor who was a political unknown until he began strung together a series of primary victories this spring, will be sworn in as the 39th president on Jan. 29, ending eight years of Republican rule.

The 52-year-old Carter will have heavy majorities in theSenate and House as the Democrats once again romped to victory in the congressional races.

Carter finally nailed down the goal he had pursued for 22 months and 500,000 miles when he captured Mississippi's seven electoral votes at 2:57 a.m. (EST). Mississippi fell shortly after Wisconsin and the Hawaii put him within five votes of the 270 needed for election.

But Ford, who became president when Richard Nixon resigned Aug. 9, 1974 and then made a determined effort to win a four-year term in his own right, went to bed and had not conceded the election.

The bastion of Carter's electoral state was his native South which in recent years had increasingly voted for Republican presidential candidates.

But Carter swept every southern state except Virginia and annexed the border states as a base for his attack North.

Carter captured the first of the big states — Pennsylvania with 27 electoral votes — and quickly added New York and Texas. He also plucked off traditionally Democratic states like Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, and Minnesota.

Carter earlier in the day promised friends and neighbors at the abandoned railroad depot in Plains that "Tonight when I come back to address many of you, I'll come back as president-elect."

Carter won the election before final results came in from three of the country's largest and politically most important states — Illinois, Ohio and California. Illinois eventually went to Ford and the lead swung back and forth throughout the night in the other two states.

Carter, the first president elected from a Deep South state since Zachary Taylor in 1848, built up a strong lead in his native South and Border states and then saw it dwindle as Ford made a comeback in the West and Southwest.

His victory destroyed the hopes of Gerald Ford to win election to the White House in his own right and ended a stunning comeback drive by the appointed President, who pulled into a dead heat with the former Georgia governor on election eve and then denied him victory for hours by winning state after key state.

Ford, who served a quarter of a century in Congress, was picked by Nixon to succeed Vice President Spirto T. Agnew who resigned. And when Nixon stepped down in disgrace Aug. 9, 1974, Ford became the country's 38th chief executive.

After barely defeating Ronald Reagan for the GOP nomination,

BOSTON: U.S. Senator Edward M. Kennedy beams at supporters after winning re-election to his third full term. (UPI telephoto)

Kennedy victorious over Robertson

By JIM ODATO
Collegian Staff

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, startling no one, won an easy reelection to his third full term in the U.S. Senate after waging an extensive and expensive campaign against a little-known curtain manufacturer.

With returns from more than half of the precincts in, the Democratic incumbant, was ahead of Republican Michael S. Robertson, 765,891 to 298,652. Robertson attempted election to his first statewide office.

"I am enormously grateful for the continued confidence and trust the people have placed in me," Kennedy said at his Boston headquarters as about 200 supporters cheered wildly.

Kennedy, who removed himself from his party's race for the White House earlier this year, took a 4-1 lead in most communities, running very strong in the western part of the state.

He swept suburban Brookline and Springfield, the state's second largest city, to gain his third full term in the Senate.

Only in the antibusing, antiabortion stronghold of Boston was his wide margin imperiled, with the senator running 2-1 in early returns.

"The voters clearly showed they want six more years of Ted Kennedy," Robertson said in his concession speech. "But as I've said before, I don't think they can afford him."

Also running for the seat were H. Graham Lowry, the U.S. Labor candidate who received 35 votes, and Carol Evans, a Socialist candidate who had 18.

Kennedy, 44, was aided to victory by 10,000 volunteers working to deliver a new mandate for the 14-year Senate veteran.

The guardian of the Kennedy legacy outspent his little known challenger seven to one in a $752,000 crusade that sparked speculation Kennedy was building a foundation at home for a future White House bid.

Kennedy's campaign was managed by Joseph P. Kennedy III, 23, eldest son of the late Robert F. Kennedy.

Kennedy, elected to the Senate in 1962, defeated Robertson, 41, the owner of the world's largest family-owned drapery manufacturing firm, who challenged Kennedy when more prominent Republicans refused.

Dems continue house domination

By BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

Democrats last night walked to congressional victory in Massachusetts and obtained enough seats nationally to continue the domination that party has had over both houses for the past 22 years.

Eleven incumbent congressmen, including prospective speaker of the House Thomas P. O'Neill of Cambridge, were re-elected in Massachusetts.

Edward R. Markey of Malden, a state representative won his seat easily to replace the late Torbert R. MacDonald.

The closest race was between Rev. Robert F. Drinan and Republican Arthur Mason. Drinan won that contest and will begin his third term in the house.

All but two incumbents, Margaret M. Heckler of Wellesley and Silvio O. Conte of Pittsfield are Democrats.

Other seats for Massachusetts were taken by Edward P. Boland of Springfield, Paul Tsongas of Lowell, Michael J. Harrington of Salem, John J. Moakley of Boston and James A. Burke of Milton.

Nationally, with 218 seats required for a majority, Democrats have won 238 and are winning in 48 more.

Seven seats from each side switched from one party to the other. Republicans seized formerly Democratic seats in New Jersey, Missouri and Pennsylvania. The Democrats picked up previously Republican seats in Nebraska and Ohio.

In key gubernatorial races across the country, James R. Thompson, a Republican from Illinois won the governorship there. Thompson rose to a prominence after indicting associates of Chicago Mayor Richard Daley.

In West Virginia, Democrat John D. Rockefeller, nephew of the Vice President won the governorship there.

Other gubernatorial decisions included J. Joseph Garrahay for governor of Rhode Island. Indiana Republican Otis R. Bowen and Arkansas Democrat David Pryor were also victors.

In Vermont, State Treasurer Stella Hackel lost her bid to become Vermont's first woman governor to millionaire Richard Snelling.

Utah Rep. Allan Howe who was convicted of being a "john" to two undercover cops there was flushed from his seat by Republican Daniel Marrot who won with 55 per cent of the vote.

The Michigan seat once held by Ford for twenty-five years was won back by Republican Harold Sawyer who defeated Democrat Richard F. Vanderveen, Ford's replacement.

Late returns gave the Democrats one big upset in Arizona as Rep. Sam Stieger was unseated by Tuscon District Attorney Dennis DeConini.

In the House of Representatives, just eleven seats changed hands with the Republicans gaining three seats.

Prior to the election, pollsters predicted that the House was not held high in voters esteem. However in the poll that counted the voters decided to keep the House in the Democratic majority.

At least one-fourth of the House will be made up of members with no more than two years' experience.

Moynihan defeats Buckley in tough race

By RICK GUREGHIAN
Collegian Staff

Daniel Patrick Moynihan, the enigmatic Harvard University professor whose thunderous defense of America in the United Nations two years ago earned him the undying respect of the American public, became New York's first Democratic senator in eight years last night, defeating incumbent Conservative-Republican Sen. James L. Buckley.

Moynihan, who continually denied any intentions of running for office right up to the day he announced, upset Buckley in one the most bitter campaigns yet waged in this Presidential year.

At press time last night, the tight California race between Democratic incumbent John V. Tunney and Republican challenger S.I. Hayakawa was too close to call.

In Arizona, former Attorney General Dennis DeConcini pulled a stunning upset of former Republican Congressman Sam Steiger in their race for that state's Senate seat.

Closer to home, in New England, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy won in his usual handy fashion, gathering almost 70 per cent of the vote in Massachusetts in defeating Republican challenger Michael Robertson.

John Chafee, former Governor of Rhode Island, and Secretary of the Navy under former President Richard M. Nixon, defeated Democratic wunderkink Richard Lorber in their race. Lorber, who spent over 400,000 in winning his party's nomination against former Governor Philip Noel, was trashed by Chafee in what was perceived as a repudiation of Lorber's nomination tactics.

Connecticut Sen. Lowell P. Weicker defeated woman challenger Gloria Schaffer in retaining his seat. Vermont Republican Sen. Robert T. Stafford also retained his seat, defeating Gov. Thomas P. Salmon in their race. And in Maine, Democratic Sen. Edmund S. Muskie defeated challenger Robert A. G. Monks in keeping his seat.

Four Democratic senators fell by the wayside in trying to retain their seats. Sen. Frank E. Moss of Utah, who disguised himself as a Bowery skid-row bum in investigating Medicare fraud in New York City this summer, was handily defeated by Republican newcomer Orrin G. Hatch. Former astronaut Harrison R. Schmitt, a man who publicly stated that he intended to be the first U.S. Senator ever to walk on the moon, kept his promise as he defeated Democratic incumbent Joseph M. Montoya of New Mexico.

In Indiana, Richard G. Lugar, the former mayor of Indianapolis and once by Richard Nixon as "my favorite mayor," defeated 18-year incumbent Vance Hartke to bring one of his state's seats back into the Republican fold. And, in Wyoming, incumbent Democratic Sen. Gale W. McGee was surprised in his efforts to gain another term as Republican challenger Malcolm Wallop won that race.

Howard Metzenbaum, a man who lost a razor-thin race to Republican incumbent Robert Taft, Jr. six years ago, avenged his prior defeat, toppling the one-term senator in a tightly-contested race.

In Michigan, Donald Riegle, a Republican convert into the Democratic ranks three years ago, stepped out of his Congressional seat and won vacating Sen. Philip Hart's senate seat, beating fellow Congressman Marvin Esch.

In Missouri, former Democratic Gov. Warren Hearnes lost a close race to Republican John C. Danforth. Hearnes, who replaced the late Congressman Jerry Litton — the man who had won his party's nomination hours prior to his death in a plane crash — was a decided underdog to the popular Danforth.

In a race between two Pennsylvania Congressmen, H. John Heinz III, an heir to the Heinz ketchup conglomerate, spent $4 million of his own money in narrowly defeating Democratic William J. Green.

Another upset materialized in Tennessee as favored Republican incumbent William E. Brock III, once considered for the vice-presidential nomination, was soudly thrashed by Democratic newcomer James R. Sasser.

And Independent Sen. Harry F. Byrd beat back a challenge from former Admiral Elmo R. Zumwalt is keeping his Virginia seat.

★ Carter new president

Ford went into the campaign trailing Carter by as much as 33 percentage points in some polls but staged a remarkable comeback which led to the razor-thin decision.

As expected, Ford's strength was concentrated mainly in the traditional GOP strongholds of the mountain and plains states where voters and electoral votes are few. But Ford won New Jersey, Indiana and his home state of Michigan among the larger states.

Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, Ford's vice-presidential candidate, went down to defeat with the President.

Unlike Ford and Nixon, who battled bitterly with the heavily-Democratic Congress for eight years, Carter will have the Senate and House on his side.

Democrats retained control with about the same margin they held in the last two years.

The Democrats had a 63-37 majority in the Senate, including independent Harry Byrd of Virginia who joins them once he is elected.

The lone race still in doubt was in California where incumbent John Tunney was trailing Republican challenger S.I. Hayakawa.

The town of Amherst voted for President-elect Carter by better than a 2-1 margin. Carter received 6,848 votes, Ford 3,254 and Eugene McCarthy, 677.

Belchertown voted 219 to 86 in favor of Carter. McCarthy received eight votes.

Returns from other local cities and towns were unavailable at 4 a.m. today.

In Atlanta a beaming Jimmy Carter, addressed thousands of his supporters early today struck a theme of patriotism and said he hoped his presidency could tap the nation's greatness.

With his wife, Rosalynn, and their children at his side, Carter, "I think it's time to tap the true strength ... in this country, to unify and make it great once again."

Carter received thunderous applause from some 3,000 to 4,000 wellwishers who gathered and waited through the night for the results of one of the closest presidential contests in the nation's history.

He congratulated President Ford, calling him "the toughest and most formidable" opponent he had ever faced.

"Are you proud of this nation?" he asked to the affirmative roar of the crowd. "Do you you think we can unify and bring them back together?"

Referenda lack support

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts voters have shouted "no" to a handgun ban and other controversial referenda, ending months of bitter and expensive campaigning by lobby groups.

A proposal to ban non-returnable beverage containers also appeared headed for rejection, with opponents pulling out to a lead wavering between 53 and 54 per cent.

Rejected by margins of 3 to 1 and 4 to 1 were proposals to permit a graduated state income tax, impose uniform electric rates and establish a public power authority to supplant private utilities.

It was the fourth defeat in 14 years for the grad tax.

Advocates of the handgun ban conceded defeat, pledging to continue their fight despite rejection of the proposal by three of every four voters.

It was the first such vote in the country, and Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley, an advocate, said, "The gun lobby has won one round but the struggle for peace has just began. We have lost this election but we raised the awareness of the public."

An Equal Rights Amendment to the state constitution, providing new legal rights for women, held a comfortable lead, as did an amendment to ease absentee voting rights.

The legislature awaited an advisory on repeal of the blue laws, which prohibit most retail business activity on Sundays. The non-binding referendum held a lead of 53 per cent, but elimination of the blue laws was considered unlikely without a more devisive mandate from voters.

A second advisory, on establishment of an oil refinery and deep water port in Massachusetts, was headed for approval by a comfortable margin.

Amherst went along with the statewide results in rejecting the ban on handguns, and the establishment of the power authority, but indicated strong support for the bottle bill, the grad tax, and uniform electric rates.

Question 11, on the ballot only in this area, was passed, thus recommending opposition to the construction of nuclear fission reactors here.

Late returns last night showed the Amherst breakdown on the referendum items as follows:

—Equal Rights Amendment: yes - 9023; no - 1809
—Grad Income Tax: yes - 6743; no - 3787
—Absentee Vote for Religious Reasons: yes - 8602; no - 2032
—Mass. Power Authority: yes - 3553; no - 6644
—Handgun Ban: yes - 3553; no - 6798
—Bottle Bill: yes - 8846; no - 1833
—Flat Rate Electricity: yes - 6216; no 4579
—Oil refinery-deep water port: yes - 4866; no 5359
—Sunday closing laws: yes - 6867; no 3620
—Pari-mutuel betting: yes - 5950; no - 3656
—Nuclear fission reactors: yes - 6656; no - 3442

The nine ballot questions — including three constitutional amendments, four state laws proposed by initiative petition and the two advisories — were credited for heightening voter interest and spurring a heavy turnout at the polls.

The bottle ban was a major election year issue, with both sides considering Massachusetts a key test state for the proposal now in effect in Oregon and Vermont.

Opponents, including many out-of-state bottling firms, spent more than $1.2 million at last count.

The referendum sought approval for a plan requiring consumers to pay an extra five or 10 cents for soft drinks and beer. But the deposits would be paid back with return of empty containers.

Advocates said the measure would cut beverage costs and reduce litter, but the industry argued it would cost jobs and have no major effect on the environment.

Voters apparently agreed with opponents' economic arguments on the grad tax, uniform electric rates and the power authority.

The proposals were said to be bad for the state's business community and it was predicted approval would mean a loss of jobs.

The graduated income tax would have been based on an unspecified formula, replacing the current flat levy of 5.4 per cent on wages and 10.7 per cent on unearned income such as dividends.

Uniform electric rates, advocates said, would reduce residential electric bills by 20 per cent by eliminating the discount now permitted for industrial and commercial customers.

Opponents argued the extra costs for industry would result in 35,000 layoffs.

The power authority was advocated as an alternative to private utilities, but opponents argued it would result in government bungling.

Conte, Olver retain seats

By MARY BROWN and ROB GALVIN
Collegian Staff

Silvio O. Conte and John W. Olver swept to victories last night over their opponents by two to one margins.

Conte, Republican representative from Pittsfield reclaimed the first district congressional seat he has held for the past 18 years by defeating his Democratic challenger, Edward A. McColgan of Northampton.

Conte, 54, who claimed he waged the hardest campaign since his first in 1958, announced his victory shortly after 11 p.m.

Conte said last night the biggest issue of his campaign had been inflation and unemployment.

In his concession speech, McColgan said he had discussed issues and tried to get them across to the voters, but that he had to be realistic about the campaign and the results.

"We fought a hard fight, but we had to win in some key cities and win them big, and we didn't," he said.

Amherst voted slightly in favor of McColgan, with late tallies showing a McColgan edge in this town of 5293 to 4657 for Conte. However, Conte edged out McColgan in Northampton 477 to 260, and swamped him in Holyoke, 12,424 to 6254.

Olver, Democratic state senator, also swept to a two-to-one victory over his Republican opponent, Walter Mitchell.

Mitchell conceded the election before the final tallies were in from Amherst, Northampton or Easthampton, three of the largest voting areas, when it appeared through early returns that Olver's lead was insurmountable.

Olver said he had received a phone call from Mitchell, who said he could see "the handwriting on the wall," and congratulated Olver on his victory.

The margin of victory was approximately the same that the Olver people had predicted.

Olver mentioned the Five-College area as one in which he had always received strong support.

Late returns from Amherst and Northampton bore out his claim, as the college towns went for Olver solidly over Mitchell.

Amherst showed a late tally of 7345 to 1728 in favor of the incumbent, and Northampton went 428 to 279 for Olver.

In another election, State Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) ran unopposed.

Conte said last night he had worked 12 to 15 hours per day on his campaign since he had returned to the district after Congress adjourned Oct. 2.

The first congressional district, the largest in the state, borders Connecticut to the south, New York to the west, Vermont to the north, and extends as far east as Warwick, Ware and Agawam.

Last night, Conte first traveled to his eastern campaign headquarters in downtown Holyoke, awaiting the local returns there and thanking campaign workers before driving west to Lenox for his victory party.

A member of the House Appropriations Committee, Conte said he has fought expensive, unnecessary programs in the House, and has worked to bring jobs and federal money to the first district.

He also is an advocate of funding alternative energy research.

He said he had campaigned on his congressional record, a tradition he has always kept, and this has appealed to the largely Democratic constituency of the district.

Conte says he sees his role in Congress as "an advocate making sure that we don't have a lot of boondoggle programs." He said he did not think his role would change much if Jimmy Carter were elected president.

Conte said he is satisfied in acting as the representative for the district and feels he can work best for the area by continuing to run for that office.

Calling his job a "challenge," Conte said he has no plans to run for the senate now.

"I find I can do as much in the House as I could in the senate," he said.

Conte said he was disappointed with the Ford showing in Massachusetts, calling him an "honest and decent man."

According to Olver, the most important need in the district is economic development. He said he thought the district should use its available resources to help itself, making use of food production, forest-based industries and the area's vast "people" resource as starting points.

He also mentioned some sort of tax reform, but stressed that this did not mean tax reduction. Rather, he suggested a switch from those who can't afford to pay taxes to those who can.

Olver got off to a fast start last night when the first returns from Greenfield showed a margin of nearly three to two in his favor.

After that vote, other tallies trickled in, slowly increasing his lead over Mitchell.

No upsets apparent as Hampshire goes to polls

By DOTTIE CLARK
Collegian Staff

In several races around the area last night, county commissioners, clerk of courts, governor's council and clerk of Supreme Judicial court were chosen by voters in Hampshire and Franklin counties.

There was no contest in the selection of Hampshire county commissioners, as Paul R. Dineen and Robert J. Garvey, both Democrats, were the only candidates for two positions.

Dineen received 7426 votes from Northampton and 4122 from Amherst.

Garvey registered 8008 from Northampton and 6628 from Amherst.

In Franklin county, five commissioner slots were filled. John F. Bassett, Richard E. Quimette, Margaret H. Herlihy, Edmund F. Smith and Randy Kehler all won.

Bassett recorded 151 votes from Shutesbury, 911 from Deerfield and 184 from Leverett.

Quimette tallied 95 from Shutesbury, 441 from Deerfield and 96 from Leverett.

Herlihy fared a little better, taking 142 in Shutesbury, 1142 in Deerfield, and 236 in Leverett.

Edmund F. Smith received 100 votes in Shutesbury, 570 in Deerfield and 208 in Leverett.

Kehler got 187 from Shutesbury, 602 in Deerfield and 288 in Leverett.

Governor's Council from the first district was filled by John Britland, while clerk of courts for Hampshire county was won by Salvatore A. Polito, with 9682 votes from Northampton and 5963 from Amherst.

The Franklin county clerks of courts (there are two slots) were won by Thomas W. Merrigan with 195 from Shutesbury, 1234 from Deerfield and 270 in Leverett; and John R. Mosely, who captured 195 of the votes from Shutesbury, 877 from Deerfield and 311 from Leverett.

In the only other open position in this area, John E. Power was chosen clerk of the Supreme Judicial Court.

Conferences mean money, jobs for campus

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Collegian Staff

On Peter James' office calendar the weeks are often marked with the abbreviations of large organizations like NASA and AETNA and with many other lesser-known groups.

What the marks stand for are future conferences. What the conferences mean for UMass are money, jobs and a year-round use of the campus.

James is the chief programmer for the Conference Service office, which operates to bring conferences to UMass each year. Last year his office generated approximately $1.5 million for the campus and area businesses by bringing groups to the UMass campus, according to figures supplied by the office.

The Conference Service office is "still in a developing stage," said James, a recent law school graduate.

The office solicits and helps plan conferences at the University Conferences, he said, which resulting in increased revenues to campus agencies and help reduce summer layoffs of physical plant employes and other campus workers.

The conferences make money for the Campus Center building, the dining commons and the dormitories by "maximizing" their use. Room rent from the CC hotel and dormitories and money spent in the coffee shop and dining commons are returned to these areas, which in turn benefit from the revenues, James said.

"If I do my job the best I can, the student (CC) fee goes down," he said.

James said he doesn't know what the budget is for the 13 person office. His immediate superior, Don Witkoski, said that the budget is "not at a point of finality" due to a recent reorganization of the office.

However, while the office was operated by the Division of Continuing Education (DCE), its annual budget was approximately $75,000, and compared to them, the staff has grown "huge," James said.

Removed from the jurisdiction of the DCE, the Conference Service office has been transferred to the control of the office of the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs and under the office to the three co-directors of the Campus Center.

Dean of Students William F. Field who is one of the CC co-directors, said of the Conference Service office's work, "Students are on campus 30 weeks out of the week. We should make the place run 52 weeks.

John Shea, who is business manager of the Division of Continuing Education, controlled the financial aspect of the Conference Service office until last spring. He estimates the various conferences spend "a million" on campus on hotel rooms, the catering department and such services as the print shop and University Store.

He added that 65 per cent of the conference brought to UMass in fiscal 1974 were sponsored by the university or student groups.

Anet K. Dunne, the marketing director of the Conference Service office, said the recruiting campaign she uses to attract groups to UMass is primarily directed at "educational and community service groups."

The design of the Campus Center building, which the Conference Service office advertises as conducive to workshops and seminars, and the area's educational facilities are two of the features that attracts groups to UMass, Dunne said.

"Our major emphasis is on the academic. We strive for conferences that serve an academic or community service purpose. This is not a place for partying," she added.

James said his office has "wide latitude" in determing whether a group fulfills the academic or service qualifications the office sets down.

OHAG funds radio station

Scott Wieler was elected treasurer of the Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) at the Hill's meeting last night.

At last week's meeting, OHAG members had been unable to obtain the quorum needed to elect a treasurer, so the government had operated without that officer for a week.

An Orchard Hill radio station will finally move towards becoming a reality. OHAG members voted to approve a motion allocating money to an area radio station. $350 was the amount approved by the government to get the project off of the ground.

ORCHARD HILL

In other action, OHAG moved to send a proposed Orchard Hill literature course to the financial committee for consideration. "The Image of Gays in Modern Literature" was the title of the course in question, and would cost an estimated $550. A move to support this course would also support more OHAG deficit spending.

African psychologist invited by SW assembly

By BARBARA HOFFMAN

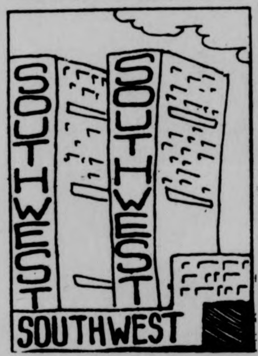
A psychologist-sociologist from Mozambique will speak in Southwest this month on Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's South African policy, as the result of last night's marginal decision by Southwest Assembly (SWA) to finance this and another presentation on U.S. imperialism.



SWA voted to allocate $450 in honorariums, transportation, receptions and advertising for the project by a vote of 12-11, with Treasurer Mark Gardner abstaining.

According to Tom Mullins, one of the ten members of the Southwest course "Imperialism: Theory and Practice" who are sponsoring the bill, another speaker is being sought for a December presentation. Dr. William Minter of Mozambique has agreed to speak sometime in November, Mullins said.

After some discussion, SWA stipulated that half the allocation be refunded if another speaker is not found.

Matthew Spear of James House questioned the $180 transportation cost for the speakers, based on round-trip air and taxi fare from New York. "Can't you find someone in the area to speak?" Spear asked. Mullins said that they had considered that possibility but could not find anyone.

The presentations will be free to all members of the Five College Community and are tentatively slated to be held in Hampden Student Center.

In other business last night, SWA voted unanimously to allocate $220 towards a film series in MacKimmie on social oppression. "The Women's Film", "No Vietnamese Ever Called Me Nigger's and "Growing Up Female" will be shown for all area residents free of charge. Dates and times will be announced.

Civil Liberties chairperson Bonnie Ward announced that all dorms requesting SWA funds must submit a list of its programs and workshops in "combatting racism and sexism" along with its request.

Chorale open to dedicated vacalists

By DEBORAH GOODWIN
Collegian Staff

For students who love music enough to dedicate six and one half hours a week to it, the UMass Chorale is available.

The Chorale was formed and directed by Dr. Richard DuBois as a release from tension and to make music available to all who want it.

The chorale is a one credit course, but the students involved find it more of a social function.

Ten per cent of the Chorale's 55 members are music majors. Try-outs are held in September but some will be held at the end of January. No preparing is necessary other than to be ready to go on stage and sing.

The applicants are judged on their vocal range and if the voice has a solo-type quality or if it would blend well in a chorus. Those with marginal voices but enthusiasm will be taken in most cases, said DuBois.

DuBois said he likes to keep the group down to 60 but says it varies with the agenda for the season. Auditions are made through DuBois or the Music Department.

The Chorale's interest lies in religious and spiritual music on the deep and light side, said DuBois.

"The music is rough the first several weeks but after getting to know the inner melodies, it's a lot of fun," according to J. Mark Prybyl, the Chorale manager.

Louisa Teixeira, publicity manager, feels that the lack of publicity and the fact that their major concerts occur during finals contributes to the average size audiences of about 500 people.

This semester the group will be performing at the Sunday service at Northampton's College Church on Nov. 21. The chorus will be singing for the Boston Ballet's production of the Nutcracker Suite on Dec. 5th and 6th.

Their main concert will be "Laud to the Nativity" by Respighi. Three guest soloist will perform. The Chamber Singers, a group of nine singers, will perform under DuBois' direction.

A summer tour of the Midwest is a goal of the group. In the past they have made summer tours of Europe.

Waldman concert planned by Commuter Collective

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

The Commuter Collective made plans at a meeting last night for a December 3rd concert by Wendy Waldman.

The Collective also voted to send a letter of support to the Distinguished Visitors Program, which will try to get Juan Mari Bras, the Secretary General of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, to speak on campus within the next two months.

The director of the Collective-sponsored publicity center reported on the center's activities. The publicity center, according to Jose Tolson, is geared towards the political community.

Recently, the center was provided spaca for "an office for racial understanding" which is located in Moore House, a Southwest dormitory. "It's been going well;" said Tolson, "I'm satisfied with the work we did in arranging this office, and the people who we've talked with like what we're doing, too."

"The initial objective of the publicity center's effort," said Tolson, "is to inform people what is going on around campus on any day of the month. Our specific aim is toward the centralization of information in the political community. In this respect, we have established good rapport with some radio stations in the area."

Tolson spoke of the plan for a silkscreen workshop to teach people the partial construction of posters by silkscreen. Such posters include those advertising the movies which the Collective sponsors every Tuesday and Thursday nights in Herter Hall auditorium.

The petition for Amherst rent control currently has close to 1,000 signatures. Another vote on the issue will take place at a town meeting on November 16th, and the tenants committee hopes to get a van from the Student Senate to take people to the polls. It is estimated that the rent control issue will need a 20 per cent affirmative vote in order for it to pass.

New vets education bill brings increases, changes

Veterans attending school under the G.I. Bill will soon be receiving an 8 per cent increase in their monthly paychecks, amounting to a $22 increase on a maximum full-time monthly allowance of $270.

Bill S969 signed by President Ford on Oct. 15 includes many items that will affect the student veteran.

According to the Veteran Affairs office at Whitmore the increase scheduled to appear on the November checks is retroactive to Oct. 1.

The bill includes one major change that could cause problems, according to Arthur Hilson, Director of Veterans Affairs at UMass. As a reaction to abuse by a small percentage of veterans, paychecks will not be mailed until the end of the month. This policy will begin June 1, 1977.

Hilson feels this could put some students in a tough financial spot at the beginning of each semester. Many students depend on their first check to pay university fees. Non-payment of fees means that a student can not register.

Hilson has contacted the bursar's office to see if some type of deferral program can be worked out for students who cannot pay their fees on time.

Bursar Robert Mishol said that he can meet the student halfway. "Our policy will be to expect a student to come prepared to pay at least the university fees. For those who cannot pay their rent and board by the beginning of the semester, we can arrange a two-part payment, half from the first check, and half from the second," he said.

Other arrangements may have to be made for the out of state veterans who have a higher tuition to pay along with their fees.

According to Jerry Morton, coordinator of the veterans Coalition, almost every vet will be affected, not only because it will be difficult or impossible to pay fees on time but because the money will be needed for living expenses.

Graduate students attending school will receive an extension on entitlements. The basic entitlement is now 45 months, as compared to the previous limit of 36 months.

The bill also will raise the limits on educational loans. A veteran now can borrow up to $1500 per academic year. The limit was $600 previously.

The bill also calls for the termination of the G.I. bill for education. All those entering the service after Dec. 31, 1976 will not be eligible for the benefits. This does not affect those who are already in school under the G.I. bill or those presently in the service.

'Mr. Looney Tunes' to visit

Bugs Bunny, Daffy Duck, Porky Pig and Speedy Gonzales will all be guests of the Distinguished Visitors Program tomorrow night — but the only person on stage will be Mel Blanc.

Blanc, who is most famous for the voice characterizations he created for Warner Brothers' cartoons, was raised in Portland, Oregon. He worked in radio there before moving to San Francisco and NBC, and then on to Los Angeles.

In radio's heyday, Blanc starred with such performers as Jack Benny and Abbott and Costello.

After he had left his legacy of "Loony Tunes" characters, he moved into television and gave birth to Barney Rubble of "The Flintstones." He has also made several radio advertisements.

Blanc will be showing samples of his most famous cartoons tomorrow night. He is scheduled to appear at 8 p.m. at the Campus Center Auditorium.

Turner acquitted on S. West bottle throwing charge

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Brian G. Turner was found innocent of throwing a glass object from the 13th floor of George Washington Dormitory yesterday at his trial in Northampton District Court.

Judge A.J. Morse ruled that Turner, a UMass student, was innocent because his guilt had not been proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

Turner, an 18-year-old freshperson chemical engineering major from South Yarmouth, Mass., was arrested on October 11th, by Officer Eliot Kabatchnick shortly after a bottle landed in the parking lot adjacent to the dormitory.

Last week prosecuting attorney Frank Collins rested the Commonwealth's case after the court heard the testimony of Officer Richard Besse. Besse had confirmed statements of officer Kabatchnick on what occurred when the two officers went to room 1309 to arrest Turner.

Yesterday's hearing began at 2:10 p.m. when two additional witnesses were sworn in and Turner took the stand in his own defense.

On October 12, the day of the incident, Turner said he returned from the dining commons at approximately 6:15, and started to study when he noticed it was cold in the room. The small window on his right was swinging on its hinges as the frame had been dented in.

Turner said he tried to fix the window by putting in the screws. He managed to put one in by hand but the second had a strange-shaped head which required a screwdriver.

While working on the window, Turner said he heard a sound below like a lightbulb popping.

Even though the window wasn't fixed, Turner shut it and began to put on the screen, leaning on the windowsill to get the screen in place.

At 6:35 Turner admitted into his room Officers Kabatchnick and Besse, and John Chodosh, Washington upper head of residence and was arrested shortly after.

Turner said that he had seen nothing come from either below or above and only heard one object strike.

Defense attorney William St. James asked Turner if he had thrown anything out of the window. "No, I didn't," Turner said.

The prosecution accused Turner of changing his testimony but Turner repeatedly denied doing so.

Among the witnesses presented by the defense was Thomas Lonergan, who lived in Turner's room from January to May of 1974. According to Lonergan, even then the window would blow off its runner in a strong wind. Garret Moynihan testified that after he had put up bail for Turner and had come back to the dorm, he heard four glass objects fall from the tower, while Turner was being held in the Amherst police station.

Photographs taken by William C. Turner, the defendant's brother, were stricken from testimony as prosecution claimed they were not fair representation of the view that Institution Protection Man (IPM) James Morton had as he scanned the building the night of the incident.

After an additional character witness, St. James rested the case for the defense.

Chodosh was called to the stand as the sole rebuttal witness for the prosecution.

Asked what he had heard when he accompanied the two officers to Turner's room, Chodosh testified that Turner said that he "saw something from below, no above, no, I heard a pop.' "

St. James repeatedly asked Chodosh if he had read those words somewhere else and if they were really what was said on the night of Turner's arrest.

Chodosh said that he hadn't read those exact words elsewhere and said that other objects were thrown while Turner was still in jail.

St. James told the judge in summation that Turner's unease did not indicate guilt, his nervousness was easily explained as two uniformed officers and the head of residence were in his room, that other objects were thrown all weekend before and after, that the window was indeed broken as Turner had said, and had been broken for years, and that I.P.M. Morton's testimony was a mistake.

Prosecution tried to impress upon the judge that Turner saw I.P.M. Morton giving out a ticket and decided to throw a missle at him. "Why did Turner identify the object in direct testimony as a bottle? The only way he could have know that is if he saw the object come from above or had dispatched the object himself," Collins said.

Collins said that Turner had changed his testimony because he knew this week that Chodosh would refute his previous testimony and that he should be found guilty.

Cleared of all charges, Turner said he plans to continue his education at UMass.

Trustees to vote on bargaining

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

Collective bargaining will be voted on at a meeting of the Board of Trustees today at 2 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The Board will discuss the policy of collective bargaining and may take a position on the vote concerning faculty unionization to be held in December.

The motion to be voted on states, "That the Board of Trustees continued to endorse as effective governance arrangements the existing organization and processes of the University so as to maintain the traditional relationship between the Faculty Administration and the Board of Trustees."

The Board will also discuss the 1978 capital outlay requests, which include maintenance and dormitories, governance of the UMass Medical School at Worcester, Student Services at the Boston campus, budgeting and finance, and the assessment of buildings on this campus.

PLAINS, Ga.: Democratic Presidential candidate Jimmy Carter and his wife Rosalynn walk to the polling place yesterday to cast their vote. Casting the 11th ballot of the day in his Georgia home town, he said he was confident of taking over the White House. (UPI)

Large voter turnout

[UPI] — Americans, as if determined to deny forecasts of political apathy, turned out to vote in surprising numbers from coast to coast yesterday.

Generally good weather, although sometimes chilly, greeted voters as they lined up at polling places in early voting.

In little Litchfield, N.H., the turnout was so unexpectedly heavy that election officials had to put up four extra voting booths.

Among the major states:

—Larger counties in California showed early voting was higher than expected in some districts. San Francisco officials said voting was "hectic" in the first hours.

—Election officials forecast a 75 per cent turnout of 2 million registered voters in New York City, and early turnouts were moderate to heavy in suburbs and upstate.

—Michigan, President Ford's home state, expected a record turnout of 3.7 million voters, 72 per cent of those registered.

—In Jimmy Carter's home state, Georgia, lines were so long in early voting at some Atlanta precincts that would-be voters gave up in disgust after waits of up to 90 minutes and said they would come back later.

Voting through the entire Southland, both in Democratic and Republican areas, was heavy; weather was good.

Typical election official comments:

—"All of the polling places seem to be needing more of the voting services" said Mrs. Earl James, voting commissioner of St. Louis county, Mo.

—Merle Kopel, auditor of Linn County, Iowa: "Turnout here is fantastic."

—A precinct worker in Columbus, Ohio: "I have worked a lot of elections and I have never seen so many voters come out so early."

—"We've got so many people here we don't know what to do."

—a poll worker in Auburn, Ala.

Alfred Hostede, campaign manager for Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, said voting in Minnesota was "fantastically high," considered a good sign for the state's other senator, Walter Mondale, the Democratic vice-presidential candidate.

Kansas, home state of GOP vice presidential candidate Sen. Robert Dole, estimated 80 per cent of the voters would turn out.

Ohio had a very heavy early turnout from the industrial cities to the farm communities. A massive voter drive by organized labor apparently helped.

Traditional voting in Massachusetts

BOSTON [AP] — Voting for Democrats is a tradition in presidential politics in Massachusetts going back to the 1920s, and neither supporters of Jimmy Carter nor President Ford seriously expected that to change yesterday.

In the only state to vote for Democrat George McGovern four years ago, a state with a miniscule Republican Party, the race has never even appeared close.

"I think it's a long shot for us," conceded Betsy Scofield, press director of the Ford campaign in Massachusetts.

Her counterpart in the Carter campaign, Ed Jesser, said he thought his candidate would do "better than McGovern and not as well as John Kennedy." That would give the former Georgia governor between 55 and 60 per cent of the vote.

Except for Dwight D. Eisenhower's landslides in the 1950s, Bay Staters have voted Democratic in every presidential race since 1924, when they went with Calvin Coolidge, a former Massachusetts governor.

During this campaign, neither candidate paid much attention to Massachusetts. The Democrats seemed to take it for granted while the Republicans wrote it off.

Since his nomination, Carter spent a single four-hour afternoon campaigning in the Boston area, while Ford did not appear in the state at all.

Both efforts were relatively low-budget. The Carter campaign spent $88,000 in Massachusetts, while Ford supporters invested $33,000. The Democrats opened 93 local campaign offices, compared with 63 for the Republicans.

Both parties campaigned with stand-ins. Robert Doyle, the vice presidential nominee, and Commerce Secretary Elliot Richardson stumped for the Republican side, along with Ford's son, Michael, and his brother, Jim.

Carter campaigners included the candidate's wife, Rosalynn, his daughter-in-law, Julie Carter, and Joan Mondale, wife of the vice presidential nominee.

McCarthy lost hope for White House seat

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Independent presidential candidate Eugene McCarthy, conceding he was unlikely to win any electoral votes, planned to return to Washington yesterday night to await the election results.

McCarthy was on the ballot in 29 states and was a write-in candidate in California.

McCarthy, who cast his absentee Minnesota ballot last week, made a final campaign appearance at the UCLA rally Monday. He declined to say whether he preferred President Ford or Jimmy Carter.

But he conceded he was unlikely to get any electoral votes, adding that if he received 5 per cent of the popular vote he would interpret that as a sign of dissatisfaction with the major parties.

McCarthy said the Democratic and Republican parties had "conspired" to make it impossible for any minor party candidate to run a successful campaign for president.

One means, he said, was using provisions of the Federal Election Commission to deny funding to third party candidates.

Reagans' plans resting in 'limbo'

PACIFIC PALISADES, Calif. [UPI] — Ronald Reagan, who was narrowly defeated at the Republican convention by President Ford, said yesterday that he "wouldn't rule out and wouldn't rule in" another try for the presidency four years from now.

Reagan, 65, dressed in slacks and a yellow t-shirt and looking tanned and relaxed, voted with his wife, Nancy, in the late morning at a private residence in this Los Angeles suburb.

The former California governor was asked what effect there might be on his plans in the near future if Ford should lose to Jimmy Carter.

"None at all," he said.

"Regardless of the outcome I intend to go out on a campaign to use the Republican platform to reach a new majority out there for the GOP."

When asked if he was disappointed or bitter than he did not have the opportunity yesterday to vote for himself, the former actor replied, "No, I'm at peace with the world."

Reagan declined to make any prediction on the outcome of the presidential race. He said he was not particularly surprised at how Carter had lost the tremendous lead he held in the polls at the time of the Democratic convention.

Reagan said that once Carter was singled out as the candidate, his philosophy appeared to be very close to that of Sen. George McGovern, the Democratic candidate in 1972.

Nixons send absentees

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. [UPI] — Richard Nixon and his wife, Pat, who is recovering from a stroke, cast absentee ballots in advance of yesterday's election, apparently in anticipation of a brief desert vacation which was called off.

"The Nixons voted absentee ballot," retired Col. Jack Brennan, Nixon's aide, told waiting news personnel. "The Nixons were going to go to the desert for three days but the plans fell through."

He did not say where on the desert the Nixons had planned to go, nor why the plans were canceled.

The Nixons have been frequent guests at the estate near Palm Springs of Walter Annenberg, former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain.

Mrs. Nixon suffered a stroke at their Casa Pacifica estate July 7 and was hospitalized for more than two weeks.

Asked how she was doing in her recovery, Brennan shrugged and said, "It's a slow process but she's doing well."

Brennan said one of Nixon's daughters, Tricia Cox, was visiting her parents.

Small town voters

Making the 'big' decision

HARPERS' FERRY, W. Va. [UPI] — When it came time to vote, June Brady walked over to the Camp Hill United Methodist Church with her friend, Marietta Keeler, and said she couldn't sleep all night, trying to decide between President Ford and Jimmy Carter.

"I thought pro and con," said Mrs. Brady, who sells antiques. "First I thought this way, and then I thought that way."

Mrs. Keeler tried to persuade her to vote for Carter, but it wasn't until Mrs. Brady actually had her ballot in her hand that she reached a decision. She voted for Carter.

In this little town, where nearly every house has a front porch and nearly every front porch has a rocker, people took the election seriously.

The younger people drove up to the old church, the only polling place in town, voted and drove away, to jobs in the bigger towns of Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia — all of which converge near here — or even to Washington, 50 miles down the Potomac River.

The older people stayed after voting and talked outside the church.

The smell of burning leaves was in the air. Pumpkins left over from Halloween sat on some front porches. In front of the liquor store was a sign, "No loafing — Order of the Mayor."

"I'll tell you" said Mrs. Brady to her friend, still uncertain about whether she voted right, "we're either going to have total war or total depression. And I'll take depression."

"Well," replied Mrs. Keeler, arguing economics, "a roll of paper towels that we need in our kitchens went up a dime last week." Her voice rose in exasperation. "And a little can of mushrooms — up a dime!"

Mrs. Keeler said the Republicans bring on hard times, but Mrs. Brady said the Democrats bring on wars. Mrs. Keeler said that wasn't necessarily so.

"Look at Eisenhower," she said. She didn't say what she meant about Dwight Eisenhower who started no war during his administration, but Mrs. Brady didn't ask.

Like almost everything in town, the church where the people of Harpers' Ferry vote is old. It served as a hospital in the Civil War. Abolitionist John Brown raided the federal arsenal here and was hanged.

Conflict high during vote in Puerto Rico

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico [UPI] — One and a half million Puerto Ricans voted yesterday in the "dirtiest election" in the island's history in which one youth was beaten to death and a mayor was shot in the final hours of the campaign.

Campaigning in what Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon called "the dirtiest election in Puerto Rico's history" was in full swing until the police closed at 2 p.m., 1 p.m. EST, with partisans of the rival parties giving radio and television appeals up to the last moment.

Under Puerto Rico's lock-in voting system, voters gather at polling stations under a 2 p.m. deadline while guards carrying clubs keep order permitting no one to leave until the ballots are counted and making sure they coincide with the number of persons inside.

An expected 85 per cent of Puerto Rico's 1.7 million registered voters were expected to vote for the governor, the bicameral legislature, and the mayors of 78 municipalities.

In pre-voting violence, a young gunmen shot the mayor of the town of Humacao in eastern Puerto Rico in the leg after he stopped his decorated campaign truck Monday night to help him fix a flat tire, police said. Juan M. Higgins, running for re-election as an independent, was hospitalized with a superficial wound.

In Carolina, a suburb of San Juan, one man died and two were injured when a carload of youths brawled with supporters of the pro-Commonwealth Popular Democratic party.

Hernandez, leader of the pro-Commonwealth party, is fighting for another four-year term against the pro-statehood New Progressives, led by Carlos Romero Barcelo, the mayor of San Juan.

Wiretap record controversial, enter U.S. Appeals Court

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The U.S. Court of Appeals yesterday set out to decide whether the President can prevent Congress from seeing national security wiretap records because of the risk it might lead to public disclosure.

President Ford called this risk "unacceptable" and a lower court enjoined the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. from turning over FBI wiretap request letters being subpoenaed by the House oversight subcommittee.

Chairman John E. Moss, D-Calif., in appealing that decision, made it clear he would carry his confrontation with executive power to the Supreme Court, if necessary. The appeals court took the case under advisement after a hearing.

E. Barrett Prettyman Jr., subcommittee attorney, said allowing the President this "extraordinary" executive privilege would "deter the right of Congress to check against abuses through its oversight over executive functions."

"The same principle could be applied on any type of activity such as housebreaking, opening the mail and the like," Prettyman said.

In this case, he said, the subcommittee only wants to be sure they are not domestic wiretaps conducted under the "guise" of national security surveillance to avoid having to get court warrants.

Assistant Attorney General Rex E. Lee argued the constitution gives the President the final word.

Lee said every House member would have a legal access to the secret records and the subcommittee could decide by majority vote to release the records unless the full House intervened.

Prettyman said subcommittee staff members with security clearances routinely deal with CIA and FBI secrets and are now keeping over 500,000 sensitive documents in vaults. He said there has never been a single leak.

Asteroid too close for comfort

CAMBRIDGE [AP] — It was a close call, in astronomical terms. An asteroid missed the earth by 750,000 miles on Oct. 20.

A hit would have meant a catastrophe of unprecedented magnitude.

The asteroid, now dubbed 1976 UA, was first seen by a student at the Mt. Palomar Observatory in California, William Sebok, on October 25.

Since his work involved other things, he called it to the attention of researcher Eleanor Helin, said Brian Marsden, director of the Central Bureau of Astronomical Telegrams at the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory here.

"The minimum distance from earth was only three fourths of a million miles," Marsden said. The only minor asteroid to come close was Hermes at 500,000 miles in 1937.

The new asteroid was "very small and extremely faint. It was probably only a few hundred yards across," Marsden said yesterday.

Friendship card

BEVERLY HILLS [AP] — A man with no friends has a tough time getting a library card. Ask John Dean.

When Dean moved here last year and applied for a library card, he listed no personal references. The clerk told Dean he must list a reference.

Dean was unable to come up with the name of a friend.

"I don't have a friend. If I ever get one, I'll come back," the librarian quoted Dean as saying as he tore up the form.

After he left, a librarian who thought she recognized Dean pieced the application back together. The name on it was John Wesley Dean III, one of the central figures in the Watergate scandals.

The library said John Wesley Dean III later returned with the name of a friend and was issued a library card.

Safe and sound

FRESNO, Calif. [AP] — Marlene Somsak is safely back in school here, a survivor of the New York experience.

Ms. Somsak, 23, a journalism major at Fresno State University, was among 28 interns who worked at Seventeen magazine and lived in a dormitory at New York University.

Six hours after she arrived in New York, a pickpocket lifted her wallet — but that was just the beginning.

"Then a bomb was found in my dormitory and I watched the police defuse it. A student arsonist living in the dormitory set several fires.

"A man exposed himself to me on the subway, and Seventeen sent my paycheck to California by mistake. All this within two weeks."

Voting hassles

NEW YORK [UPI] — Lee Radziwill, sister of former First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, had more trouble recording her vote yesterday than she did deciding on which candidates to support.

After making her selections on a voting machine, Miss Radziwill forgot to push the lever that records the votes and opens the curtain.

She pushed her way out of the still-curtained booth and was told by polling officials to go back in and turn the lever or her ballot would be invalid.

She did so, then came out a second time, grinning and remarking sheepishly, "I hope that counted."

Hearst hearing set

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — A federal judge yesterday set a hearing for Nov. 12 on Patricia Hearst's request for a new trial and for release on bail.

Miss Hearst is serving a seven-year federal sentence for bank robbery.

U.S. District Judge William Orrick Jr. set the hearing for motions by her attorneys for a new trial and for her release on bail while an appeal of her conviction is made.

The 22-year-old newspaper heiress was found guilty last spring of the armed robbery of the Hibernia bank in San Francisco, along with members of the Symbionese Liberation Army, a terrorist organization which kidnapped her in February 1974.

BOSTON: Rhonda Friedman of Boston studies election laws posted at the Prince School in Boston's Back Bay as she waited to vote yesterday. Hundreds of voters waiting to cast their ballots formed a line that weaved through the building and onto the sidewalks. The Secretary of State's office predicted an 80 to 90 per cent voter turnout. Helms resigns post as U.S. ambassador

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Administration sources said yesterday that Richard Helms, the man who headed the Central Intelligence Agency during the Watergate affair, has submitted his resignation as U.S. ambassador to Iran.

Helms had wanted the resignation to be made public before the results of the presidential election were announced, sources said, but the White House staff was involved in the final flurry of the campaign and the press office never got around to putting out the announcement.

The sources said Helms, who is 64 and has been in public service for over 30 years, timed his resignation as "his way of divorcing himself from politics."

It is customary for presidential appointees, including ambassadors, to submit their resignations automatically when a new administration takes over in Washington.

Helms served as director of the CIA from 1966 to 1973, when he was named ambassador by President Nixon.

He spent much of the past year in Washington waiting to testify before various congressional committees about the CIA's role in Watergate and the unauthorized surveillance of American citizens.

During his ambassadorial confirmation hearings in February 1973, Helms told the Foreign Relations committee he had no knowledge of CIA involvement in domestic U.S. affairs and he would have refused to obey if ordered to involve the agency in such assignments.

When the White House tapes indicated that Helms was aware of some CIA activities, such as technical assistance for the White House "plumbers" and surveillance of anti-war groups, some senators wanted Helms prosecuted for perjury or contempt of Congress.

Senate aides said the Helms case was turned over to the Justice Department but no indictment was ever returned.

Employers must accommodate workers' religious convictions

WASHINGTON [AP] — An employe's religious principles — even those against working on certain days of the week — must normally be accommodated by an employer, the Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

The justices split 4-4 in deciding the case of a Kentucky man fired from his job because his religious convictions would not allow him to work on Saturdays. Justice John Paul Stevens took no part in the court's deliberations.

An even split in the high court automatically upholds the ruling of a lower court. In this case, the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the Parker Seal Co. was guilty of religious discrimination.

The court's decision, as is usual with 4-4 votes, was not accompanied by a written decision. Stevens' office wouldn't discuss why the justic disqualified himself from the case, but Philip B. Kurland, an attorney representing intervenors in the case, is an associate attorney for Stevens' former law firm.

Paul Cummins was fired from his job as a supervisor at Parker Seal's rubber seal plant in Berea, Ky., in 1971. He had joined the Wide World Church of God in 1970, and the company accommodated his scruples against working on Saturdays for 14 months.

Company officials said they decided to fire Cummins because his refusal to work on those Saturdays when the plant was in operation had caused morale problems among other supervisors and workers, and had cost Parker Seal considerable overtime expenses.

Cummins had worked for the company since 1958, being promoted to a supervisor's job in 1965.

When joining the World Wide Church, he told his employer that he would not be able to work from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday.

A district court ruled that Parker Seal acted lawfully in firing Cummins, but the appeals court reversed that decision. It ruled that the federal Civil Rights Act requires "a reasonable accommodation of an employe's religious practices." the law, the appeals court noted, makes exceptions for an employer who can prove it is "unable to reasonably accommodate" the employe's religious beliefs. The court of appeals, on a 2-1 vote, decided that Parker Seal had not proven that it was not able to accommodate Cummins.

CC not source of frustration

To the Editor:

So the merchants of downtown Amherst are angered by on-campus free enterprise. Being disatisfied with most of the pie, they want it all.

They know the true source of their frustration: the nearby proliferation of shopping centers, both large and small. The C.C. bookstore does not constitute "unfair competition". After comparison shopping, a penny-wise Mr. Condo would have to choose Hadley as his source of toothpaste.

Businessman Wilkins cites a "tremendous proportion" of students who stay on campus. If this is so, then we have something terribly right with our University. Why should taxpayers, represented by UMass policy feel compelled to shoo potential customers in the direction of Amherst emporiums?

A tragedy prevented

To the Editor:

Tuesday at approximately 12:15 p.m. Paul Robbins, a UMass student living at Hamlin, came within inches of injury. Already in deep despondency due to the lack of mail received recently, todays empty mailbox was too much for his simple mind. Mr. Robbins then climbed onto the ledge outside of the first floor hall window, and threatened to jump.

Fortunately, through the efforts of a sympathetic crowd and a local resident posing as a religious figure, Paul was convinced to return to the safety of the building. He has since said that "At the time it was a mistake on my part. I understand it was a very rash decision, and it won't happen again."

Paul wishes to express his thanks to those who helped prevent a tragedy, especially the girls from Leach and all his good friends on the first floor of Hamlin.

There's more to Pleasant St.

To the Editor:

I never thought that I'd be defending Pleasant Street.

Mr. Swanson's approach to the dynamics of Northampton is lacking in depth. Pleasant Street is as important to the city's economy during the day as it is during the evening. It is the second most important "downtown" street in the city. There exists in this pedestrian environment, between "Sheehan's" and "Hugo's", not only the new, young enterpreneurs, "bringing customers ... in the daylight hours," but a score of other pre-happy-hour establishments.

The next time Peter Swanson buys a flea collar for his cat, he should venture beyond Hugo's and the Imperial Bakery and explore Pleasant Street's other offerings. From Tepper's five and dime, an institution as venerable as Sheehan's Beach, to the tombstone dealer next to the City Cafe a range of goods and services that would adequately allow a person to travel comfortably through life and step, monumentally, into the hereafter. Pleasant Street shoppers can have their shoes fixed, bicycles repaired, purchase musical instruments, select auto, electronic, hardware, or lumber needs from the greatest concentration of dealers in the city, get their drugs from either the liquor store or the pharmacy-post office substation, collect unemployment "insurance", buy auto insurance, cover themselves with awnings, fix their transmissions, or take a ride in either a hang glider or an ambulance.

Pleasant is, and always has been, a street of and for people. It embodies the essence of a city. More akin to Springsteen's "runaway American dream" is King, not Pleasant Street. King Street is the antithesis of its downtown cousin. It spreads in its miles cancerous chain stores, burger joints, shopping center parking lots, car dealers, and other expressions of our contemporary asphalt chaos.

If the cathartic nocturnal exuberance of Pleasant Street is too much for Mr. Swanson, if the sight of the dead-ended, broken-hearted, non-English speaking, unemployed is more than he can bear, more than he can accept, I suggest to him Columbia, Md. It is a new, model city, devoid of life, lacking in a saloon or saloons to imbibe in. It is the modern day equivalent of George Pullman's fiasco. This plastic city's "commercial district" [shopping mall] can be locked with a single key!

For me, I'd rather face the beaten faces of the winos, of the broken-hearted, of the unemployed as they walk Pleasant Street by day, and by night. They remind me of the failings of our society and the work in it to be done. The one thing that Pleasant Street doesn't lack is life. It is life.

More towing... besides cars

By BARNABY KALAN

The other day a letter to the editor about Amherst Towing and campus police caught my eye. The author made the point, among others, that with an initial investment of $12,000 for a wrecker, an operator can soon be grossing at least $50 per hour providing he tows away three or more cars in that time.

Now that sounds fine, but $12,000 is a pretty big investment. Luckily, being close to an academic environment, these people should pick up plenty of ideas on how to maximize a hooker's... er, hook operator's profit.

Right now two truck drivers must wait around for a campus patrol nan to ticket a car before towing it away. Now that's a waste. Wouldn't it be better if the truck drivers could hand out their own tickets, thus freeing our gallant policemen to track down campus criminals?

We mustn't forget ecology. The towers could easily hand out plastic, reusable parking tickets, marked only with a grease pen. All they'd have to do is ticket the car, wait ten minutes, wipe it off and tow the car away. Quite a savings in manpower and materials.

I still think part of the reason these two truck drivers have not escaped their $50 per hour profit range is due to narrow thinking. They have concerned themselves only with towing cars. There is a world of profit out there just waiting to be plucked... or hooked.

How many of us have been needlessly harrasses and pestered by stray dogs and cats around campus? In the dining commons. In the classrooms. I say tow'm away. There's no need for Amherst for pay a full-time dog catcher when Amherst Towing spends so much time around campus.

Bottle and beer cans could easily be towed away in huge plastic sacks resembling automobiles — quite an improvement to the environment.

The letter to the editor pointed out that these two truck operators spent a considerable amount of time trying to break into locked cars and shift them into neutral. My goodness, now we all know a car has to be in neutral to be towed. They're only trying to protect our car from damage, why give'm a hard time?

I suggest we all leave our cars unlocked when we park them. Better still, leave the windows or doors wide open so these poor guys won't have to waste their valuable time smashing through your window or tearing up the molding of your door with knives, forks or spoons. After all, broken glass can be dangerous — tow trucks get flat tires too.

You inconsiderate students who are in the habit of parking your car in no-parking zones should at least have the common courtesy to send a duplicate set of keys to Amherst Towing. They could have their secretary drive the car back to the pound and not waste a wrecker on these hardened parking offenders.

Which leads to my final proposal. I can see in the near future — and with the help of business and computer experts here at the University — a wonderfully organized and efficient method for removing cars from campus without even having to invest $12,000 for a wrecker.

Every student would be required to give a duplicate set of keys to Amherst Towing. Every student would be part of a giant computerized data bank matching name, car and keys in the Amherst Towing Master Key Bank.

All a tower would have to do is locate a car, write and wipe a ticket, radio the vital info back to headquarters and within minutes a cheap mini-bus would deliver a driver and keys and race the illegal car back to the pound.

The noisy, abusive crowds that gather around a tow truck would be a thing of the past. Gone would be the headaches and moral stigma that has plagued tow truck operators for years. They'd be drivers — like the rest of us.

The size is the matter

By THOMAS MAJOR

Before the next lecture of Political Science 101 is held in Alumni Stadium, let me make a heretical statement on the subject of large lectures. To complain about having to attend huge classes is standard; to say that there shouldn't be huge classes is treated as heresy, or at the very least interpreted as a gripe born from ignorance of the way the university works.

Most students possess a remarkably uniform set of ideas on what to expect from the university, the quality of services provided by the university, and how and where the individual fits into the scheme of things. This uniformity of thought and passive acceptance of existing conditions is similar to the reaction of the city dweller. The city dweller usually accepts inconveniences both minor and major, from a variety of sources ranging from huge labor unions to irrational clerks at City Hall. Oh, the city dweller might gripe and get heartburn, but he or she doesn't expect the causes of these inconveniences to be removed and, however loudly he or she complains, accepts their existence.

The same can be said of the UMass student. There is an endless variety of inconveniences, rules, and regulations that touch the life of a student. Many, possibly most of these inconveniences are inherent in a large-scale university where thousands of people are trying to learn, live, and grow at the same time. But others are correctable and curable through change, either major or minor change.

The case of large classes is an example. Most large classes are required introductory courses. Hundreds of people are herded into an auditorium two times a week to passively sit and write notes on whatever the professor is saying. Most students don't like learning this way. Most teachers don't like to teach this way. Then why are courses learned and taught this way?

Size is the most common excuse given by those who passively accept it. And that would be an answer that made sense; after all, thousands of anything seems like a lot. But when you ask why the problem of size is so insoluble, such an unbreakable obstacle, the excuse of size is repeated. No attempt is made to reason why the problem of size can't be solved; the excuse stands firm and unshakable.

Aside from the question of the problem of size — and I think that the University, if ordered to, could dream up a way fast to solve the problem — this is a dangerous pattern of thought. Once you accept the impossibility of ever solving the problem of size as it applies to the field of academics, how can you expect to get personalized attention anywhere else? Since there are thousands of us who have different tastes but the same basic needs, the potential exists for a mechanical, assembly line-style university with "efficiency" the holy word and "individual" an obsolete term. Today, to an unpleasant extent, that potential is becoming a reality.

Now I'll say something that, on first inspection, seems direct contradiction of what I've said above. I realize that the size of present enrollment and limited finances, along with the state of the economy, makes individualized treatment, both academically and personally, extremely difficult.

But on the other extreme, the total depersonalization of the university is a far greater possibility and therefore a greater threat. It is inconsistent for one to say "I'll let the administration treat me like a sheep in Economics 104, but I'll never let them put me in a triple room." Once you accept depersonalization in one area, you must be ready to accept it everywhere else.

It is impractical to demand individual attention at UMass and expect to get it; it is dangerous to be ready to accept impersonal treatment because that is the way you will eventually be treated.

The big one

By MARK WILDING

"No one likes us — I don't know why
We may not be perfect, but heavens knows we try
But all around even our old friends put us down
Let's drop the big one and see what happens."
— Randy Newman

Recently the Brookings Institute, one of this country's most respected think tanks put out their bi-annual opinion on the possibility of nuclear warfare. These nuclear boy wonders have a clock which goes up to sixty. The nearer the world gets to nuclear wrack and ruin the closer the clock's hand gets to sixty. This time they placed the hand at the rather uncomfortable figure of fifty-seven.

For a couple of days after their announcement I suffered from a depressing case of nucleophobia — a fear of nuclear annihilation. I strutted about predicting the end. My friends called me a latter-day Cassandra, a worry-wart, a bore. Still, for all his pretentious and overbearing ways, Cassandra predicted the doom correctly.

But then I got to thinking. As it is there are more important planets around. And even the Bible says that the Lord will destroy the earth by fire. Who was I to get in his way? For, to paraphrase a good friend of mine, if you go around worrying about all the problems in the world you'll have a world of problems. At least I think it was a good friend of mine who said it. But I refuse to run away from this dilemma. I propose instead to meet it head on.

Just before the bomb hits I will hurry to the top of the library cradling a huge vase under each arm. They will be the biggest damn highballs ever made. Then I'll just sit back and watch the fireworks.

Should I escape being sizzled I will proceed to all of the occupied buildings in the Amherst area, much like a missionary, and pass out party favors and organize games like Name that atomic device, Final Jeopardy, and Match Bomb '76.

It should be a blast and there should be plenty of folks, seeing as this area's Civil Defense unit has made plans to evacuate all of Springfield's residents to Amherst in case of a nuclear attack. They call it crisis relocation. They figure that Springfield will be one of the major population centers that the Reds will want to ionize. God knows why they'll go after the only already embalmed city in Massachusetts. Still they're a devious lot so why not?

My missionary work completed, my travels will take me to New London in Connecticut where I hope to catch the earliest Trident submarine to the bottom of the sea. These babies are supposed to be able to launch nuclear warheads from anywhere and then escape undetected. Sign me on captain!

I hear mutterings. This man is talking bumpf you're saying to yourself. Nuclear war is preposterous. Haven't we and the Soviets established a warhead ceiling at ten thousand of the nasty nuclear gems? Talk about rubbing SALT in the wounds! What's that you say? The experts maintain that if there is a nuclear occurrence it will be a limited affair? You mean we give them Albany for Leningrad and a city to be named later, that sort of thing? Well if you ask me limited nuclear war is like being slightly pregnant. Get ready to pass out the exploding cigars, Papa!

Not to worry though for I'm sure the end won't be for a while yet. Mind you if any of you know a really good highball recipe and can get it to me within a week, I'd surely appreciate it.

Inspection of porno issue

The pornography controversy is one of the silliest, yet most dangerous issues in a long time. It is silly because anyone who is offended by pornography can simply ignore it. It is dangerous because once you decide to ban "offensive" movies, magazines, etc., then you must decide what constitutes offensive. (In legal language, what constitutes "material without redeeming social value.") How do you decide who is qualified to do that?

Once you ban pornography, you establish a precedent to ban anything which someone screams loudly enough that he/she doesn't like. And from there, it's a natural move to censor newspapers, books, and magazines, and then the government will cut off public information. If you want to know what happens after that, get a copy of Orwell's 1984.

In a letter to the Collegian last Tuesday, the People's Gay Alliance stated that they hadn't "viewed any inoffensive examples (of pornography) to date." If the Alliance is so offended by the examples they've seen, then to avoid being further offended, they should avoid seeing further examples. What they, and others who characterize pornography as oppressive and offensive should remember, is that pornographic movies are not made with a gun held to the head of any of the actors involved, nor are guns held to the heads of those who go to see these movies.

Acting in a pornographic movie is a job, just like teaching, or street cleaning, or being a reporter. Going to see a pornographic movie is also a choice on the part of the viewer. The right to make, act in, and see anything which does not infringe on the rights of others is fundamental to a free society. Pornography does not infringe on anyone's rights, because it is not forced on those who wish to have no involvement with it. However, those who seek to have it banned, do infringe on the rights of those who enjoy this kind of entertainment.

As long as actors are paid what they feel is enough to play in a pornographic movie; as long as the companies sponsoring the movie gross enough to put them in the black; as long as people are willing to shell out the price of a porn-show, then pornography will exist as part of a free enterprise system. The capitalistic way in this country has always been that if there's a market for something, and you've got it, then go sell it, and more power to you. Banning pornography would deny those who produce it the right to a legitimate livelihood.

In fact, trying to ban pornography may backfire. In countries where pornographic material is legalized, reports are that sales dropped off after legalization. When you take the mystery out of something, you eliminate the interest of everyone who wants the thing for its shock value, or just because it is illegal, and therefore tantalizing because it is forbidden.

It's like telling a child that liquor is for grownups only, and keeping the liquor cabinet locked. Sooner or later, that child is going to be consumed with curiosity about what's so special about alcohol. Then he/she will pick the lock on the cabinet, and get roaring drunk, instead of learning about liquor gradually, and finding out that's it's not so special after all.

The more you tell people that pornography is evil and wrong, the more you are going to incite curiosity. The harder your efforts to have it banned, the larger the underground market that will develop to satisfy that curiosity.

What people consider offensive is strictly an individual thing. No one is qualified to say what lacks social value, and only that which infringes on the rights of others should be banned. Pornography does not fall into that category. No one is being asked to see something of which they disapprove, so the argument that pornography is offensive is silly. And once the ban begins, there is no telling where it will end.

more on frat noise

Calling for some order

To the Editor:

As residents of the Phillips Street area, we feel that our right to live in a safe, peaceful environment is being seriously abridged by the presence of Zeta Psi, a fraternity at 25 Phillips Street. The physical and mental harrassment maintained by the fraternity includes: Indecent exposure, obscene language [directed at area residents], excessive noise [both on weekdays and weekends], dangerous driving [endangering residents, their children, and their pets], and harrassment of neighbors who call the police. This not only occurs with Zeta Psi, but with other nearby fraternities as well.

Our complaint is directed not only at the fraternity [-ies] itself, but the town police, and the Greek Affairs office as well. In calling the police we receive inconsistent reactions: Either they do not respond at all, drive by without stopping, or stop and attempt to deal with the situation. Often, the police do not succeed in stopping the disruptive behavior. Usually, whatever quiet they may gain by their presence ends as soon as they leave.

The Greek Affairs office, in recognition of the rights of other town residents, should maintain some position of overseeing their various organizations. When complaints are continually lodged with the police about a specific fraternity [or sorority], the Greek Affairs office should be responsible for taking some kind of action on the matter, in order to preserve community relations.

We feel that it is imperative that either the Amherst Police Department treat the fraternity residents as they would any other resident by arresting them for illegal behavior, or the fraternity be removed from the area by either the town council or the Greek Affairs office.

Chilean refugees see uncertain future ahead

SAN JOSE, Ca. [PNS] — The small minority of Chilean refugees granted asylum in the U.S. in the years following the 1973 Chilean coup have found it a reluctant homeland. Now, in the wake of the fatal bombing of former Chilean cabinet minister Orlando Letelier in Washington, D.C., fear of an uncertain future has been heightened by fear of assassination.

The 100-member Chilean exile community here is the largest segment of some 864 Chilean refugees granted asylum in the U.S.

Almost all had undergone torture and imprisonment, as former Allende supporters, by secret police agents of the ruling military junta — before being summarily thrown out of their country.

Many traveled directly from prison to the Santiago airport to the San Francisco Bay Area, drawn by its large Spanish-speaking community and a number of receptive relief workers. Others, in various numbers, went to Los Angeles, San Diego, Portland, Ore., Phoenix and New York City.

Once in the U.S., they have discovered there is no official, organized, funded program to house them, feed the, attend to their medical needs, help them find work or learn English.

A typical case is that of Rolando Miranda, a former Air Force officer who arrived in San Jose in August. Miranda, whose crime was that he upheld his military oath and remained loyal to Allende, had been imprisoned for three years and had suffered a stroke as a result of the torture he received there. He arrived in the U.S. virtually penniless.

"He's jailed and tortured and, all of a sudden, he's yanked out of jail and flown to the U.S.," said Byron Park, a San Francisco immigration attorney and a member of Amnesty International who has worked with the Chileans here.

"He can't speak a word of English. He has virtually no one to help him. He's feeling extremely insecure. There just aren't any opportunities."

TIGHT RESTRICTIONS

While a number of other nations have granted asylum to large numbers of political prisoners from Chile — France has taken 4,000; Canada, 2,000; Argentina, 10,000 and Mexico, 2,500 — the U.S. government has been more reluctant.

Some Chilean refugees began trickling into the U.S. with visitor or student visas right after the coup, but there was no official immigration program for Chileans until December 1974, when Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, in response to political pressures, announced the U.S. would admit 400 of the many thousands of political prisoners with their families.

Mental health internship program available

Graduating college seniors and new graduates may apply for full-year Pre-Professional Traineeships in Mental Health offered at the Devereux Foundation in suburban Philadelphia, a group of multidisciplinary residential and day care treatment, therapeutic education, and rehabilitation centers.

The traineeships provide career orientation to work with mentally and emotionally handicapped youth presenting learning and adjustment problems. Devereux is approved by the APA for doctoral internships in Clinical and Counseling Psychology, and by the IACS as an Accredited Counseling Center. Its Bond Division is a JCAH Accredited Psychiatric Facility for Children and Adolescents.

Several 12-month traineeships are available for appointment as Resident Advisor-Counselors at Career House, an innovative, transitional, co-ed residential treatment-therapeutic education facility for seniors and post-high school youth with learning and personal adjustment problems. Trainees "live-in", serve as role models, participate in clinical seminars and case conferences, and receive training and supervised experience in supportive counseling and milieu therapy, crisis intervention, recreation therapy and social rehabilitation, and report writing.

Experience may also be offered in diagnostic psycho-educational and vocational assessment techniques, selective job placements, educational therapy and in tutoring. Trainees with prior experience may be assigned to the Adjunctive Therapies Program of Communications Media encompassing art, photography, film-making, campus radio and TV studio operation and newsletters. A few traineeships may be available at other Devereux Facilities for full-year work experience as Recreation Therapy Aides, Psychiatric Aide-Residence Counselors, or Summer Camp Counselors.

A combined tax-exempt stipend and allowance of $316 per month, housing and meals are provided to qualified applicants who are U.S. citizens, unmarried, and at least 22 years of age. Trainees must have the use of a fully-insured personal automobile and should be able to do their own typing. Preference will be given to applicants with a broad academic base of training and demonstrated skills appropriate to the traineeship, who plan to attend graduate school and presently seek a comprehensive training experience in supportive mental health services. A certificate is awarded upon successful completion of the full-year traineeship.

Information and applications are available from Dr. Henry Platt, director, Institute of Clinical Training, the Devereux Foundation, Devon, Pennsylvania, 19333.

Research year in India sponsored by UCal-Berkeley

Graduate students in professional fields from throughout the United States have an opportunity to spend the 1977-78 academic year doing research and field work in India through a program coordinated by the University of California at Berkeley.

Students in the Professional Studies Program are based at universities and institutes in India, and work with Indian faculty and professionals on projects related to their professional and research interests.

Past participants have investigated non-conventional energy resources, worked in an eye clinic, prepared an environmental impact study for a new urban development, and researched urban squatters, health systems, transportation systems, the Indian criminal code, library education, and the economic impact of multinational corporations.

They have collected data for dissertations and gained field experience in their professions. Some of this research has been published in Indian and American journals.

Students are selected from graduate schools such as agriculture, business administration, architecture and planning, engineering, librarianship, public health, social welfare, optometry, public policy, law, education, and medicine.

The program has an office and staff in New Delhi to assist the participants. Intensive language training and seminars on Indian civilization and development are offered.

The Professional Studies Program in India, now in its 10th year, is partially funded by a grant from the U.S. Office of Education. Benefits include round trip air transportation, living allowance, housing, medical care, travel in India related to study, and orientation.

January 15, 1977 is the deadline to apply to the Office of International Education, University of California, 2538 Channing Way, Berkeley, California, 94720.

Moving toward teamwork

By KIT WALKER and ROB HENEREY

The moon is in Aries today — time to begin something. No major aspects all day. But we've still got Uranus in Scorpio's tune to dance to. It could be that we're liking our friends better than our lovers these days — unless we're lucky, and they're one and the same.

Uranus tells us the times they are a-changin'. We have to allow for the fact that what used to work may no longer be valid. Doesn't it feel like an absurd game sometimes? Or do you still take yourself seriously?

It's time to learn how to share, really. We don't have to be handling goods in trade, an eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth. Did you ever consider how maybe you could sit in the same room with someone and never say a word, yet benefit immensely from the experience? It all depends on how much we can open up and shine. There's no need to expect or demand anything in return from anyone. As soon as we remember the Source of all things it's as easy as breathing in and out. So if you think you own the air you've got in your lungs right now, see how long you can keep it there without dropping dead. And if you think you own the food in your refrigerator, see how long you can keep from eating it before both you and it become totally useless. It all goes back to where it came from, so let's stop playing games and come to life. Hallowe'en's over, so take off the silly mask. There's something oh so real in there.

Tonight will be a series of four exact angles connecting the Moon, the mother of changes, with Mercury (thought) and the Sun (spiritual purpose) and with Neptune (dreams) and Pluto (rebirth).

The Moon is moving through Aries, which says "I AM", 5-12th of the circle (or 5 Signs) ahead of the Sun, the symbol of our monthly purpose, which is in Scorpio, which says "WE HAVE". The Moon made this same 150 degree angle with Uranus, the planet of the truth that suddenly changes everything at 3:18 this afternoon. Tonight it will make it with Mercury, the planet of rational analysis and communication, at 7:02, and with the Sun at 11:41. The 5-12ths ahead angle has the nature of Virgo, of analyzing and purifying ourselves, or perfecting and cleaning up our act, so that we can fulfill ourselves in balance at the 6-12ths, or Libra phase of the cycle.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, November 3 — Born today, you are one of those considerate persons who is as concerned about other people's well-being as about his own. You would make an excellent nurse -- whether male or female -- social worker, teacher, guidance counselor or the like; so long as you are in a position to lend a helping hand to any in difficulty, so long will you consider your life worthwhile. Your happiness depends upon your being able to lend support, whether material or moral, to those less fortunate than yourself; your security depends upon your being able to put to profitable and satisfying use your altruistic feelings.

As a child, you very likely gained a reputation for seriousness, perhaps even somberness. With maturity, however, should come a transformation from the somber to the dry-humored, from the serious to the wry. Your ability to gather, organize, store, recall and ultimately employ information to your own advantage or that of those in whom you are interested makes it very nearly a sure thing that you will reach your goals in life. Only a slight tendency to put off until tomorrow what ought to be done today could cause you to fail.

Because of your ability to see yourself almost as objectively as others see you, you are able to undergo successfully programs of self-improvement. Seldom discouraged by your own performance, even when that performance is poor, you keep your eyes on the future and allow the past to fade beyond its ability to hurt you in any way.

Thursday, November 4

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — If you attempt to evade the issue another brings up, you may be in for disappointment. Profits diminish with a lack of candor.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Seek the quickest solution -- so long as it is also a feasible one. Don't accept speed in lieu of accuracy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Don't attempt to change horses in midstream. There is more than meets the eye when it comes to the day's profits.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Professional gains as well as social advancement are to be made early in the day. By evening, there is nothing to do but sit back and smile.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Take the positive approach to a difficult phase of your work. Not to do so may be to give way to feelings of trepidation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — An indifference to physical surroundings may lead to an accident. Make certain you know precisely what your next move will be.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A moody friend may make it impossible for you to put your best foot forward this morning. Material loss late in the day causes discouragement.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Keep facts and figures available. You need not bother to memorize needed material -- but know where you can find it quickly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can make ends meet if you are careful to make needed purchases only once. Take your time and you won't duplicate efforts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Assert your independence before another takes it away from you. Don't expect help from a source not in favor of your recent activities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Practical considerations require that you take the line of least resistance. Moral considerations tell a different story. Choose carefully.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — New adventure requires a new outlook on life. Take your time when it comes to choosing a partner. An old friend proves his loyalty.

Postdoctoral research programs

The National Research Council (NRC) has announced the Research Associateship Programs for 1977. These programs provide scientists and engineers with opportunities for postdoctoral research on problems in many fields of atmospheric and earth sciences, chemistry, engineering, environmental sciences, life sciences, mathematics, physics and space sciences.

The NRC administers the Research Associateship Programs on behalf of and in cooperation with selected federal research organizations, which have laboratories at about 80 geographic locations in the United States.

Appointments are awarded on a competitive basis. The competition is open to recent recipients of the doctorate and in some cases to senior investigators. Some programs are open to non-US citizens also.

Approximately 250 to 300 new awards will be made in 1977. Stipends (subject to income tax) will range from $15,000 upwards. Grants will be provided for family relocation and for professional travel during tenure.

Postmark deadline for applications is Jan. 15, 1977. Awards will be announced in April.

Further information concerning application materials and specific opportunities for research is available from the Associateship Office, JH 606-P, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20418.

Bobby Orr (far left) may have to call it quits to his illustrious career that has seen him shatter nearly every record for a defenseman in hockey. (UPI)

NL Cy Young winner

Jones fulfills life-long dream

NEW YORK [UPI] — Overcoming the bitter disappointment of a year ago, left-hander Randy Jones of the San Diego Padres lived up to a preseason prediction and fulfilled a "boyhood dream" Tuesday when he was named winner of the National League's Cy Young award.

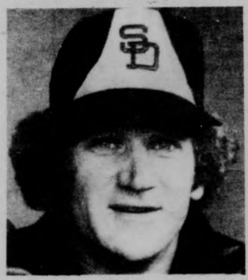
The 26-year-old Jones, a sinkerball specialist who belies the fact a blazing fastball is essential to be a big winner in the Major Leagues, was an overwhelming choice in the balloting of 24 members of the Baseball Writers Association of American — two from each NL city. The crafty southpaw, who posted a 22-14 record to lead the NL in victories, received 15 first place votes and 96 points to beat out left-hander Jerry Koosman of the New York Mets and right-hander Don Sutton of the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Koosman, 21-10 drew seven first place votes and 69½ points while Sutton, also 21-10, had one first place mention and 25½ points. Steve Carlton of Philadelphia (11 points), Rawly Eastwick of Cincinnati (6), Jon Matlack of New York (5), J.R. Richard of Houston (2) and last year's winner, Tom Seaver of the Mets (1), were the only others to receive votes. Jones was the only one named on all 24 ballots.

"It's like a boyhood dream come true," said Jones by telephone from San Francisco. "It shows I am for real. When you achieve your boyhood dream, it's an incredible thrill. It really hasn't sunken in yet."

Jones actually had two seasons in 1976. He was practically unbeatable in the first half of the year, posting a 16-3 record by the All-Star break. But in the second half the Padres faltered and Jones slumped to 6-11 even though he says "I pitched about the same."

Despite his slump, he still managed to lead the league in victories, complete games (25) and innings pitched (315). He had an earned run average of 2.74, sixth best in the league, and walked only 50 batters in 315 innings. He also was the winning pitcher for the NL in the All-Star game, holding the American League scoreless over the first three innings.



Randy Jones

It marked the second year in a row Jones reached the 20-victory plateau, but a year ago when he won 20 for the first time and posted a league-leading 2.24 earned run average, he was upset at finishing second to Seaver in the Cy Young voting.

"I don't think he did any more for the Mets than I did for the Padres," Jones said at the time. "I don't say I deserved the award over Tom Seaver — I am saying we both deserved it. We should have been named co-winners."

That's when he made a prediction about 1976.

"If I have another year like 1975, and I expect to, I'll win the Cy Young award and make believers out of a lot of people — starting with the hitters in this league," Jones predicted. "They think I just came out of the weeds for one good year."

A 22-game loser only three seasons ago, Jones felt the consistency of back-to-back 20-victory seasons may have swayed some of the voters to cast their ballots for him over Koosman and Sutton.

Orr's knee damaged; may decide to retire

TORONTO [UPI] — Bobby Orr's doctor said yesterday the bone in the Chicago Black Hawks star's left knee had degenerated and will continue to do so as long as he plays hockey.

Dr. John Palmer of the Toronto General Hospital said an arthroscopy — flushing out of the joint — had been performed earlier in the day and resulted in the removal of pieces of cartilege and tissue that has broken away from the lining of the knee bone.

"The joint is permanently damaged," Dr. Palmer said. "The knee now has only a certain number of miles left in it and it's up to him to decide how he's going to use those miles."

Dr. Palmer said Orr's knee was afflicted by "degenerative arthritis caused by injury," and differed from the more usual spontaneous inflamation of joints suffered by many persons.

He said that if Orr elected to continue playing, he would have to trim down both the number of games and practice sessions.

Dr. Palmer said Orr has been "considering leaving hockey but hasn't yet reached a decision."

Orr, he said, would be discharged from the hospital Wednesday but has been ordered to rest his knee for at least two weeks, when further examination of the knee will be made.

The Hawks signed Orr, 28, to a $3 million contract for this season after he left the Boston Bruins, where he had run up more records than any other National Hockey League player.

Dr. Palmer said in the arthroscopy performed Tuesday a lighted instrument was inserted into the knee joint and revealed that fragments of cartilege had worn away from the lining of the bone.

"This reflects a degeneration of the bone in the knee," Dr. Palmer said. "The knee has been worsening by the use of it in hockey. Playing hockey will add to the wear and tear on the joint."

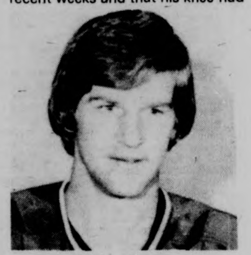
Orr has had surgery on the knee five times during his NHL career.

Palmer said he was disappointed by the worsening condition.

"I had thought at the time of the last arthroscopy, about six months ago, that there would be the possibility he could be able to play for a few years, but this now has to be modified," he said, adding that he would not commit himself on whether Orr might be able to play for even a year or two.

"I don't think it matters much now if he plays because the deterioration is so advanced," Dr. Palmer said. "He's so anxious to play that he will if he's physically able to do so."

The doctor said Orr had been suffering considerable pain in recent weeks and that his knee had been "catching on him, locking on him, giving way — just not functioning properly at all."



Bobby Orr

"If he wants to carry on playing, with the odd flushing out of the joint, we'll be happy to do this for him," Dr. Palmer said.

But the doctor said Orr's knee had already suffered such severe damage that "it will cause varying problems later on." He acknowledged that one possibility in sight was that Orr's knee may become permanently stiff.

Charlie Finley will be losing his best players through the free agent draft.

Sox move farm team

PAWTUCKET, R.I. [UPI] — The Rhode Island Red Sox baseball team Tuesday announced it is moving to Jersey City, N.J., next spring.

Boston Red Sox farm director Ed Kenney said, however, the parent team has cancelled its affiliation with the Triple-A International League franchise and was not sure they would keep the team in their farm organization.

"We are not convinced that this is the best possible move," Kenney said. "Before we go to Jersey City we would have to look at the ballpark, the city and the city's agreement."

Free agent draft tomorrow

Agents seek lucrative price

NEW YORK [AP] — With their pens poised and their check books ready, baseball executives began arriving at the plush Plaza Hotel Tuesday, preparing for Thursday's first-ever re-entry draft of free agent players.

Because they never have conducted this exercise before, no one was quite sure how the draft would go. There was, however, one certainty. Some large sums of money will be changing hands.

One-third of the 24 players available are from the Oakland A's organization. At first, owner Charles O. Finley said he would not take part in the draft and threatened suits against his players and the teams drafting them.

But Finley had a change of heart last weekend and vowed to borrow money to enter the bidding war. "I've got to survive," said the A's owner.

Heading the Oakland free agent contingent are outfielder Joe Rudi and pitcher Rollie Fingers, each of whom Finley tried to sell to the Boston Red Sox for $1.5 million last June. Those deals were blocked by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, and Finley's subsequent suit against baseball is still pending.

"I can't be the judge, but I am so confident that I am going to win that I am going to go out and borrow the money to be active in the free agent marketplace," Finley said.

Besides Rudi and Fingers, Finley figures to lose infielders Bert Campaneris and Sal Bando, catcher Gene Tenace, outfielder Don Baylor and veteran first basemen Nate Colbert and Willie McCovey.

Will Don Zimmer and the Red Sox attempt to sign some of the available free agents?

Baltimore's non-voluntary contribution to the draft includes slugging outfielder Reggie Jackson, who could bring the highest price of any of the free agents, second baseman Bobby Grich, 20-game winner Wayne Garland and minor league outfielder Royle Stillman.

The remaining dozen free agents are California infielders Tim Nordbrook, Paul Dade and Billy Smith; Philadelphia infielder Dave Cash; San Diego infielder Tito Fuentes; San Francisco outfielder Gary Matthews; Minnesota pitcher Bill Campbell and infielder Eric Soderholm; Pittsburgh infielder Richie Hebner; New York Yankees pitcher Doyle Alexander; Cincinnati pitcher Don Gullett, and Chicago Cubs pitcher Steve Stone.

Under the ground rules of the draft, each player may be selected by 12 clubs, and then his old team may also enter the bidding for his services. The draft could last 12 rounds, should each of the 24 eligible players be selected the maximum 12 times.

Several Orioles will be flying the coop on Bird's manager Earl Weaver.

Montreal owns the first choice after the National League won a coin flip to determine drafting rotation. After the Expos come the Chicago White Sox. Then the two leagues will alternate picks in inverse order of their 1976 won-lost records.

Each team may sign two free agents unless it loses more than two in the draft. In that case, a team may sign as many players as it loses.

★ Violence

Pro Football won't, as long as this society thrives on violence. It is, my friends, as simple as that.

Of course, there are those of us who play or watch football for the mere enjoyment of competition. But we are a dying breed, a definite minority. The recent events at Yankee or Schaefer stadium tell us that.

If you don't believe that people in America have a need for pro Football, just sit in the stands (if you dare) and listen to what goes on. Football is just short of war for some of these people. It brings them right up to the edge. The fans can really get their hostilities off. There's mayhem, but no killing. It's a titallation.

Football is an archaic ethos. It's like the old Roman sports. Throwing the bomb, blitzing — now what the hell does that mean? If this society changes like I hope it will, football will be a dead issue. The people will be able to get their hostilities off in a healthier way. But I'm not holding my breath.

Phil Puopolo

Michigan coach warns all

ANN ARBOR, Mich. [UPI] — Bo Schembechler of Michigan, coach of the nation's top-rated team, again has predicted college football will be destroyed if the NCAA returns to the one-platoon game or trims scholarships any further.

"With one-platoon football, you can't do the things we do now," Schembechler said Tuesday, "either offensively or defensively. We'd button right up, go to the tight-t, winged-t and run off tackle.

"Now don't get me wrong," he added with a chuckle, "you guys know I can coach that stuff.

"If you go to single-platoon football, the fans won't come back," Schembechler said somberly. "It's not going to help any team that's not winning, win. The same schools that are winning now will continue to win.

"I'd like to see what will happen next year, when everybody has 95 grants," he said.

Schembechler would like to be able to recruit 30 players a year with a total of 105 on scholarship. The current NCAA limit, to go into effect next season, will be a total of 95 scholarships.

The coach of the Wolverines doesn't think that's enough because injured players count in the total, even though they may not be able to play, and it limits the redshirting a coach can do.

Gullet has cast removed

BRIGHTON, Mass. [UPI] — A free agent with an injury might be considered a risky investment by baseball owners, especially when no one knows the full extent of it.

So the good news about Don Gullett's right ankle came just in time for the 25-year-old Cincinnati Reds' pitcher, one of 24 free agents who will be made available to other clubs in Thursday's re-entry draft.

The cast on Gullett's ankle was removed by two orthopedic specialists Tuesday and one of them, Dr. John Molloy, said in his opinion the lefthander was fit to pitch tomorrow if necessary.

Molloy and Dr. Jack Walsh both examined Gullett's ankle after the cast was removed and called the injury, "a minor problem which should not give him any difficulty in the future."

Puopolo acclaimed on defensive outing

AMHERST — New Hampshire quarterback Jeff Allen and Rhode Island fullback Rich Moser have been named the Yankee Conference offensive players of the week for outstanding performances last Saturday and Maine linebacker Chris Keating and Massachusetts middleguard Phil Puopolo received similar accolades for their defensive play.

Puopolo, a 6'-230 lb. junior from Malden, Mass., was particularly effective in the first half of the Massachusetts-Rutgers game as he had three quarterback sacks accounting for losses of 24 yards as the Minutemen held the undefeated Scarlet Knights to minus 2 yards rushing. During the game Puopolo was credited with seven tackles.

Allen, a 6'2-180 lb. junior from Seymour, Connecticut, had an outstanding day passing as the Wildcats won their third straight game. Jeff completed nine of thirteen passes for 113 yards and one touchdown in the 24-10 win over West Chester.

Moser, a 6'0-204 lb. junior from Scarsdale, N.Y., accounted for two thirds of his team's rushing yardage as he gained 172 yards in 24 attempts and scored a second period touchdown on a 31 yard run to give Rhode Island a 14-0 halftime lead.

Keating, a 6'2-205 lb. sophomore from Cohasset, Mass., has a productive day as Maine upended Southern Connecticut for its fifth win of the year Chris made 10 tackles and was credited with six assists, had a pass deflection, and recovered a fumble.

Violence in sport

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

Violence in sports. It consumes us all, it eats away at us. It is everywhere. America, as a society, is terribly violent. No other area of our culture mirrors this violence quite the way sports does. We are living in an era which, as Vincent Lombardi once said, "Winning isn't everything, it is the only thing."

Howard Glenn was a football player for the N.Y. Jets in 1960. The following is Ernie Barnes account of one of his games on October 9, 1960.

"About four minutes after the kick-off we were huddled on our 35 yard line. God it was hot. Next to me in the left guard spot, Howard Glenn's voice seeped out the words, "I don't think I can make it."

When the play was over and we moved back to the huddle again, Glenn was moving slowly as if cramped. There were flecks of foam in the corners of his mouth and I caught the faint smell of a horrible odor.

"I... I can't ... make it," he said, gasping.

After the game we found Howard sitting nude in a metal chair and holding a towel to his chest. We backed away, watching his body twitch. He was straining to breathe and that odor was still with him.

"Why in hell didn't you get a doctor to him?," Art Powell shouted.

I saw Glenn Howards body fall-like a drunks-to the floor. I don't think he could see. All around him players had gathered, water from the shower dripping from their bodies.

Then a smelly, green mucus bubbled from his mouth. Several hands seemed to reach in and wipe it away. He struggled with his tongue, and his eyes bore no pupil. Soon an ambulance came to take him to a Houston hospital.

On the plane back, Ed Bell reached across the seat and touched me on the shoulder. "Don't take this as final, but Steve Sebo (general manager) boarded a few minutes ago and said that Howard died a few minutes ago at the hospital."

All I could see in my mind was Glenn's body lying in the water on the cement floor. He died a lonely death.

It took time and reasoning for me to get over Howard Glenn's death. Even today, it enters my mind often. I wondered if he really died from what was reported, a broken neck suffered in the game with Dallas the week before."

A more recent example of football's violence surfaced this week with Lynn Swann, Pittsburgh's fine wide receiver being quoted as saying that he will quit pro football if something isn't done about the late hits, crackback blocks and concussions he has endured while playing. This comes, mind you, from a man at the top, with everything going for him.

You are left wondering why the others play the game.

"Easy," one vintage Chicago Bear once said. "If you do it on the street you get put in jail for assault. Here you get to do it for free."

A few years ago a physicist determined the collision force involved in football. It is "enough to make 33 tons move one inch." (This involves a full speed collision between a 200 pound back and a 240 pound lineman).

Running rampant on the field, this force often produces tremendous collisions — and injuries. This must be accepted as a part of the "business".

Pro football is beginning to see the "products" of its violent nature. Dick Butkus is suing his former team, the Chicago Bears, for one million dollars. The Bears drugged Butkus to enable him to finish the 1972 season on his gimpy knees. His knees are now roughly on a par with those of a 60 year old man's, and they will get worse — much worse.

Analogies have been made (regarding football) to religion and life itself and the family and war. It is war, in fact, that gave the sport its vocabulary (i.e., "the bomb", "the blitz", "attack", "offense and defense", "flanker", "two platoons," even "rookie" which is short for recruit).

Glenn Howard may have died. And Lynn Swann might quit. But

Rams coach names Harris as No. 1 qb

LONG BEACH, Calif. [UPI] — James Harris is the Los Angeles Rams' No. 1 quarterback, coach Chuck Knox said Tuesday, and he'll continue to start over Ron Jaworski and rookie Pat Haden unless he gets hurt.

"As long as James is healthy, there is no quarterback controversy," Knox said. "The main consideration about whether he would play last week was how was his shoulder, is he well and is he ready?

"After all, he had a super preseason and he had won 19 games in 24 starts. That's almost 80 per cent and there aren't many quarterbacks who have done that."

After missing two games because of a shoulder injury, Harris returned to the lineup and fired two first-half touchdown passes in a 45-3 Rams' victory over the expansion Seattle Seahawks.

Jaworski, who started the previous week at New Orleans, did not play while Haden came in during the fourth quarter. After the game, Jaworksi said he apparently didn't fit into the Rams' plans, hinting that the reason was because he was playing out his option.

The third-year pro from Youngstown State said he would seek a meeting with Knox this week.

Booters face Chiefs with no-offense tag

Springfield College's soccer team will be in town today to play the no-offense Minutemen in a match on Boyden Field at 2:30.

The UMass soccer team has not scored a goal in its last four games. It will not be easy for the Minutemen to get their offense on track this afternoon, as they will be facing a strong goaltender in Ed Jarret.

"We're still waiting for the explosion to occur; we haven't had any breaks, from the officials or from anywhere, I guess you have to make them," said coach Russ Kidd.

Michael Parsons will continue playing forward with the hope that the excellent movement he creates will result in a few goals. Freshman Tarek Elnabli, a JV all season, will given a shot at forward during the game. Joel Mascolo has been coming on lately and is due for a goal.

The Springfield College Chiefs have had an up and down season, but at one time were rated in the Division I top ten. They have many Western Massachusetts high school stars on their roster including former All-Western Mass. halfback Bobby Galarneau, an alumnus of Chicopee High.

UMass might have a possible advantage because the game is on natural turf and the Chiefs are primarily used to the astroturf that they have on their home field. However, Boyden Field is in very rough shape and this will hinder both teams equally.

BOOTER BANTER: Coach Kidd thinks goaltender Mark Hanks is the best at his position in the entire Yankee Conference ... The varsity and JV teams scrimmaged against each other yesterday and the JV's held their own ... Springfield has played extremely well against UConn and Brown, two New England powers; they lost both teams by identical 1-0 scores ... Pat Veale and Mark Vassalotti have done a fine job at wing fullback, since Parsons was switched up front ... This game represents in the words of Russ Kidd, "The prestige of Western Mass. college soccer"

Equestrians capture show title; dominate with seven blues

By SUE SCANLON
Collegian Staff

The UMET did it again. For the third consecutive year, the UMass Equestrian Team captured the high point college title at the UConn intercollegiate horse show. UMass dominated the show from beginning to end by winning seven blue ribbons. Among these winners were Sharon Scraggs, Whitney Buttrick, Robin Ziegler, Roberta Sofka, Judy Cobb, and Norine Spanos.

UMass rider Ann Van Heerdan in a superb display of horsemanship, took the reserve champion high point rider award. Coach Sarah Carlson stated, "Even though the team is young, I knew they could do it." We have worked very hard for this show and it payed off." She further commented, "I think that this is just the beginning for us. We have been high point college two weeks in a row; I feel that this is a good indication of what is to follow."

UConn supplied the show with a fine string of horses, many of which are UConn born and raised. The facilities were quite extensive, including a spacious showing ring. The judge was Ms. Carol Kelly of Ridgefield, Conn.

Next weekend, the UMET travels to Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H. Dartmouth joined the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association just this year, thus making this their first intercollegiate show. Only fifteen members of each team are being allowed to show at Dartmouth due to their limited amount of horses. Coach Carlson has chosen fifteen of the team's top riders to represent the UMET.

The UMass event that was scheduled for this past Sunday was cancelled due to rain. Plans for a new date are being discussed.

★Injury bug hits

Last Saturday against Rutgers, the Minutemen were further depleted because of more injuries. Junior tight-end standout Kevin Cummings was operated on yesterday for a knee injury and he too is now out for the season. The backup tight-end to Cummings, Charles Benoit also is out for the year with a dislocated shoulder. The tight-end position has been practically wiped out.

Another position where injuries have struck hard and heavy is in the defensive backfield. Dave Croasdale is now doubtful for this weekend as he has a severe bruised shoulder and safety Greg Sprout is nursing a hip pointer.

So now coach MacPherson has to somehow pick up the pieces and put together an injury-riddled team for this Saturday's encounter against Holy Cross. Three weeks ago, this game would have been considered a sure win, but the Minutemen have fallen upon misfortune since then.

With UNH and BC invading Alumni in the near future, the Minutemen are going to have to rely on some strong performances from the backup players.

Huskies surprise; stickers lose, 2-0

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team ended their regular season on a sour note yesterday when they were shut out by Northeastern 2-0.

The loss was a surprising one, not only because the Minutewomen were expected to win, but also because they had just won five of their last six games, (their winning streak having been marred by Saturday's 2-0 loss to Springfield College).

The game began with the Minutewomen playing confidently, pinning Northeastern in their own zone and controlling play. Particularly good was the play of sweeper Gayle Hutchinson, who was a big factor in Northeastern's lack of penetration.

But after that short period of domination, the tables were turned on the Minutewomen, as Northeastern began to penetrate the UMass zone and control play. Northeastern began to get good clear shots on goal and again it was the steady play of goalkeeper Kathy Gipps that kept the first half scoreless. With Northeastern applying pressure, the UMass offense floundered and couldn't get past the 50 yard line.

Even though the Minutewomen played a flat first half, one had the feeling that they would break out of their slump in the second. But instead the half opened in unbelievable fashion, with Northeastern scoring almost two from the face-off. Northeastern took the ball into the UMass zone. With Gipps partially out of the net, Husky Sue Paylor fired a long, weak shot that rolled into the net for the first goal.

What followed was a strange, uneven half. The Minutewomen would alternate periods of pressure with periods of total ineffectiveness. Northeastern's second goal was scored by Doreen Rose after a flurry of activity in front of the UMass goal. As with the first goal, it was another surprise in a strange game that was full of surprises. Instead of completely falling apart, however, the Minutewomen began to pick up enough momentum to mount an attack as time ran out on the Minutewomen and they lost their fifth game of the season.

Coach Judith Davidson was baffled about the loss: "I don't understand why we lost the game. It's not a question of other teams beating us, except for Springfield, but rather a problem of us not playing 70 minutes of hockey. The loss is very disappointing."

Whereas in the past the team played a strong first half, then fell apart in the second, today's game seemed to be a strange combination of strong and weak play. "Our bad second half was interspersed throughout the whole game," commented Davidson.

"I thought the officiating hurt us today. It was inconsistent to say the least. It seemed that we would be penalized for the other team's mistakes," These were Coach Davidson's comments in reference to the referee's numerous whistles on the Minutewomen. Indeed, it seemed that whenever the Minutewomen did get a good break, the referee would award the ball to Northeastern. This was especially evident late in the game, when they were making frantic attempts to score.

Whatever the reasons for the defeat, the Minutewomen will begin post-season play tomorrow morning at 8:00 at Brown University against Yale. Coach Davidson will be taking her team there for that early morning game and a game later in the day to be played against the victor of another first round match.

The JVs lambasted Northeastern 5-0 in their last game of the season following varsity play. The women completed the season undefeated, playing each game in a team effort, and in a way that Coach Mary Ozdarski called "a tribute to their ability and knowledge of the game."

Right wing Pat DeCaire led the attack with two goals, left inner Fran Cornucillui had one, and Julie Hall and Laura O'Neil each added one.

"Everyone played in the game today," said Ozdarski. "Everyone has played in every game. Everyone has put everything into a team effort and just been great," she finished.

Gridders suffer from injuries

What do you think the difference is between this year's 4-3 UMass football and last year's team, which was 7-0 at the same time last year, and eventually went on to an 8-2 year?

No, the Minutemen aren't one of those teams that was hurt through graduation. As a matter of fact, with the exception of the offensive line, nearly all of last year's starters have returned.

No, the Minutemen have not significantly upgraded their schedule to the point where they are playing more powerful teams this year.

Basically, it's the same Minuteman team playing the same teams again this year. So, what's the problem this year? How can a team pull a Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde in one year?

The answer is very plain and easy. Injuries. That's right injuries. The injury bug has been haunting the Minutemen since pre-season drills and it has taken its toll on the team's performance on Saturday afternoons.

Last year the Minutemen were fortunate in that they went relatively free from injuries to key players all year long. However, when it rains it pours, and for this year's UMass football team it has been pouring injuries. Even before the season's first kickoff against Toledo, the Minutemen were bugged by injuries.

Two key members of the Minutemen defensive unit were forced to sit out in the opener against Toledo because of nagging injuries. Co-captain John Toner, a standout linebacker, was hobbled with a menacing achille's heel injury, while Steve Telander, a junior defensive standout, was sidelined with a serious knee injury.

As it has turned out, Toner was sidelined for the first half of the year, while Telander never has or will play one single minute of football for the Minutemen this season.

The situation was bad to start off with, but eventually it got sadder and worse.

Early in the season, junior defensive back Todd Holt was ordered by the doctors to call it quits for the year because of his serious knee problem. Now coach MacPherson had to switch around some personnel to fill the void created by Holt's injury.

Without hesitation, MacPherson moved split-end John Van Buren back to his old cornerback position. Everything now seemed to be under control. But hold on, the story gets grimmer.

In the Homecoming game against an 0-6 UConn team, the Minutemen suffered more than just a loss to the surprising Huskies. Van Buren suffered a fractured cheekbone and he too is now lost for the season. Then on the last play of the game, Moses Williams, the junior tight-end, was sprawled out on the field as he incurred a very painful neck injury. So now Williams became a member of the walking-wounded. Although Williams hasn't missed a game since the injury, he certainly hasn't been operating at full strength.

Hold on, I'm not finished yet, there's more.

Jazz sink Celts; Pistol Pete erupts

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Guard Pete Maravich exploded for 26 of his game-high 43 points in the second half to pace the New Orleans Jazz to a 115-97 victory over the Boston Celtics Tuesday night.

The loss was the Celtics' first after four straight wins.

Maravich's, whose 43 points were 13 above his league-leading average, hit 17 points in the first half to help the Jazz take a 48-45 lead. The Jazz had trailed 34-29 after the first period, but the Celtics could only hit 28 per cent of their shots in the next 12 minutes and the Jazz tooks a lead they never relinquished.

Maravich insured New Orleans its fourth win in six starts with 10 points in the third quarter and 16 points in the final period.

In other NBA action last night, the Milwaukee Bucks won their second game of the season when they downed the Seattle Superonics, 125-113.

Bob Dandridge led the Buck attack with 37 points and Brian Winters added 30 points in the victory. The Bucks outrebounded Seattle 35-17 in the first half as they moved to a 62-49 halftime lead and they led by as many as 20 midway through the third quarter.

Tonight the Celtics continue their traveling road show when they meet the New York Nets in the Naussau County Arena. The Nets, who lost the services of perennial all-star Julius Erving to Philadelphia, feature another ex-UMass basketball star, guard Al Skinner.

Ford concedes to Carter

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President-elect Jimmy Carter, the outsider come to power, accepted on Wednesday the hoarse congratulations and promised support of President Ford, the appointed incumbent he so narrowly vanquished to win the White House.

And so the Democrat who began by running against the Washington establishment prepared to take it over, his confidantes forecasting an activist administration that will change the face of government. Or try, for that will take the support of a new Congress, Democratic by margins as one-sided as the current House and Senate.

Carter's franchise for that mission was a narrow one.

He had 272 electoral votes, two more than a majority, with Ohio's 25 and Oregon's six still in doubt, although he was narrowly ahead in those states.

Ford had 235.

More than 79 million ballots were cast, and the switch of a relative handful in closely contested states would have been enough to tip the electoral college verdict from Carter to Ford.

Ford carried 26 states, Carter 22 and the District of Columbia. But Carter's near-solid South, his command of Democratic bastions of the Northeast, and his inroads into the Midwest added up to victory.

In the popular vote, with 99 per cent of the nation's precincts reporting, the outcome was:

Carter 40,173,854 or 51 per cent.

Ford 38,429,988 or 48 per cent.

Independent Eugene J. McCarthy 654,770 or one per cent.

Carter went home to tiny Plains, Ga., at dawn, after a tumultuous victory rally in Atlanta, and the welcome of his neighbors choked him with emotion. "I came all the way through 22 months, and I didn't get choked up until I ... " His voiced trailed off, and he embraced his wife, Rosalynn, who wept with him.

At the White House, shortly after noon, Ford spoke his concession in a voice so hoarsened by his campaign labors that he could barely speak. He had telephoned Carter in Plains for what was described as a warm, friendly conversation that touched briefly on plans for the transition to a new Democratic administration.

For lack of a voice, Ford turned to his wife, Betty, to read the concession statement, and she did, with a tight, studied smile.

"The President asked me to tell you that he telephoned President-elect Carter a short time ago and congratulated him on his victory," she said.

"The President also want to thank all those thousands of people who worked so hard on his behalf and the millions who supported him with their votes. It has been the greatest honor of my husband's life to have served his fellow Americans during two of the most difficult years in our history.

"The President urges all Americans to join him in giving your united support to President-elect Carter as he prepares to assume his new responsibilities."

News Analysis

Then she read a telegram Ford had sent Carter.

"It is apparent now that you have won our long and intense struggle for the presidency," Ford's message said. "I congratulate you on your victory."

Ford said it was time to put aside the divisions of the campaign and unite America in the pursuit of peace and prosperity.

"Although there will continue to be disagreements over the best means to use in pursuing our goals, I want to assure you that you will have my complete and whole-hearted support as you take the oath of office this January."

Then Ford gamely strode out to shake hands in the crush of reporters crowding the White House press room.

Carter will find new faces but the same Democratic commands in Congress. This was the box score:

The Senate retained its power balance of 62 Democrats and 38 Republicans. The Democratic balance includes Independent Harry F. Byrd Jr. of Virginia who votes in the Democratic caucus. All told, each party won seven seats held by the other.

In the House, Democrats won 293 seats and led for five others. Republicans won 142 seats.

The presidential edge was razor-thin in several states.

In Ohio, Carter's edge over Ford was fewer than 8,000 votes. In Oregon, it was fewer than 1,000. In Hawaii, Carter's margin was a scant 3,000. Among them, those states have 35 electoral votes, enough to have given Ford the victory that was Carter's.

So it was close, but it was clear. To underscore that judgment, New York Republicans withdrew their suit to impound ballots for a recount of the vote that delivered Carter 41 electoral votes there. At the White House, a spokesman said there would be no effort to challenge the state count Carter won by about 327,000 votes.

It was, over-all, a bad election day for incumbents in the Senate as well as the White House.

Challengers ousted five Democratic senators and four Republicans.

The Democratic casualty list: Sen. John V. Tunney of California, beaten by Republican S. I. Hayakawa; Sen. Vance Hartke of Indiana, loser to former Indianapolis Mayor Richard G. Lugar; Sen. Joseph M. Montoya of New Mexico, ousted by former astronaut Harrison H. Schmitt; Sen. Frank E. Moss of Utah, defeated by lawyer Orrin G. Hatch; and Sen. Gale McGee of Wyoming, who lost to rancher Malcolm Wallop.

The Republican losers: Sen. William E. Brock III of Tennessee, ousted by former Democratic chairman James Sasser; Sen. J. Glenn Beall of Maryland, beaten by Rep. Paul Sarbanes of Baltimore; Sen. James L. Buckley of New York, who lost to former U.S. Ambassador Daniel P. Moynihan; and Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio, defeated by former Sen. Howard Metzenbaum.

Throw aways stay in Mass.

Compiled from Wires

Massachusetts voters upheld their right to throw bottles away by a margin as thin as the top of an aluminum can.

The proposal to require a five cent or 10-cent deposit on all beverage containers save those for fruit juice and milk was defeated by less than 15,000 votes Wednesday afternoon.

Bay State voters also:

—Overwhelmingly rejected a ban on private ownership of handguns, better than 2 to 1.

—Turned back the fourth attempt in 14 years to establish a graduated income tax by a 6-5 margin.

—Refused to end discounts for large users of electricity, 3 to 1.

—Refused to establish a public power authority to own electric generating plants, 5½ to 1.

—Ratified a state equal rights amendment guaranteeing the rights of women, 3 to 2.

—Approved absentee voting for those whose religious holidays fall on an election day, 6 to 5.

—Said in an advisory vote they thought an oil refinery was a good idea, 2 to 1.

—Said in another advisory vote stores should be able to open on Sunday, 6 to 5.

Two themes emerged — the voters distrusted their government and were worried about jobs.

Proponents thought of calling for a recount, but they could not unless the difference between the two results was less than 0.5 per cent of the votes cast.

"What it tells you is that out-of-state big business bought an election with deceptive and misleading ads," said Rep. Lois Pines, (D-Newton), a backer of the bill.

"I think when the final figures come in, it will show they spent between $2 million and $3 million. The last minute media blitz was phenomenal."

Asked to explain the defeat in light of victories in Maine and Michigan, a spokesperson for one organization backing the prohibition said, "There was a tremendous anti-bottle bill campaign, well over a million dollars."

"We're going to sit tight and, assuming we've lost, try to rest and tackle it again, perhaps on the federal level," said Bob Murphy of the Sierra Club.

Art North, spokesperson for the Committee to Protect Jobs and the Use of Convenience Containers, said the voters were concerned about jobs.

North, whose group had spent $1.2 million several days before the election, much of it contributed by out-of-state bottlers, said, "We beat a formidable array of opponents."

The favorable equal rights vote had been expected. A chief ERA backer, Elaine Kendall of Cambridge, said the vote meant "human issues still count." A principal opponent, attorney Margaret Mahoney of Winchester, said she was furious over the loss because the other side was well organized "and we weren't."

Sheriff John Buckley of Middlesex County, a leader of the People vs. Handguns organization which put the question on the ballot, saw his defeat as a manifestation of an anti-government movement.

Voters "certainly want less government interference in lives and less spending. They saw this question as doing all those things."

Buckley said the opponents' argument that the state could not afford to pay for turned-in weapons "was a significant factor."

On taxes, the man who organized the defense of the present system, Edward F. King of Roxbury, crowed: "I'm ecstatic."

"This victory is especially significant because in the previous three times the graduated income tax has been on the ballot, proponents have claimed that we bought the election with corporate funds," King said.

This year, the law banned contributions from business. A representative of the "Fair Share" group said her organization expected to lose the fight for so-called "flat rates" for consumers of electricity.

"We attribute our loss to the job loss and price hike arguments and we still maintain these are scare tactics. In these economic times, these are very scary arguments," said Alice Peal of Waltham.

Mailings by universities to their staffs and alumni were "significant" in the defeat of the question, she said.

A spokesman for the Council for Employment and Economic Energy Use, which spent $450,000 opposing flat rates, said the margin of victory was greater than expected.

"It shows that though flat rates have superficial appeal, the voter understood there was no benefit to him or to the economy," said Leon Charkoudian.

The other question on electricity, to establish a state power authority to own generating plants and sell electricity at wholesale, was defeated by the widest margin.

John Stevens, a vice president of Massachusetts Electric Co., said the victory was "primarily the result of long, hard hours of work by a group of dedicated employees."

Power companies throughout the state mobilized their work forces to work against the question. A principal argument was that the state could not be trusted to run any large enterprise.

The office of U.S. Rep. Michael F. Harrington, the prime mover in getting the question on the ballot, did not answer the telephone.

7 students arraigned on larceny charges

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

Six UMass students were arraigned on charges of larceny under $100 and given continuances while a seventh was found guilty after he objected to paying $100 in court costs yesterday in Hampshire District Court.

"We must stop this rash of larceny on the UMass campus," Judge Luke F. Ryan said. "If we can't stop it today, then we will have to start giving out jail sentences."

All seven students were initially given continuances and asked if they could pay the court fees that same day. After David M. Silbert, a freshman from Pierpont dorm, objected to paying the fee, he was found guilty of petty larceny. Silbert, who had admitted under oath to taking the merchandise without paying for it, said he would seek counsel and appeal the finding.

Genevieve Keller, the assistant clerk of court, said yesterday that students are given special consideration because of their age and the fact that they are attending school. She said that the large number of larcenies on campus might be the reason why the assessment for court fees was much higher yesterday than the $25 to $50 that Ryan usually charges.

Neither Ellis Landset nor Jim Starr of the Legal Services Office, attorneys for the defendants, were pleased with the fee assessments.

Landset said that he could understand Ryan's reasons for higher than usual costs. Starr said "The court is continuing to follow just disposition for first offenders."

The students given continuances were Steven Acerbi, Carlos R. Vegas, Laurel J. Goss, Wendell G. Kearns, Joseph C. Mellow and Michael G. Perkins.

The items stolen from the University Store ranged in price from $3.48 to $24.36 and included an umbrella, clothing, sunglasses, greeting cards, art supplies and a Parker pen and refill.

The maximum penalties for petty larceny are a one year jail sentence, a $300 fine or both.

Play premieres in FAC tonight

By MICHAEL SIMONS

"I feel like a spectator!" Rosenkrantz shouts to Guildenstern not knowing what to do with Hamlet, in one scene from Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern are Dead which opens tonight in the Rand Theater of the Fine Arts Center.

Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern, two minor characters from Shakespeare's play "Hamlet, who were supposed to deliver up Hamlet to the King of England to be killed. Instead they are transformed into tragic heroes in this play written by Tom Stoppard.

Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern are Dead is the story of Hamlet as seen through the bewildered eyes of two courtiers. They never understand what it is all about until it is too late and then almost glad that it's over, go off to England to be killed themselves.

Rosenkrantz and Guildenstern are Dead won critical acclaim when it opened on Broadway in 1967. Stoppard was heralded as one of the most foremost playwrights of our time, by critics on both sides of the Atlantic.

Gary Kapian, who starred in Miss Julie and appeared in Guys and Dolls and The Cradle Will Rock, portrays Rosenkrantz. Robert Tupper who appeared last year in The Cavern and the Cradle Will Rock co-stars as Guildenstern.

The play is being directed by Harry Mahnken who has directed John Brown's Body and Woyzeck as well as appearing in Guys and Dolls and the Cradle will Rock at UMass.

Other members of the cast include, Rick Martin as the player, Paris Finley as Hamlet, Kathie Lynn Baldwin as Gertrude, Francis Pichanick as Polonius, Kim Alderwick as Ophelia and Robert Mahnken as Alfred.

The three act comedy set on a unique stage, starts tonight and will give performances Nov. 5, 6, 11, 12, and 13th. Curtain time is at 8 p.m. Tickets are still available at the University Box Office.

Cashing facility must move

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

William F. Field, dean of students and acting Campus Center director, appeared before the Undergraduate Student Senate last night to discuss the Music Library relocation proposal.

In other business, the Senate moved to send a congratulatory telegram to Jimmy Carter on his presidential victory and a motion to appoint Steve MacAulay as senator from the Greek area was rescinded because of his poor attendance record. It was also brought to the attention of the Senate that its constitution may not have been accepted by the UMass Board of Trustees.

Field said that the check cashing facility must be moved from its present location because adequate security cannot be maintained and it offers poor working conditions. According to Field, the Music Library was suggested as a new location for the check cashing facility because of its security advantages and its accessibility to campus businesses.

During the discussion, Field was asked if any location other than the Music Library could be used for the check cashing facility to which he replied affirmatively.

Field said that the lower level of the Campus Center could be used or if the check cashing facility was not to be replaced, a portion of the Campus Center barber shop could be appropriated as a cash handling facility. However, Field said, the check cashing facility should be replaced since it is for student use.

Field said that a decision must be made whether to appropriate an area for check cashing and cash handling or for cash handling only.

According to Field, a cash handling facility would require considerably less space than that needed for both cash handling and check cashing.

The present eight track system used in the Music Library must be replaced because of its poor condition. He said that it would be much less expensive to replace the system with a cassette system which could be portable. If this were done, said Field, the Cape Cod Lounge could be closed off, renovated, and used as a Music Library and study room.

Some senators voiced a concern that present study space could be taken away from students if the Music Library were converted and the Cape Cod Lounge renovated.

"We're not going to reduce anything. I know that," said Field.

He added that the ultimate decision of whether to appropriate space for a new check cashing facility or for just a cash handling area would by made by the Campus Center Board of Governors and himself.

Stuart Belkin, a student senator and spokesperson for the Music Study Lounge Committee, opposed the Music Library relocation proposal.

"Due to the fact that there is alternative space for check cashing which will be feasible to both students and administrators, we suggest this space be used and keep the Music Study Lounge in its present location. Furthermore, we support the Cape Cod Lounge being used as additional study space," said Belkin.

Dean Whaley expresses optimism for the future of Stockbridge

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge Student Senate voted unanimously last night to support the keeping of the Music Room and Student Union Colonial Lounge as a study area. A letter will be drafted and sent to Dean William F. Fields, dean of students.

Dean Russel S. Whaley, newly-appointed dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources (CFNR), spoke earlier in the meeting expressing much optimism for the future of Stockbridge and the College of Food and Natural Resources.

Whaley cited "increased student numbers CFNR, dealing with current issues, and issues in which legislatives care" as reasons for his outlook.

The major problem facing the agriculture school is "the lack of faculty, particularly in the Plant and Soil Science dept.", said Whaley. This problem might be solved by taking a "new look on how to teach Stockbridge courses." Use people who are in the field; get "practitioners involved in teaching courses," he said.

Regarding the budget, Whaley estimated the Stockbridge budget to be down 10-15 per cent from that of 1975, accounting for inflationary factors. He believes that Stockbridge's funds were cut more than other schools' and Stockbridge's chances for a larger budget are increased.

Whaley stated that the College of Food and Natural Resources had an underlying part in compiling statistics for the passage of the Land Assessment Act. This act affects the real estate development of land use in the state.

"A whole lot is done (by Stockbridge, but not on the front line," stated Whaley.

Whaley was previously the Dean of the School of Natural Resources at Colorado State University for four years before holding his present position at Stockbridge. He has been actively working as the Dean of the College of Food and Natural Resources for three months.

Brian Kelly, president of the Stockbridge Senate, stressed a need for more committee work and emphasis by senators. He said he saw no reason for a senator to hold his postion if he - she is unwilling to fulfill his - her job.

Trustees vote on union position

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees discussed the policy of collective bargaining and voted on a position concerning faculty unionization at their monthly meeting yesterday in Amherst.

According to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, December first and second have been set for voting of faculty unionization for faculty members at both the Amherst and Boston campuses.

"There are 2000 members in the Amherst-Boston unit," he said. "The unit represents all professors, part-time faculty, librarians staff assistants, and staff associates. When the voting does take place, the administration must insure the largest number of persons voting, so that 100 persons would not decide the election for all."

"Collective bargaining requires the majority of those voting."

"The obligation on campus is for the administration to provide as much information as possible so that when the members do vote, they will know what they are voting for," Bromery said.

The Board has supported the position of the administration in opposing collective bargaining.

Chairman Joseph P. Healy said, "Collective bargaining might put the Board in an adversary position. The issue here on campus is whether or not a union should be voted in. If given the choice, we lean toward governance rather than collective bargaining."

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and two local chapters of the Massachusetts Teachers' Association (MTA) are participating in the December election.

Paul M. Cronin, student trustee said, "A vote such as this deserves serious consideration. We must realize that students are greatly affected by it."

The Board also voted to approve and adopt the Governance Document for the UMass Medical School at Worcester, to accept the Bus Storage Facility, the Addition to the Infirmary, the Graduate Research Center II, and the Fine Arts Center as completed in accordance with plans and specifications. All votes were approved.

Chancellor Roger Bulger of UMass Worcester said that the accredidation of the Worcester Medical School has become official.

Devlin to speak at student rally

By KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

A rally sponsored by the National Student Coalition Against Racism (NSCAR), on Nov. 19, in Hayden Hall at Boston University, will feature among other speakers, Bernadette Devlin-McAlisky, the fiery Irish revolutionary.

The rally is part of the third National Student Conference Against Racism scheduled for the weekend of Nov. 19-21.

Also speaking at the rally will be: Robert Allen, the editor of Black Scholar Magazine; Thomas Atkins, president of the Boston chapter of the NAACP; Clyde Bellecourt from the American Indian Movement; and Maceo Dixon from NSCAR.

The purpose of the conference is to "bring together student activists and people interested in these problems and to call on all student organizations for a march or individual actions on March 21," said David Maybury from NSCAR's Boston office.

The topic of the rally is "200 years of Racism is Enough," and it will begin at 7:00 p.m. on the 19th.

As part of the workshops against racism, there will be a panel discussion, Nov. 20, on South Africa. Some of the panel members will be: Herbert Vilakazi, a professor from Rutgers University, who was an eyewitness to the Sowetho rebellion in South Africa; Jeff Bagwa, a member of the South African Student's Organization, who was expelled from South Africa in 1974 for his role in a student rebellion; and Courtland Cox, the Secretary General of the Six Pan-Africanist Congress.

The NSCAR is active in local issues of racism, such as the Boston busing struggle. "We are the only major group besides the NAACP that has consistently defended desegregation," said Maybury.

Maybury saw the previous conferences as fulfilling a relevant need. "Each one represented an important gathering of students."

News Briefs

Trend breaks

BOSTON [AP] — In the stores and bars of South Boston you can still find yellowing photographs of John F. Kennedy on the walls, but the community that once gave its heart to any Irish Catholic Democrat went Republican.

And the reason many people gave for breaking with generations of tradition is one — busing.

In the state that gave Jimmy Carter a 56 per cent margin of victory, Ward 6 in Boston went for President Ford with 56 per cent and Ward 7 gave Ford 52 per cent. Both wards make up much of what is called Southie.

South Boston, which had swelled with pride in helping to elect the nation's first Irish Catholic president, refused to give another victory to the slain President's younger brother, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

Bad guys win

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The swirl of publicity stirred by a torrent of scandals involving members of Congress abruptly halted a Utah lawmaker's career but left many others unscathed in the general election.

Utah voters showed their ire and rejected the re-election bid of Democrat Allan Howe, a freshman congressman convicted of trying to buy sex on a Salt Lake City street.

In Michigan, however, Rep. Donald Riegle, the most recent victim of an embarrassing disclosure, about an affair with his secretary, was elected to fill the Senate seat being vacated by Phillip A. Hart.

Voters in California gave Rep. Robert Leggett, a Democrat, another term in office despite disclosure he had two children by a mistress who had been his secretary.

Women lag

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Although the nation's second woman governor was elected in the 1976 election, women candidates made a lackluster showing in most statewide and congressional races.

Women political leaders were disappointed by the poor showing. "We're very sad about it," Fredi Wechsler of the National Women's Political Caucus said yesterday.

She blamed it primarily on a habit in the political parties of nominating women to oppose virtually unbeatable incumbents. "We have to work harder to get the party to slate women in open seats where they can win," she said.

The brightest note for women's rights advocates was in two statewide referenda on the Equal Rights Amendment. Massachusetts voters ratified a state ERA and Colorado refused to repeal their endorsement of a national amendment.

Stocks dip

NEW YORK [AP] — The stock market declined broadly yesterday as the traditionally conservative Wall Street community absorbed the news of Jimmy Carter's victory in the presidential election.

But most of the drop occurred in the first hour of the session, and late in the day prices managed to recoup some of their early losses.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, down some 16 points less than an hour after the opening, closed with a 9.56 loss at 956.53.

Losers outpaced gainers by close to a 4-1 margin on the New York State Exchange.

Brokers said the early selling wave stemmed mainly from an exodus of traders who had bought stocks last week on the theory that President Ford might score an upset election victory and spark a market rally.

Experts lose

[AP] — The experts predicted that Americans were toc apathetic to vote this year. But the experts reckoned without the determination of the U.S. public.

"There was so much darn talk about apathy, that people decided not to be apathetic," said one politician in Kentucky, explaining the heavy turnout in his state.

On a nationwide basis, the turnout was above the level predicted by the experts, although it was below the record 62.8 per cent of the voting age population who balloted in the 1960 race between Richard Nixon and John F. Kennedy.

As of midday, the News Election Service reported 78,919,663 votes cast for President Ford, Jimmy Carter, independent Eugene McCarthy and American Independent party candidate Lester Maddox. Totals for other minor party candidates were not immediately available.

That figure, based on nearly complete voting reports in most areas, represented 52.6 per cent of the voting age population, estimated at 150 million persons. And the number was certain to grow as complete returns were tallied.

Dollars first

NEW YORK [AP] — The national agenda of voters who elected Jimmy Carter is dominated by pocketbook concerns which mirror the strengths of the next president's campaign themes.

An Associated Press nationwide election day poll asked voters to identify the one or two issues of most concern to them personally. Slightly more than 41 per cent of those who voted for Carter cited jobs and unemployment.

Just under 41 per cent named inflation and high prices, and 17 per cent said tax reform.

The only noneconomic concern pushing into this top rank was trust in government, cited by 19 per cent of Carter voters and another principal thrust of his campaign against President Ford.

Stepping backwards

While the presidential debates and sparring were winding down last week, the debating and sparring was on the rise here.

It was graphically pointed out to anyone who saw Dee Greaze in the Bluewall, the Student Senate in the Campus Center or Eldridge Cleaver speak, that one of the things students of higher education institutions pick up is partisanship and the stubbornness of politicians. There were a lot of people at the three mentioned events who were convinced that the opinions they hold are the only opinions that the majority of Americans should hold.

UMass was a mini-America the night of Wednesday, October 27, there's no doubt about it.

The people who went to see Eldridge Cleaver at his seminar and his speech found themselves in the position of attempting to pass judgement on the past actions of Eldridge Cleaver and a whole generation of years ago.

And the student senators found themselves reduced to political squabbling and partisan infighting in attempting to find someone who could take responsible charge of the Finance Committee.

And the drunks in the Bluewall shed their respectable, college educated, socially aware demeanors and proceeded to make complete assholes of themselves while three people attempted to present an admittedly unorchestrated but none-the-less planned skit mocking the presidential election race. Something I thought just about all students could accept and applaud.

The intoxicated few and the hecklers in the Bluewall just didn't seem to be able to take any more mockery of the presidency. Unfortunately, I don't believe that their feelings were rooted in concern about the eroding image of the president as leader or because they so believed in the candidacy of James Carter that it deserved no mockery. It seemed instead to be rooted in complete disgust with the politicians and the politics of the United States. A valid feeling, I'll admit, but not so overwhelming that people should shed their skins of civil behavior and humane concern for people involved with any issue or process (for after all, people dispute issues and the manifestations of issues — processes — more than anything else).

Couched in the shadows of the Bluewall and the security that accompanies intoxication, many let it all hang out and unfortunately rejected the civility they may have picked up here.

While some were wrong in attempting to control the questions that were asked and answered during the seminar preceeding Mr. Cleaver's speech, the questioners were just as wrong during both the seminar and the question and answer period after Cleaver's speech in their attempts to establish once and for all the rightness or wrongness or wrongness of the actions of Eldridge Cleaver years ago. The things Mr. Cleaver said and did years ago are more or less representative of many others who thought and acted in the same manner. And in no way, shape, or form could the questioners justify or condemn Cleaver's actions after so much time. You can't change history, yet it seemed to be important to many people to try.

And at the Senate meeting the usually progressive Senate regressed into factionalism. A legitimate attempt was made by the powers that be to institute co-chairs of the Finance Committee that, by all indications, would do a damn good job in serving the students of this university. However, petty concerns and charges were brought up for hours before the Senate was finally able to confirm the appointment of the two students.

Partisanship and politics was more evident than ever before in recent memory in the Senate. The senators lapsed into the world of political self-preservation and forgot about the services they are supposed to be providing to students. Though cooperation in any political body is a rather astounding goal to attain, it had seemed that the senate attained the status in the past — only to lose it last week.

All in all, people became so intoxicated — with their pasts, their liquor or their politics — that they lost much of what they have strived for and attained here at UMass.

I've never before seen so many people step backwards in one night. I can only hope I don't see it happen again.

Through a maze

Eldridge Cleaver didn't have much to say that was enlightening or earthshattering for many people when he spoke in the Ballroom to a crowd that was both jeering and respectful, and as Max Roach observed "90 per cent white and 10 per cent black." It's too bad that more of the Third World community didn't attend, instead of boycotting the evening speech because his politics didn't jive anymore.

The question period was the most energetic and stimulating segment of the whole evening. Otherwise Cleaver seemed almost apologetic, mellow and sometimes timid. His attitudes, mannerisms and rhetoric did not have the vigor and strength I once enjoyed in his pre-exile writings. He reminded me of a Presidential candidate, seldom answering questions directly, but rather taking us through a maze.

Most people didn't know that Mr. Cleaver was a convicted rapist and that he served nine years on this charge. It all started to develop when he was in prison on a dope charge and a guard tore up the centerfold that hung in his cell. He told Cleaver that black was fine, but white was verboten; Cleaver began to realize the induced affinity that he as a black man had for white women. He relished stamping on white womanhood as a part of the total rejection of white superiority. Since woman was man's prize possession, what better way to take revenge than to victimize her? Thus after two and a half years in Soledad, he concluded "as a matter of principle, it was of paramount importance to have an antagonistic, ruthless attitude toward white women."

On parole, he began by practicing on black women, in the ghettos and when his talents had come to a head, sought out the white prey. After 11 months he was apprehended and spent the next nine years in jail.

The crowd oohed and aawed when I asked him if he had learned his lesson. Many people attacked me for bringing up the subject, one which Eldridge would probably have liked to avoid, saying that it was unnecessary to humiliate the man. I could only think of the humiliation a woman experiences when she is raped.

Others condemned me for bringing up information that was old hat and irrelevant to his politics of today, and as Cleaver said, "I was young then." Curious that in his older years, he has marketed what many call 'penis pants' — trousers with built-in supporters to accentuate and flaunt the male crotch. Eldridge went on to explain that his pants heightened the aesthetic value of the male body by increasing awareness of the contours of the male.

How would Mr. Cleaver feel about the production of 'pussy pants'? Didn't he say, "I want to say to all the ladies, and I remind you that we're not playing games, that a very serious situation exists. You have the power to bring a squeeking halt to a lot of things that are going on now, and we call that pussy power. We say that political power, revolutionary power, grows out of the lips of a pussy."

If knowledge is power, and penis pants are made to know the male body, was Cleaver trying to say discreetly 'power to the penis' as one listener questioned?

One thing is obvious that, even after seven years in exile, after seven years of political scrutinizing and contemplating, Cleaver still has not fully grasped the existance, importance and potential of the women's movement.

Perception

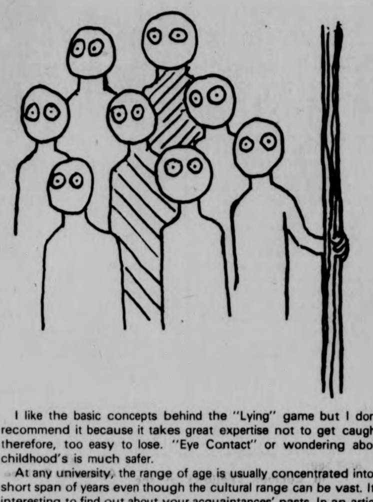
The other day, I was waiting for a bus with a lot of other people. Ever fascinated by the human species, I began to wonder about the lives being led by these souls that I knew nothing about.

Phase one of perceiving another person is usually determined by an intuitive judgement of dress and demeanor. Sometimes I follow this up by trying to imagine what a particular person looked like as a child or will look like in old age. The goal, of course, in this game of perception, is to embrace another person with the mind; not to the extent of the Vulcan mind fusion, but as close as you can get without physical or verbal contact.

Another game for bus or subway I made up is called, "Eye Contact". The rules are simple: you stare at a person, right in the eyes, but you can't let them see you doing it. If they catch you then you lose a point. If you catch someone looking at you, you gain a point. The skill comes in when you have to determine the fraction of a second to look away before the person you're looking at catches you.

I read a story in the New Yorker about this guy that made up a very intricate game of lying to strangers. The lies had to be about very inconsequential subjects. For example, he'd tell a stranger in a restaurant that he'd just received a letter from his sister in Chicago and she was doing very well in her new job as secretary in an insurance firm. Of course he didn't have a sister.

The goal of this game in the story was not to make a lasting impression on the subject but to create an existance solely on the plane of the mundane. The story ended with the guy, or someone else that he had introduced to the game, getting caught in the web of fabrications and losing.



I like the basic concepts behind the "Lying" game but I don't recommend it because it takes great expertise not to get caught; therefore, too easy to lose. "Eye Contact" or wondering about childhood's is much safer.

At any university, the range of age is usually concentrated into a short span of years even though the cultural range can be vast. It's interesting to find out about your acquaintances' pasts. In an article about his new film about children, Truffaut talked about children who have a difficult youth being better armed to confront adult life. He called it "a kind of law of Compensation".

There is a photographer that went around New York City asking children to act out their dreams and nightmares. "The Dream Collector" is a fascinating account of the subliminal perceptions of childhood. Arthur Tress (the photographer), was very sensitive in his portrayal of the children.

As I approach a quarter of a century, I am cognizant of the child that I was being still an integral part. I recommend in perceiving an acquaintance, that you should be mindful of the child that also makes up the adult you're relating to. And, oh yes, one more thing; Happy Birthday.

Grad students misinterpreted

To the Editor:

I am writing to protest a serious misquotation that was attributed to me in the November 2 Collegian.

It is true that I did state at the meeting for TA's that all regulations concerning TA contracts were frozen at this time, because the GSEU is currently in the middle of hearings before the State Labor Relations Commission, and mucking around with them might in some circumstances be very unkosher. For a similar reason, it is very awkward [although not forbidden] for officials to make public statements concerning changing those regulations, as of now.

I did not, nor have I ever said, implied, speculated, dreamed, imagined, or otherwise entertained the idea that a union would freeze regulations governing TA contracts.

On the contrary, I support the Graduate Student Employees Union precisely because it would open up those regulations to change through direct bargaining between graduate student employees and the Administration. This is something the Administration has never permitted its own "official" graduate student voice, the Grad Senate, to do.

Further, to my great surprise, there was nothing said about the need for the graduate students and TA's to organize themselves for protection, which was the theme of my statement.

The Graduate Senate does have some facilities for "hassling back", if you feel you have been messed over, but this would only be a short-run alternative.

I urge all TA's and RA's to attend the meeting on Thursday, November 4, of the GSEU in room 620, Thompson Hall, at 8 p.m. It's for their own protection.

Michael R. Federow, President
Graduate Student Senate

To the Editor:

In Tuesday's Collegian Mike Federow, president of the Graduate Student Senate was quoted as saying that the Graduate Student Employees Union [GSEU] organizing effort would "freeze all regulations governing TA contracts." Beyond the fact that it seems that Mr. Federow was misinterpreted, GSEU wants to correct the impression conveyed in that statement that our organizing efforts are in any way geared to preserving the status quo.

GSEU is organizing precisely in order to guarantee that Graduate employees on campus have a direct role in defining the terms and conditions of our employment and education at the University. It is the administration's unwillingness to sit down and negotiate with us over these terms which has forced us to pursue the legal route of having hearings before the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission [MLRC].

The tremendous growth of undergraduate and graduate programs in the past 15 years at UMass has led to graduate student employes performing essential teaching and research services for the University. At the same time we have remained a rather "cheap" labor pool for carrying out these functions. The importance of graduate assistants is indicated in the recently released statement of the "mission and goals" of the University where it says that "graduate assistants make it possible to offer more individualized instruction" to undergraduates, particularly freshmen and sophomores. Speaking of the importance of maintaining the University's "first rate research capacity" in the same document, the University must recognize that this capacity would be severly undercut without the work performed by graduate research assistants.

While GSEU welcomes any initiatives by the University to make teaching assistants more aware of services and resources available on campus to better prepare them for their employment responsibilities, we find the timing of last Monday's "TA Welcome" rather interesting. While Dean Chappell told TAs Monday of the importance of their role in the University, the administration is arguing before the MLRC that graduate assistants' work is "superfluous" to the functioning of the institution. The University is clearly resisting the right of graduate student employees to guarantee that they will have a direct voice in determining the terms and conditions of their employment through direct negotiations. GSEU finds the two-faced position of the University administration dishonest and manipulative.

Off-campus... we got ya

By PAUL LOGUE, JR.

Living off campus, wow, what a difference. Instead of having to open the window to escape the blasting heat, we are calking them to seal inside the precious warmth generated by the slow, burning wood stove. Ah, the smell of ash, a keen hardwood, filling the air with its earthy scent. Surrounding the stove are easy chairs to relax and read. The crackle of the fire the only sound besides your own breathing.

Off-campus. Instead of running out of your room ten minutes before class and just making the hand-out, it's getting up an hour earlier, moving around in the chill of the morning to awaken yourself, making your lunch amidst gulps of coffee, warming up the truck and being late, usually.

You don't have the time to go home between classes anymore, so certain areas become your second home: Earth Foods, the couches in the Campus Center, the gym, the bottom of the Campus, the bus stops. Each place has its own meaning which is precious to you now, but you can remember when you didn't give a hoot about the prices of food in the Hatch. The dining commons took care of your stomach. If not then send out for a pizza.

The dorm parties are wild and wicked, for the janitors. Now as you wake up to the stale smell of a cooked party, you know that you have to get up and do some hard work to restore your home into a habitable house again. But where are all those beer drinkers now when you really need them? Oh, boy.

Instead of spending Saturday lounging about, playing frisbee or B-ball, you know that if you don't get to work on chopping another cord of wood then you're going to freeze in bed come January. Then it will be too late to do the job with the comfort of the truck, driving up to the riverbank and loading the logs directly in the back. The snow will hamper your every movement so, get out there and start chopping.

Off-campus. The luxury of your own bedroom, with nobody to bother when you stumble in drunk, or to persuade to sleep in the lounge while the two of you snuggle together without any interference. Finally a place that you can call your own without getting kicked out during holiday periods, fire drills and infectious diseases.

Sitting around the supper table and sharing the bread, shooting the breeze and joking about a new face, recently shaved.

Off-campus. Once you try it, we got ya.

Power that Unites

By HOB HENEREY

Today we can find the perfect enlightened power-point between renewal-thru-justice and compassion-thru-wisdom.

The three outer planets of the Solar System are Uranus, Neptune, and Pluto. Together they represent the bridge between routine existence and a totally transformed life. At this time these three planets are in adjacent signs of the Zodiac.

Uranus symbolizes the sudden breakthrough of the extraordinary and enlightening truth that can set us apart from Saturn's 'status quo' mind-sets; it is in Scorpio, urging us to break out of fixed patterns of relating and fixed concepts of sexuality, death, the life-force, healing, and mutual productivity.

Neptune, the planet after Uranus, symbolizes dissolving our sense of apartness and unique self-hood in the waters of the universal ocean of life; it is in Sagittarius, urging us to dissolve what we thought was wisdom and reach out for the higher wisdom which sees the subtle inter-connections and has compassion for all life.

Pluto, the final planet (in the known system), symbolizes the final turning-point, the new beginning found in the end, the rebirth of individuality after all ego is dissolved and all karma is paid; it is in Libra, urging us to plumb the depths of our relationships and to find a new beginning in the elimination of all imbalance and injustice.

These three trends represent the leading edge of our humanity-wide evolutionary change. They will continue for quite a while. Meanwhile, every year, the Sun and Mercury and Venus pass over these planets, while Mars, Jupiter and Saturn take progressively longer, and the Moon passes over every month.

The Sun, symbol of power and purpose, just passed over Uranus on Saturday, and Mercury, symbol of analysis and communication, passed the same point on Tuesday, election day. Have we moved collectively to re-affirm the status-quo or have we taken the chance of Uranian change?

Either way, today the Sun in Scorpio will be exactly midway between Pluto-in-Libra and Neptune-in-Sagittarius — exactly 30 degrees behind Neptune at 3:47 and 30 degrees ahead of Pluto at 8:49. This means that if we can begin to act more compassionately we can begin to build a new sense of justice and proportion into our relationships. The enlightened viewpoint takes account of both justice and mercy. One without the other is inhuman.

Minor changes thru the day: 8 a.m.-2 p.m., we may feel so emotionally secure that we leap before we look; 11 p.m.-2 a.m., work or play together goes well if we confront our own selfish viewpoint.

Meanwhile, in between, from 2 p.m. to 11 p.m., look for the power that unites.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Thursday, November 4 — Born today, you are what is known as a "quick study." You learn at an exceptional rate — and you are fortunate enough to be able to retain for very long periods everything that you learn. Further, whatever you once learn becomes more and more understandable to you with the passage of time. Thus what may have been purely memorized material at one time ultimately becomes material thoroughly absorbed and completely comprehended. Indeed, you are sometimes surprised to discover that things you learned by rote as a child -- difficult, abstract principles, for example -- take on vital, true meaning for you as an adult without any conscious cogitation on your part.

Because you will take the trouble to get to know yourself and your needs first of all, you will never be in a position of failing to understand others for lack of understanding yourself. The human predicament is one close to your heart and mind, for you thoroughly realize your own involvement in it. As a result, you can truly sympathize with those who claim to be mere victims of their own human frailties and fears, for they are frailties and fears you too possess, and which you too must overcome.

You are a highly stable individual. You feel things deeply, but you do not allow your emotions to run away with you. This does not mean, however, that you do not take your feelings into account when making up your mind about things; indeed, not to do so would be to counter all those good results that come of trying to understand yourself.

Friday, November 5

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — A coy mood may cause you to behave in ways that will serve you ill. Don't allow yourself excuses you won't accept from others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This morning's setback must not be construed as a tragedy. You can make up for lost time at a later date.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Apparent aloofness of another may be just that -- apparent. Make an effort to get to the bottom of a difficult situation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Don't pretend dislike when your real feelings are quite the opposite. Children make it easy for you to be friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Extend the hand of friendship to one who has heretofore opposed you on the employment scene. A good day for taking stock of yourself.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your own image of yourself is worth preserving, especially now, when self-esteem may be on shaky ground.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A delicate business deal requires that you remain both mentally alert and absolutely calm. Don't give in to panic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Honest enthusiasm may amuse others, but it can make for you the difference between success and failure. Don't pretend to be blase.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — The crumbling of a close personal relationship may be frightening. If you hurry, however, you may save the situation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — The quick-thinking Leo makes it possible for himself and friends to have their cake and eat it too. Think yourself out of difficulty.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Minor difficulties must not be allowed to upset you unduly. This is no time to give in to panic when a bit of calm could right the financial boat.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — If you will state your wishes clearly, you may well have them granted. Don't go unprepared into the camp of the "enemy."

UConn vs. R.I. for YanCon title

Like the last two years, Connecticut and Rhode Island prepare for the season-ending finale, this year scheduled for Nov. 13 at Storrs, CT at 10 a.m.

Connecticut, New England's No. 1 rated team and the only Division I team undefeated, will be heavy favorites to beat Rhode Island, but the Rams have been in that underdog position before. Two years ago, the Rams upset UConn, 1-0, and last year they held the Huskies to a 1-1 tie, giving the crown outright to Vermont.

Connecticut and Rhode Island are both 5-0 in the Conference, while UConn is 13-0-2 overall and Rhody is 7-3-0.

Two forwards and a goalie were named to the final weekly all-star Conference team, led by Rhode Island's Dan McCrudden (Kings Park, NY) who had two goals in the 2-0 at New Hampshire Oct. 29. It was McCrudden's third consecutive game in the Conference that he has scored two goals (earlier against Massachusetts and Boston University). Also tabbed for honors were Connecticut's Jim Evans (Simsbury, CT) who tallied the winning goal against Springfield (1-0) with only nine minutes left in the game, and Connecticut's Bob Ross (Norwalk, CT) who picked up his 11th shutout of the season last week. The junior netminder picked up 19 saves in three games last week, including nine in the Springfield win. It was Ross' third selection to the Yankee Conference weekly all-star team.

examination of the daily lives of poor whites in a deteriorating urban setting. The message of the film is that the only way these people can get anything done is by getting together with their neighbors.

Redevelopment is a cinematic tool for placing local issues in the larger context of national priorities. The film examines "urban renewal" and its effects on poor and working peoples' neighborhoods as the residents are displaced when luxury apartment complexes are built.

Mt. Holyoke hosts campus orientation

No way for a student to choose a college could be more satisfying than by visiting and judging the campus in action. It is just for this purpose that Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley, is inviting its alumnae to bring interested high school students to their annual "Bring Your Daughter to Mount Holyoke Day" to be held today.

The program of the day will be varied, to meet the interests of everyone involved. The alumnae will be given an opportunity to become acquainted with some of what is new at Mount Hooklyoke, while the students will be taken on tours of the campus, offered lunch in one of the dorms, and allowed to visit various academic departments. Also, a panel of undergraduates will lead a discussion for both the high school students and their alumnae hostesses.

All high school students are invited to attend, and if they don't know a Mount Holyoke alumna to bring them, they can be matched up with one by contacting local Mount Holyoke alumnae or by calling the Admissions Office at the College, 413-538-2023.

Registration will this morning at 9:30 a.m. and there will be a charge of $5.00 per alumna to help defray the costs of the day.

Hellova win over Springfield 2-1

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Even though the UMass soccer team has been having its troubles this year, one thing it has never done is quit.

Yesterday, after trailing Springfield College 1-0 at halftime, the booters came back with second half goals by Joel Mascolo and Mark Abbott, to post their third victory of the season 2-1 in a game played on an overcast afternoon at Boyden Field. UMass is now 3-8-1 on the year, while Springfield's mark fell to 5-8-1.

"They've been having a tough year, but anytime you beat Springfield College, it's a hell of a win," said UMass coach Russ Kidd.

The Chiefs took a 1-0 lead in the first half on a strange play. Joe Yung took a quick direct kick which bounced in front of the UMass goal where Sal Ferraine knocked it by goalie Mark Hanks.

The Minutemen had trouble getting their offense generated in the first half. Raffi Donoyan had the best scoring chances for UMass in the first half, but the Chief defense prevailed.

Things picked up for the Minutemen early in the second half. Mike Parsons, who was recently switched to the front line from his fullback position, fired a drive which hit the top crossbar.

"We looked so sour for a while, then the guys just came alive," said Kidd. "We're substituting a lot and shifting from a 4-2-4 to a 4-3-3."

The Minutemen tied the game at 14:50 of the second half on an unassisted goal by Joel Mascolo. Mascolo made the play by bringing the ball upfield where he passed to Mike Parsons, who passed the ball, but it deflected off a Springfield player and came back to Mascolo for the tying goal.

"Moving Parsons to the front line paid off," said Kidd. "He set up that play."

The winning goal came at 22:59 when Mark Abbott broke in with Joel Mascolo and scored. Larry Aronson started the play with a pass to halfback Bob McChesney, who got the ball to Abbott, who was breaking in with Mascolo. Springfield's goalie came out, but Abbott's shot got by him and just trickled into the goal. Mascolo followed the ball in just to make sure.

UMass fullback Mark Vassaloti heads the ball earlier this year, and UMass came out ahead yesterday, 2-1, over Springfield. (Staff photo by Jim Higgins)

The Chiefs tried to tie the game, but the Minutemen defense was equal to the task. Springfield's Chris Conte fired a hard shot on goal, but Mark Hanks, who played another outstanding game in goal, came up with the save.

"Hanks has got to be the best goalie in the Yankee Conference," Kidd said. Not too many people watching yesterday's game would dispute that statement. Hanks, who has had three shoutouts this season, boasts a goals against average of 1.05.

"We needed a win badly," Kidd added. "Our wing fullbacks really did an outstanding job out there."

BOOTER BANTER: Statistically, UMass was outshot by Springfield, 15-12, but had the edge in corner kicks 6-5. Hanks had eight saves to just three for Springfield's goalie... Hanks has been in goal for all three Minutemen wins this year, all of which have come at home. The team has one home contest left, Saturday against New Hampshire, while the season finale will be against Tufts on the road... The UMass JV's beat Stockbridge for the second time this season 2-0, yesterday... Timekeeper Bi Nielsen and announcer Bob Lazarus, "the voice of the Minutemen soccer team," have done a fine job all season.

Spikers showing teeth

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The women's volleyball team is ready to avenge a loss against Smith earlier this season as the spikers go into action tonight at 7:00 p.m. in the NOPE gym.

UMass lost a tight three-game match (15-11, 11-15, 12-15) to Smith on October 5.

Tonight, however, Smith will be facing a rejuvenated UMass squad that has won five of its six previous matches.

The spikers, now 8-10, are in good spirits going into tonight's match, according to coach Dianne Thompson who said they "must keep moving and concentrating on their game."

Starting for UMass will be Pat Bradley, Sue Sabia, Jayne Greenberg, Deb Kuzdeba, Diane Bunker-Hannula and Shelly Soules.

Thompson indicated that if the starters have any difficulty a strong bench consisting of spikers Mandragouras and Dickson and back court specialists McGrath, Wotkowicz and Decosmo will be waiting in the wings.

Thompson stated that she hopes the team plays the brand of inspired volleyball that they are capable of.

The JVs, 5-5, will try to top .500 for the first time this season tonight. In their last encounter the JVs beat Smith 11-15, 16-14, 15-13.

Sizzling lacrosse team shake and bake Kennedy

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The 13th floor Kennedy's revenge will have to wait until some future date as the lacrosse-men made history repeat itself Tuesday night in Firebowl II, as they downed the 13th, 1-0.

"This was the best fireball game I've ever played in," said Kevin Patterson, who staged the game. "The ball was great, the goals stayed lit — it was just one of the best I've played in, including the reservation."

"I was disappointed at the turnout, which was about 200-300 people, though."

A moment of humor occurred when lacrosse player Mike Gongas fell in front of the goal. He had the goal barbecuing his backside, and on the top of that, the ball deposited itself between his legs, leaving him no choice but to pick the ball up and heave it, leaving him smouldering, but thankfully (hopefully) still functioning.

Looking ahead, a source close to Patterson said that he is thinking of staging another game in the spring. As many people as possible should check out this spectacular event, should it be held.

Patterson also wished to thank the intramural office and the groundskeepers, without whose aid the game would not have been possible.

Deja vu with the Pats?

Will the New England Patriots make the playoffs this year?

The answer to that question will be determined in the next few weeks. The Patriots are faced with almost a must win in every one of their remaining six games.

Right now it appears the Foxboro team has the best shot at being the wild card team in the AFC, even though they have not given up on winning their division. They will know more on that after their November 14th date with the Colts in Baltimore.

The key to reaching the playoffs centers around how well a team does in its division. So far the Patriots have beaten divisional foes three times (Miami, New York and Buffalo) and lost two times (Baltimore and Miami) to AFC east teams.

That's shy Sunday's encounter with Buffalo is an important one. The Patriots beat the Bills in Buffalo a few weeks ago and need another win against O. J. and Co. to stay in the race. The last time the Patriots beat the Bills twice in one season was back in 1968 when Richard Nixon was President-elect. This year's win against Buffalo was especially satisfying because it broke a nine game losing streak the Pats had against the Bills.

Then comes the big game in Baltimore. If the Patriots can defeat the Colts (only Dallas has been able to do that so far and just barely 30-27), they will have a shot at the East title. If not they can only hope to be the wild card team.

If the Patriots lose to Baltimore, they will not be able to afford another loss the rest of the season if they want to reach the playoffs. The schedule favors them as their remaining games are against the Jets, Denver, New Orleans and Tampa Bay.

The Denver game will be another big one because the Broncos will be one of the Patriot's competitors for the wild card spot. Another factor is that the game is at Denver. The Patriots have not done too well on the road this year, losing badly in Detroit and Miami and barely escaping with a win in Buffalo, against a team that has lost twice to the lowly N. Y. Jets.

People are hoping that the Pats don't pull a 1974, during which they blew their chance for the playoffs by going 1-6 the last half of the season. But, 1976 is a different story. The Pats appear to have the players who really want to play winning football.

One thing that hurt them in 1974 was a rash of injuries. The Pats didn't have anyone to replace the likes of Sam Cunningham, Bob Windsor, Steve Schubert, etc. But this year they have a stronger bench, which has been playing a big part in the team's success this season. Guys like Jess Phillips, Dick Conn, and Jim Romaniszyn have been super on the special teams.

The defense has matured into one of the finest outfits in the conference. The thing that has hurt the Pats on defense in the past has been the secondary, or should I say lack of one. But Mike Haynes and Tim Fox have really come on in their rookie seasons.

The biggest boost on offense has to be the play of Steve Grogan. Even though he had a bad game against Miami last week, he has proven to be a strong leader and a fine quarterback. Once he overcomes his tendency to overthrow his receivers, he should emerge as a top quarterback.

Not to be overlooked is the offensive line, which has always been the Patriots weakest area. Before the season started, George Sergienko, who was trying to win a spot on the Pats roster as a center, told me "The Patriots will have one of the best offensive lines in the NFL this year."

Well George was indeed right. If he had said the Patriots would be one of the best teams in the NFL this year, I might have looked at him a little funny.

But they are for real. Just ask some of the teams that have played the Patriots.

Let's hope they can convince the rest of their opponents.

Field hockey in regional playoffs

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team will begin post season play in the AIAW playoffs against Yale at Brown University this morning at 8:00.

The tournament will consist of sixteen teams from the Northeast. It serves as a stepping stone to the National AIAW; only the winner and runner-up will advance.

Although UMass has never played its first opponent (Yale), before, Coach Judith Davidson does know something about the Yale team: "They have a very high scoring team, and they have one player that scores a lot of goals. They also pull a lot of players downfield in an attempt to draw their opponents offside. I think if we can deal with that, then we shouldn't have many problems."

The Minutewomen have been plagued all season by a tendency to loose concentration and slack off during a game, instead of playing well for 70 minutes. The problem has been a mystery to everyone concerned, because of the amount of talent on the team. With such players as Kathy Gipps usually giving an outstanding performance in the net, Gayle Hutchinson and Kelly Salls forming a steady defense, along with Cheryl Meliones, Sue Kibling and Lynsie Wickman on offense, there's no lack of ability on the team. The Minutewomen have been able to hold the problem under control for most of the season, finishing with a record of nine wins and six losses, but four of those losses came against teams that they probably should have beaten — Northeastern, Bridgewater, Cortland St. and Mt. Holyoke.

The Minutewomen will have a chance to redeem themselves in the three day tourney, as several of their previous opponents will be making an appearance at Brown today.

Hopefully, the women will get the ball on the stick today as they go to Brown for the AIAW. (Staff photo by Jim Higgins)

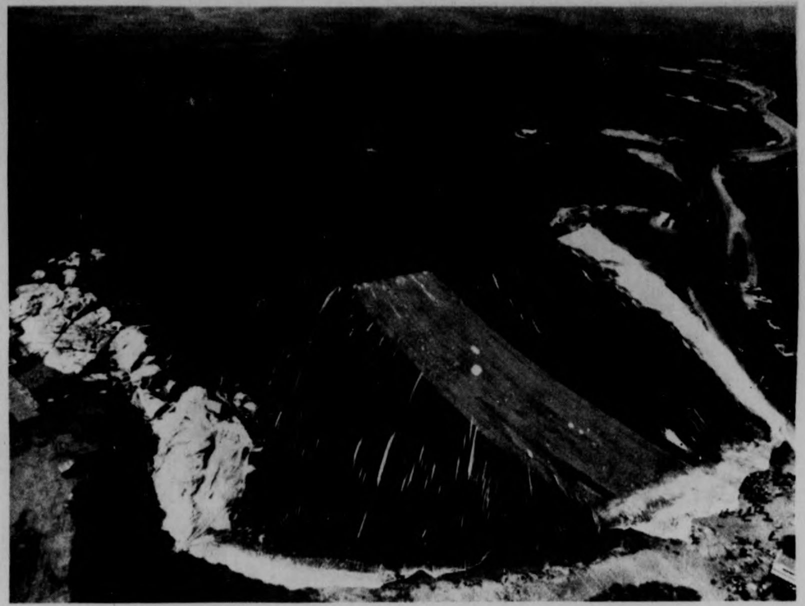
Christo



Oceanfront

Artvironment

by Stacy Belkind

The University Gallery is currently presenting a documentary exhibition entitled, "Oceanfront," through November 21. "Oceanfront" was created by the Bulgarian-born artist Christo Javacheff as part of the outdoor sculpture exhibition "Monumenta", during the summer of 1974 in Newport, Rhode Island. The name Christo may very well be unfamiliar to some, but those acquainted with his art and theories will agree that he remains a controversial figure in today's art scene.

Christo has asserted that he need not justify his art. He is an unconventional artist who uses non-permanent materials to express his innovative ideas. Christo has created various visual art projects in an effort to redefine our present conception of art. It is therefore the focus of this article to describe the revolutionary scope that his art assumes.

Christo recently lectured at the University and was greeted by a large crowd of interested and skeptical students and faculty. After showing slides and a film on his latest completed project "Running Fence," ample opportunity was given for questions to be raised and answered. "Running Fence," covered a twenty-four mile area in the northern part of California before ending in Bodega Bay. The 18-foot high fence was constructed from white woven nylon and was attached to anchored steel poles. The nylon material was attached by hooks to these poles which enabled a delicate pleated effect ensuing. The 24-mile long fence covered urban, suburban and rural areas of the Sonara and Marin counties. Christo chose California because it is in his opinion, "one of the most par-excellence states" in the United States. Christo is first attracted to a certain geographic area and then developes a project to compliment the area chosen. The fence, which ran mostly from east to west, took four years to develop and remained standing for a mere 14 days. In order to raise the enormous sum of money needed to facilitate such a project, Christo sold 350 original sketches, drawings and collages before the project began. After the money was raised, the problem of obtaining the necessary land had to be resolved.

The land area to be crossed by the fence was owned by 59 ranchers who all had to agree to rent their land to Christo if the project was ever to materialize.

It took three superior court hearings to obtain the permits as well as 14 public hearings because of vocal public opposition. It took one and a half years, and a 450-page government report to insure the artist that he would be able to carry out the Running Fence project.

An equally time-consuming phase of the project was the sewing of the nylon panels for the fence. It took a single factory one year to transform 2 million square feet of the material into the 68-foot long pleated panels. After the fence was dismantled, the material (ideal for covering machinery and hay), as well as the cables, were given to the ranchers in exchange for the use of their land.

It was thus after four years of planning, designing, meetings and actual construction that the Running Fence was ready to become a temporary part of the California hills. In sharp contrast to the length of time spent by countless individuals, the fence was to stand for only 14 days. In order to understand the artist's reasons for so short a time period for the actual viewing of the fence, we must understand Christo's concept of art.

According to Christo, ..."there is no difference between art and life for me...the actual work of life is the focus of years of work, dialogue of the people involved — it is not only the fence; you need the farmers, the barns, the sky..."

Christo chose fertile land for the site of the fence. It might have been easier to construct the fence on a desert or land owned by fewer individuals, but according to Christo, "The greatness of the project is that it was built on fertile land." A very important aspect of Christo's art is that it is dependent on group effort and group interaction. Christo is a very charismatic individual, capable of arousing the interest and support needed to accomplish the great artistic tasks that he creates.

The current exhibition at the University Gallery also deals with another fertile geographic area: the ocean. The project "Oceanfront" was part of an outdoor sculpture exhibit entitled Monumenta, which took place in the summer of 1974 in Newport, R. I. Christo was very impressed with King Coves Beach and found it to be a very beautiful as well as workable area.

It took eight months to prepare the Oceanfront project and remained on view for 8 days. 150,000 square feet of polypropylene fabric was anchored at its seaward edge by 12 anchors, and around the perimeter of the shoreline by 40 anchors. One of the properties of polypropylene is that it floats just below the water's surface with only a small portion of the fabric actually sinking.

Opposition to the Oceanfront project stems from the notion that Christo would be disrupting the ocean and treating it with disrespect. If Christo wanted to be disrespectful of the environment, he would have covered and not floated the material on the water's surface.

Christo purposely chose a white translucent material that would conform to the natural movement of the waves. The polypropylene emphasizes the texture of the water which can be seen most elegantly from the photographs and video at the gallery. The whiteness of the material echoes the foam of the ocean, and we are able to sense the slickness and versatile nature of water. The cove is surrounded by rocks which make for a very dramatic image when covered by the polypropylene.

One of the most interesting photographs in the exhibit is the transformed image of covered rocks into snow capped mountains.

Christo introduced a very interesting theory at his lecture which states that art exists only in its "prime-time." Christo feels that paintings are transformed through the centuries for various reasons. The colors of paintings fade, and the work itself emits different ideas to different individuals and cultures. There is no such thing as permanence in the physical art form. More often than not, works of art are not seen in their original environment, and although they are made to last, they are subject to deterioration. Christo gave the example of the Sistine Chapel as an extreme example of how a work of art can be transformed. We now view the chapel through the aid of thousands of watts of electricity.

As previously mentioned, a very important aspect of Christo's art is to bring people together. We live in a society that takes pride in propogating the alienation of its people. It is unfortunate that the art of Christo has also alienated a certain group of people who study art. I have heard people refer to Christo as a dictator, a fake, and anything but an artist. We are constantly being bombarded with garbage that is in other people's minds supreme art. We see it in our museums, we see it at our own university. Christo is an artist, and in the eyes of this reviewer one of the most interesting and competent today.

Christo is asking us to re-evaluate our art theories and the role of the museum and artist in today's society. Christo uses the most fragile and transitory of materials. He illustrates his theory that the physical art object can never be permanent in form. It is almost as if we are looking at reproductions of the actual painting or sculpture. The media remains an integral part of his art as well as all the outside elements that shape the direction that his art form is to take.

Even though Christo's art could not exist in time without such media coverage, I think that the following statement by Christo sums up his art philosophy most eloquently.

"Eternity isn't physical things. Eternity is in the minds of the people."

At 8 p.m., Tuesday evening, November 9, the University Gallery will show films of other projects by Christo in its main exhibition room. Among the projects to be seen are Wrapped Girl (1963), 500 Cubic Meter Package (1968), Wrap-In Wrap-Out (1969), Wrapped Coast (1971) and Valley Coast (1972).

DISTANCE

My friend Jon, excited,
Suggested through big Brother eyes and nostrils
Flared for allocation
Of air,

"I have a theory,
(He spoke through Puckered pores).
When I clap...
(His forearms rippled
And I winced)
My hands never touch."
My eyes bled
Witness to their not Touching. Archimedes
Burned my pink ears.

So Jon defined
Matter as being
Energy pure and simple
Minding its' body space
As would elevator jammed
Humans teetering on their pedestals.

"The strangers in my hand,
(He testified
As I became aware
Of mine).
Would no more
Allow themselves the touching
Than would their human
(I am human)
Counterparts. They push
(Don't push)
Away and are forever
Alone."
I wanted to Pat my friend
On the back
So I did
N't

Last Night's Dream

"Inside your small house with many rooms,
I stood watching you as you figured
how the wall should go up.
Your mother, with her arms crossed and one hand holding her chin, tilted her head, and finally interrupted, she knew how to raise it up.
I couldn't hold back. I blurted out,
'Friend, where's your father?'
With your backs turned, you faced the rising wall and did not, would not, answer.
I turned my head to the window light and I tell you I saw through the bushes a man standing in the garden.
He smiled.
You turned to the open door to see the light grow
(I heard a trumpet blow).
The wall behind you crashed.
The man was...I knew him to be your father...you saw beyond the light that he was...didn't you?"

Black Sounds and Motion

by Leila Bruno

The "Sounds in Motion" dance company visually gave credence to their name by appearing as actual extensions of the varying movements and attitudes in a musical composition.

I left this particular concert last Saturday night feeling inspired about dance being a means of communicating so vividly the messages inherent in the Black culture.

Founded in 1972 by choreographer-dancer Dianne McIntyre the Harlem-based company had been in residence at UMass. from Thursday to Saturday giving lecture-demonstrations and master classes.

Ms. McIntyre describes her works as being "Things that I am trying to say in the dance that have to do with the essence, and the truth, and the history of Black people." It's something that I try to communicate through the dance in a way that might be easier for people to receive than if someone stood up and just told them about it."

Indeed the company effectively transcended the themes by remarkable vitality and emotional intensity as they vibrated their interpretations to the audience by movement and expressionism.

Reflected in the pieces were recollections that Ms. McIntyre had chosen from her own experiences as a Black woman but dealt in a manner which could effect all people.

"The Voyage" was a piece packed with gut feelings and messages relating to the horrors of slavery; which at times became overwhelmed by the theme.

Created from Ms. McIntyre's research and readings on slavery the work depicted a group of Black people newly arrived in the United States from Africa to be sold in the South.

In portraying a dream sequence the dancers became torn from their people, conveyed by the dancers extending their bodies as if in escape; to contracting as if in fright of uncertain forebodings.

In costumes appropo of slaves five company members aesthetically joined their fluid, continuous movements into the statements in the choreography.

In general the pieces appeared to be a mixture of several techniques including jazz and modern, but with obvious strong ethnic influences of the Afro-American heritage.

The musical accompaniments included a pianist, vocalist, and drummer, while the wailing strains of a lone flute served as background to "The Voyage."

One of the two program changes featured a rhythmic Tumba Drum solo by a company member that drew enthusiastic responses from the audience.

The music was closely integrated into the character of the pieces along with the dancers duly assuming the character roles through mime.

"The Deep South Suite" (set to Duke Ellington on piano) was convincing in depicting how white and black people could get along if they thought that no-one else was looking.

Here the male (in "whiteface") and female dancers were dressed in "street" clothes costuming of the forties in moving to attitudes of initial shyness to trusting and affection.

Perhaps in this number Ms. McIntyre wanted to encourage thought about the statements being made onstage about the black and white of society being expressed through dance.

Incidentally, Ms. McIntyre had contributed "The Deep South Suite" for Alvin Ailey at his August Duke Ellington Festival.

At times I felt that some of the underlying messages in the choreography eluded me; however the auras created by the dancers in each piece served to keep me in accord with the general motif.

There were several incidences in the group work where there was an apparent lack of synchronization and finesse, with the emotional impact of the thematic material overpowering the actual dancing.

Yet technical nitty-gritty aside the company's overall exuberance compelled me to "feel" for their dancing.

The choreography by Ms. McIntyre was designed in such a way that rather encouraged a thought process in interpreting both the structure and mood contents.

What made the concert artistic was the ability of the dancers to project their personalities into the pieces while moving to themes that elicited responses from the audience.

As Ms. McIntyre had said, "The people working with me give everything of themselves while they're onstage. The intent of the work rather than the individual matters."

After the performance Ms. McIntyre thanked the audience and UMass. community for their support; in particular to Diana Ramos (a UMass. Black Studies faculty member and dancer-choreographer) for her inspiration to the company.

I felt that those in the audience who appreciably rose to their feet at the programs end felt at once a unity of response between people — not just races.

Style of the Free, Om of the Crazed

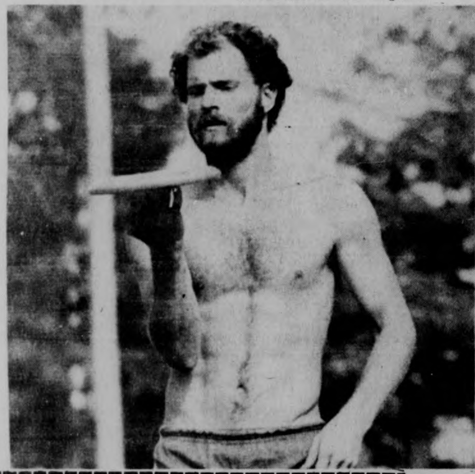
By Jerry Rogers

Tom Sullivan unleashes a backhand throw to Daryl Elliott. Having thrown the disc with his right hand, the Frisbee will be spinning clockwise as looked at from above. Daryl has decided that he will tip the Frisbee from under his leg and moves to get himself in position.

He positions himself on the right side of the Frisbee's path and runs along with it until it has dropped to a level needed for the tip. He lifts his left leg and reaches under with his right hand. Going past the center of the Frisbee about one inch, he tips it upwards and within two feet the Frisbee will have slowed down considerably and be up in the position for him to begin his nail delay. Since the Frisbee was tipped from the left side of the center he sticks his finger up against the interior of the disc on the right side of the center to stabilize its spin — and there he stands with a siliconed super-pro spinning on the nail of his forefinger.

Daryl has just completed one of the moves required in the repertoire of any freestyler.

Daryl, Tom and Dan Habeeb are the three best Frisbee freestylers at UMass and three of the best in New England.



"The moves are art," Dan says, "and perfection is the challenge. A demo (demonstration) is like art because you have to be flourishy and yet fluid and control the disc."

Freestyle Frisbee is, if you will, an art usually practiced by two Frisbee throwers who put together a series of throws and catches designed to be graceful, difficult, pleasing to the crowd or other freestylers and just a little bit more innovative than the last time they jammed.

The fundamentals are important. Catching theory, or getting behind the Frisbee so it spins in toward the catcher, and a variety of throws are musts for freestylers.

"You can build up a series of quick simple throws and catches. You're always thinking of something different that you can do with the Frisbee," stresses Dan.

There is the potential for immediate satisfaction and "there are an infinite number of things that you can do", Sullivan says.

The style of a freestyler is graceful, expressive and idiosyncratic, Daryl states, and it's a healthy form of exercise.

Surmounting the challenges in order to improve is the goal. Unity with the disc during its flight is the means.

"Freestyling is intellectually stimulating. After each manipulation of the disc it may not react as planned. Though there is planning to some degree, it's almost totally spontaneous," Daryl explains.

"You have to work around the disc," says Dan.

Freestyling is primarily practiced at demos or in competition, where a panel of judges or fellow competing pairs judge the performance of a pair of freestylers.

"A demo has far less pressure. The eye is not trained in the masses, but fellow competitors know what's going on. A crowd may be easily impressed by an air bounce or a nail delay," says Daryl.

Overall, however, freestyling is informal and friendly. One can practice new moves -- bedroom moves, Daryl calls them — on a rainy day indoors.

Always congenial, the "continuum of formality" ranges from two people throwing on the sidelines of an Ultimate Frisbee game to the national championships held in the Rose Bowl where the competition is intense and plentiful.

Freestylers are the heavy drug users. The Frisbee players who started with Ultimare but found themselves limited. They sit for hours and discuss new moves.

One of the Freestylers commandments is:

"Did you see that?"..."See what?"

A new move is not a new move until the freestyler has successfully integrated it into a performance.

It's a good sport for a great range of people.

"There's a lot of satisfaction when you get by the initial phase of having the Frisbee turnover when you throw it. You can improve pretty rapidly if you put in the time," Tom asserts.

He continued, "It's good, too, because coordination and grace are involved as opposed to strength. Women can be just as adept at it as men."

Daryl stresses that freestyling is enjoyable for both participant and observer, because of the immense potential for ad-libbing and doing something that has never been done before. A freestyler thinks no more than two or three moves ahead because of the spontanity involved.

"Every barrier that's broken (by developing a new move) adds to the enjoyment of freestyle," he says.

Though each person in the freestyle pair will have the Frisbee for a shorter period of time when freestyling, the enjoyment gained by completing a series of taps, delays, air brushes, finger flips, etc. is much greater than throwing and catching with a number of beginners and receiving the frisbee every few seconds.

Daryl, Dan and Tom all stress the potential of freestyling. As an art form, as a sport and as a social function for people to gather around. As pioneers, they and other freestylers seem to be following the advice of that mythical figure of Frisbee's past, Harvey J. Kukuk, "Make a friend, throw a Frisbee at someone today."

Van der Graaf Generator
World Record
(Mercury)

Amazingly soon after the summer release of Still Life came this intensely personal album by Peter Hammill and Van der Graaf Generator. With Godbluff, that makes almost three albums a year, none of which are weak or lacking in the attention of all the members of the band.

We owe World Record to one of the worst disasters a concert tour has ever had. Among other horros when in Italy, Van der Graaf Generator had all of their equipment stolen as well as their truck. After a long story and a few days, the truck was retrieved, but the guitars and drums were gone forever. The band decided not to go on, even with rental equipment and went home. Peter disappeared for a week and came back with the beginning of World Record.

Side One: "When She Comes" is a great synthesis of the band's rock and jazz roots. Dave Jackson and all his saxes really shine on this song about the perfect lady, "like something out of Blake or Edgar Allen Poe..." And as we have come to expect, Peter Hammill's forceful voice never let's go, interpreting his lyrics in a style that is uniquely superb.

"A Place to Survive" is a highly rhythmic, heartbeatish number that is both musically and lyrically the weakest song on the album. Not to say it is bad, but one expects more than a simple Springsteen rhythm from Van der Graaf Generator. Jackson and drummer Guy Evans both do well on this song, but the whole is not up to the sum of their parts.

"Masks" is the highlight of the album — the "La Rossa" of the album. Hammill's lyrics reach new insights, and the music is both melodic and dangerously expressive. There are no hard edges like the anger of "Scorched Earth", and yet, there is nothing soft about it either. The combinations of the pauses, so abrupt, and the endlessly alive rhythms serve to emphasize the talent of the whole band and their ability to work well together. Again one notices Jackson's excellence here as never before. It is not that he is better than anyone else, it is that he, himself, is better, more 'out front' than he was.

Side Two: "Meurglys III, The Songwriter's Guild" is many sided. At once it is simple and amazingly complex. It is the longest work on the album, spanning many different musical styles and employing expert production and engineering. Disonant, melodic, verbal, metalic, it is a mere sampler of the total ability and range of this band. But "Talking in tongues is easy when you know how..." and there is room enough for the band to meet here, with their diverse backgrounds.

"Wondering," in its way, is reminiscent of "Theme I" back in 'Pawn Heart.' It is partly classical and very full. It is also the only song on the album that shares credit, as it is partly Hugh Banton's and it is his sound, the organ, and matching synthesizer that shine on this cut.

The album as a whole takes some getting used to. It takes time to appreciate the subtle changes the band is making without feeling that some of the power of previous albums is missing, when, in fact, it is just as intact as ever. Ah, psychotic reaction (give it ten).

The posters for this album—tour say that "Van der Graaf Generator is for everybody," but we know that's not true. They are for the kind of people that can appreciate their uniquely devastating sound and can appreciate their reasons for existing; those who can accept their changes and look forward to their possibilities.

Be prepared, in the future, for some changes, more directions for this ever growing, ever excelling band. Drawing closer to another album of the emotional impact of Pawn Hearts, I wish them Godspeed.

Not an album for the weak of mind, or the unstable — A-.

Stomu Yamashta
Steve Winwood
Michael Shrieve
GO

For what seemed like ages I wondered where could Stevie Winwood be hiding himself after Traffic's big bash which they performed a couple of years ago in London. We heard from Dave Mason and Jim Capaldi, but not Winwood, until now, finally, he appears on this brilliant and spacy album.

The reason "Go" took so long in being released was because it took a while for the musicians' various record companies to draw up the contractual arrangements. Any disc, however, which resides in a category as bizarre as that of Mike Oldfield's "Tubular Bells" and early Pink Floyd music, is well worth the wait, for it is these two artists from whom there is a definite influence.

"Go" is primarily the creation of Stomu Yamashta, who wrote all of the music on it except for one song, Stevie Winwood's "Winner—Loser," one of the five cuts out of the glorious fourteen in which Winwood lends some highly energetic singing. The other nine tunes are all instrumentals, and there's not a weak one among them.

The personnel on this album are impressive to say the least. Besides Yamashta and Winwood, there's ex-Santana drummer Michael Shrieve who plays the best he ever did in his life, Al DiMeola, the young guitarist from Chick Corea's Return to Forever, and Roscoe Gee who lent his bass guitar abilities to Traffic for a spell.

DiMeola's solos on "Man of Leo" and the discofied yet synthesized "Ghost Machine" are simply excellent, and with three guys who can play synthesizer (Winwood, Yamashta and Klause Schulze), songs like "Nature," "Air Over," "Space Requieum" and "Surfspin" give one a good idea of where this album is coming from. A woodwind, brass and string section puts the finishing touches on a surprisingly coherent album and a very fine one — A!

Catch A Rising Star
Pousette-Dart Band

On Tuesday, November 9, The Program Council Music Committee which recently put on the sell-out performance of Rahsaan Roland Kirk and Gil Scott-Heron, will present The Pousette-Dart Band and Bobby Keyes. This show will be held in the Hatch where the foot-stomping, country rock of the Pousette-Dart Band will come alive.

Tickets for the show are $2.50 and can be purchased all this week in front of the Hatch and the night of the show.

Led by lead singer and guitarist Jon Pousette-Dart, the Boston area band proves to be one of the best new touring groups today. Their first album titled simply Pousette-Dart Band created raves from critics and immediately hit Billboard's Top Album Picks.

Providing the punch along with Jon Pousette-Dart is fiddle and mandolin player John Curtis who wrote one of their hit singles "Halo." John Fulsom Troy on bass and drummer Allison Cook also add to the band's rhythmic tones.

After touring this summer with Yes, the Pousette-Dart Band now settles down to the small intimate atmosphere that it enjoys so much.

So for some good foot-stomping music that's generated to kick ass and at other times to just mellow you right out, take in the Pousette-Dart Band and Bobby Keyes next Tuesday night in the Hatch.

LOU REED
Rock And Roll Heart
(Arista)

At first, this album made me wanna hear Coney Island Baby; Berlin; Transformer; christ!, Sally Can't Dance, anything but Rock And Roll Heart. But I forced myself to listen.

After several playings it finally became bearable, Lou Reed being as much a master of the hook as Elton John is, but I still don't like the damn thing.

R&R Heart seems to be Lou Reed's way of telling us that he is, in reality, as normal as you and even me. But it doesn't work because he goes too far, so much out of his way as to allow us, knowing what we do about the Metal Machine, to see right through his lies. Songs like "I Believe In Love," "Chooser And The Chosen One" (his only instrumental ever, not counting Metal Machine Music), "You Wear It So Well" and "Rock And Roll Heart" are all more or less believable in trying to show or tell us that Lou Reed is average, but "A Sheltered Life" is the camel that breaks the straw's back: "Never been to England, never been to France, never really learned how to dance, I've never taken dope and I've never taken drugs, I've never danced on a bearskin rug... I guess I've led a sheltered life." All sung over an insipid coffeehouse pseudojazz riff. Now Lou Reed ain't nearly so weird as he once wanted us to believe, but he is a lot more so that he now wants us to think. "I believe in partytime"? Sorry, Lou, I don't believe you.

There is one song here reminiscent of the real Lou Reed. It's called "Banging On My Drum." It's about masturbation.

Most, if not all, of the songs on R&R Heart are catchy and tend to grow on you quickly, but there is absolutely nothing here that grabs you the way his Velvet Underground material once did, or even as much as "Walk On The Wild Side" or "Kicks." Not to me, anyway. R&R Heart is listenable, but only as an act of desperation.

This is Lou Reed's most accessible LP since the two live butcherjobs, Rock N Roll Animal and Lou Reed Live. It will appeal to the fans of those two records, which is to say most of his fans. R&R Heart is not exactly heavy metal, but it is ballsy. (Thank Marty Fogel on everpresent sax). His promotional tour will undoubtedly sell the record to lots and lots of those fans of R&R Animal, as well as create many new fans. And any number of songs could to Top 10. I'd go with "I Believe In Love." This album may even outsell Sally Can't Dance. Frampton Comes Alive? Tapestry? (C)

Steve Hillage
L
(Virgin)

Steve Hillage is perhaps the most inventive young guitarist around today. As a member of Khan, Gong, and finally on his solo album, 'Fish Rising', Hillage has established himself as the premier space child of England's progressive rock guitarists. His smooth, flowing style is something cutting, sometimes very subtle, but always very weird. He utilizes a guitar fully, moving up and down the frets with incredible speed, but still creating the sense of inevitability that marks each note.

L brings a now clean shaven Hillage a step closer to normalcy. He partially abandons his acidic lunacy for a milder format, more closely assimilated to rock than any of his past offerings. It most resembles the style of Khan's import album, Space Shanty. On Space Shanty, Hillage shared equal billing with Dave Stewart from Hatfield and the North, unlike on this album where he is the undisputed attraction. L doesn't match the complete insanity of Hillage's albums with Gong despite still generous amounts of craziness.

This album also brings Hillage together with another of the most inventive minds in music today, Todd Rudgren. Todd, a master of the studio, expert songwriter, and a remarkable guitarist in his own right, produced and engineered L as well as placing most of his band Utopia at Hillage's disposal. The production is spotless, easily as good as ex-Gong producer and engineer, Simon Heyworth's job on Fish Rising. John Wilcox and Roger Powell, Utopia's drummer and keyboard players respectively, along with jazzman Don Cherry, bassist Kasim Sulton, and Miquette Giraudy make up Hillage's band on this album. Unlike on Fish Rising, no one from Gong makes an appearance here.

In the same manner as Todd's most recent solo album Faithful, L features cover versions of landmark hits from days gone by. The album opens with one of these songs, Donovan's "Hurdy Gurdy Man." Powell's synthesizer and Don Cherry's Tibetian trumpet lead into Hillage's Donovan-like vocals which make the song sound like it was written for him. It is not long before the over-all mellowness is pierced and then dominated by some of Hillage's most overpowering guitar ever. It comes across sharp and clean over Roger Powell's lingering synthesizer. "Hurdy Gurdy Glissando," another song on which Powell makes his presence felt, is more in Hillage's usual style. Mostly instrumental, it features fine guitar and a driving bass in the same manner as part of Gong's You. "Electrick Gypsies", written by Hillage, is perhaps the closest to rock-n-roll that Steve has ever strayed. It is basically lyrically oriented with Hillage's guitar weaving in and out in a Hendrix-like manner which is very unlike what he's done in the past.

Side two begins with "Om Nama Shivaya", a chant-like song which is seared by blinding Hillage solos. Miquette Giraudy provides the female voice. Next is the "Lunar Musick Suite," which was recorded exclusively at full moon. Evidently Hillage's complement to the "Solar Musick Suite" on 'Fish Rising,' this twelve minute opus starts with driving guitar and then slows down to mysterious chaos. If you close your eyes while listening, you can see clouds floating past a big, bright silver moon. Depending upon how high you are, you could even see a coven of witches in the silvery glow. It is definitely a very suggestive song. I would say it is the album's best. The last song on the album is a copy of George Harrison's "It's All Too Much." Hillage dons a Harrison voice and the song sounds almost exactly the same as the Beatles until he releases at the end with another of his amazing solos.

Although Hillage is not as mad as he used to be, with the help of Todd, he has released an album just as good if not better than Fish Rising, Space Shanty, or any of Gong's albums. Without a doubt, he plays his best guitar solos ever on this album, besides also playing some ARP and EMS synthesizer. It is a must album for anyone who listens to music seriously. (A+)

"DOCTOR'S ORDERS"
by
Mario A. Barros

After a slow Fall, the disco world is headed for a very good winter. The best releases so far are Vickie Sue Robinson's new album on RCA, Donna Summers' "Four Seasons of Love" and Mass Production's debut album "Welcome To Our World."

Vickie Sue's album has two very strong cuts in "Daylight" and "Should I Stay—I Won't Let You Go," a medley mixed and arranged by Warren Schatz who did a fine job on her previous hit; "Turn The Beat Around." The Donna Summers album also has some excellent material. Casablanca has been teasing us DJs with its release for about a month now, but now that we have it, it was well worth the wait. The premier cuts are "Spring Reprise—Spring Affair" (I prefer to mix the two) and "Autumn Changes," a very bouncy but sensuous number.

So far the "monster" release of late is the Mass Production LP. The group's music reminds me of Brass Construction and it gives me that same party feel. Freddie Epstein (a local DJ) was the first to break it out in this area and says the reaction to it was and is excellent.

Some good cuts to keep an eye on are "Car Wash" (the movie soundtrack) by Rose Royce, "Do The Walk" by Heart & Soul and "Open Sesame" by my favorite group; Kool & The Gang. The album is out (also called Open Sesame) but the 45 has a longer version which is better suited for disco play.

The following is a top 15 audience response chart compiled from the playlists of mine and other local DJs. For the sake of identification it will be called The "Doc's" Top 15.

The "Doc's" Top 15

Eat Around Town

by Lauren J. Traub
Carlo of Naples
45 State Street,
Northampton
No Reservations,
No Liquor License
Open 5-10 p.m., daily
Fridays and Saturdays until midnite

A trattoria in Italy is an informal, low-priced eating place, and this is the mood which "Carlo of Naples" well authenticates. A roaring screenless fire radiates a comfortable warmth and pleasant smoking aroma on cold nites. The small main dining room seats 40, and the larger front room which is closed until needed, about 60.

Carlo's has no liquor license, but this is actually a blessing in disguise to the informed diner who can bring his—her own wine or beer, at half the cost of buying it in a restaurant.

Empty wine bottles of past diners decorate the mantel around three sides of the dining room.

Paper menus over the formica-topped tables double as place mats and like Boston's Durgin Park, some tables are practically shared with adjacent diners.

The menu lists 14 Pasta Combinations, all well under $3.00. Although not personally sampled, Spaghetti and Clams at $2.80 seems unbelievably reasonable. Highest priced main courses are Beef Braciole ($5.25) and Scampi Oreganati ($4.25). Both include salad or spaghetti, and almost all other main courses are well below $4.00. Meatless dishes are helpfully identified on the menu with asterisks.

We began with Minestrone ($1.05), full of pasta and beans in a rich, thick stock, bearing no resemblance to the notoriously thin varieties found elsewhere. Garlic bread is good, made in a long thin loaf, and served steaming hot in a basket, for 95 cents. But the garlic and cheese bread for 25 cents more had only small, semi-melted squares of mozzarella sliced between slices. Probably better to save your quarter, and sprinkle grated table cheese over each slice as you eat. An appetizer of fresh sliced marinated mushrooms had the right whisper of garlic, and came across well.

Carlo and daughter Clivia

For our main course, we chose mushrooms again, this time in the form of whole mushroom caps, broiled, and stuffed with onions. The sauce with the mushrooms was described as containing wine, cream, and tomato juice, but the cream and tomato juice were not in evidence.

Fettucine alla Romana was long noodles in a rich butter and cheese sauce. This dish alone will use up your calorie and cholesterol allotments for days, but what a way to go! The noodles are cooked "Al dente" as only an Italian knows how, and though very rich, this dish was heavenly! All pasta here is cooked to perfection. If more Americans knew when to stop cooking spaghetti, they'd realize how tasty it can be, and wouldn't feel the compulsion to drown it in tomato sauce. Manicotti ($3.25) is inconspicuous on the menu, but don't be fooled, this is also an excellent dish!

Veal dishes are made from veal patties, which keeps them inexpensive, but Carlo's daughter Clivia hopes to introduce the clientele to real veal, through the daily specials. Clivia, a charming student of the hotel and restaurant course at Holyoke Community College, also hopes eventually to reinstitute the coffee shop in the restaurant, serving light lunches and desserts as they once did.

Carlo of Naples stays open 'til twelve on weekends, and nights of productions at the nearby Academy of Music. From 10-12 these nights, the emphasis is on pizzas and desserts, and special pizzas topped with anything on the menu are concocted for customers. The Cannoli, homemade Tortone, or Cappuccino are all enjoyable ways to finish the meal.

With the ability to transport weary students from Northampton to Naples, and the prospect of mellow live music in its future, Carlo of Naples shows indications of once again regaining the share of the market that it held before Northampton became flooded with restaurants. Buon Appetito!

Court orders rent paid

Rotting ceilings and leaky pipes, have Colonial Village tennants......

By JOE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

A Hampshire County Superior Court Judge yesterday granted a preliminary injunction barring a union of Colonial Village Apartment tenants from withholding rent.

Judge John Moriarty granted the request for an injunction made by Atty. Richard Howland, who represents the landlord of the 200-unit complex in Amherst. The tenants' union includes 130 units.

Attorneys for both sides said that the reason the judge granted the injunction is that the tenants' union has complaints about items such as a new lease for which rent withholding is not legal.

Mary Wentworth, a Colonial Village tenant union organizer, said that Judge Moriarty "didn't rule on the merits of the case." She said the judge had ignored tenants' complaints about health and safety violations.

State law allows tenants to withhold rent if they believe that their health is endangered due to dangerous building conditions.

Tenants allege that there are state health code violations in many of the apartments, such as broken hot water heaters, moldy ceilings, defective wiring and leaky faucets.

The apartment complex is owned by Lewis Cohn Associates, a Connecticut based real estate firm.

"Judge Moriarty nit-picked on a technicality. It's clear he disapproves of tenants acting collectively," Wentworth said.

Wentworth termed the judge's decision a "setback, but not a total defeat."

She said the injunction indicates that "the courts are all too ready to act on behalf of landlords and property owners and ignore tenants."

"We intend to keep going with this until we accomplish something," Wentworth said.

"Other complex units should be organized. It's the only way tenants can have any control over the conditions in which they live," Wentworth pointed out.

Howland, William Newman and David Kaplan, lawyers for the tenants' union, said that discussions would be held soon on all grievances.

125 children to lose day care

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

Day care service for 125 children in Hampshire County will be suspended within the month due to a vote of the Board of Directors of the Hampshire Community Action Commission (HCAC) Wednesday night.

There will be a rally today at 1 p.m. at the Unitarian Church in Northampton to promote support to attempt to get funding to avert the termination of the day care services.

HCAC is an umbrella organization for the Day Care Center and for Family Day Care. Due to cash flow problems with these two groups, other agency programs are in jeopardy. HCAC Board of Directors voted to discontinue the two groups in order to maintain the other agencies supported by HCAC.

There are approximately 15 UMass people who have children enrolled in the family day care program. There are several other students with children in the group day care program.

Cynthia Scott, a board member who voted in favor of terminating the day care services, said "It's a hard decision to make. There is not sufficient money." The Department of Public Welfare and other state agencies pay for services after they have been rendered.

"Those programs which get federal funds have been used to provide cash flow because the federal money comes in one to four months in advance," she said.

"We have $3,000 in our checking account. We have to pay out $7,000 in payroll this week and we have another $6,000 in expenses. This totals $13,000 and we will have to draw on our savings account to cover our weeks expenses," Scott said.

"Some day care parents are investigating the possibility of sueing the Welfare department for allowing this situation to develop," she added.

Carol Bond, a board member who voted against terminating the day care services provided by HCAC, said "We are expecting an $11,600 check for Family Day Care. The check is expected on Friday and would cover expenses for this week."

"Day care is a right in this community," said Bond. It will cost more to put these people back on Welfare than to have the children in the day care services and the parents out working, she said. Between 250 and 300 people will be affected.

Bond said they had applied for a loan of $40,000 from the northampton National Bank and they should know if it has been approved by next week.

"I have one child in the Headstart program which is also part of HCAC," said Bond. "My child will be affected by this decision because day care pays for one half of the director's salary and because Headstart used the day care kitchen.

"The 125 children involved do not include the children in Headstart who will also be affected by the termination of day care.

"I have four children, three are preschoolers. I had wanted to go to school but if these programs are terminated, I won't be able to," Bond continued. She said she hopes that if the loan is granted, HCAC will be able to establish a line of credit.

Havi Stander, of Day Care, said "The Welfare department promised that if there is a continuation of services to the children, they'd keep contracts to provide services for the children."

In order to terminate services, HCAC must send a letter to the Welfare department to that effect which will be effective one month after the letter is received.

Stander said that the rally is an attempt "to mobilize community support to getting funding."

Both Scott and Bond will speak at the rally as well as state Rep. James G. Collins and Bill Nagle or Marilyn Stanley, assistant director of HCAC, if Nagle is not able to attend.

The rally will be followed by a march up Main St. in Northampton.

Student senate speaker

DeLima sees beauty, problems

By CHRIS WOODCOCK
Collegian Staff

For those who live in or near Amherst, there is often a tendency to take the beauty and the resources of this area for granted. Many visitors come here and immediately fall in love with this rural section of Massachusetts.

Brian De Lima, the current speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate, is one such visitor. De Lima came to UMass in January, as an exchange student from the University of Hawaii at Hilo. He took an immediate liking to the school and to the area, so much of a liking that he now wishes to transfer to UMass.

"This is a beautiful campus and a beautiful area," De Lima exclaimed, "just as beautiful as Hawaii."

De Lima said the biggest adjustment that he has had to make to east coast life involves the realization that racism and sexism do exist here.

"Living in Hawaii," he explained, "which is something of a melting pot, you don't see these problems. But I can see it is a big issue here. I didn't even understand what sexism was until I came to UMass. I still don't understand it fully, but I'm learning about the oppression of women."

De Lima, a senior political science major, said that his initial decision to get on the exchange program, and his subsequent decision to transfer to UMass stemmed from the fact that the quality of education on the east coast is "far superior" to what he knew in Hawaii.

"I think that UMass is one of the top 10 public universities in the United States," De Lima said. "The faculty is excellent, the facilities are excellent, and the area is very conducive to learning."

Another factor in De Lima's decision to complete his education at UMass is his committment to fulfill his term as speaker, which expires in April.

He was a student senator last semester, but assumed the role of speaker in September following the resignation of Annette Guttenberg.

"I took the job with the idea of serving the entire term," he said, "and I have every intention of doing just that."

De Lima said he was also a student politician while at the University of Hawaii, serving as student body president during his sophomore year. He pointed out, however, that there is no comparison between the student governments of the two schools.

"At Hawaii, we didn't have much money," he explained, "so there wasn't much we could do. Here, the Student Government Association (SGA) is able to take care of the needs of the students. We can provide so much more for them here."

The duties of the Speaker of the Senate are far-reaching, but De Lima said he basically serves as an administrator, making sure the SGA office runs smoothly, and presiding over the Student Senate meetings, with an eye toward seeing that everyone has an opportunity to express his or her opinion.

"I function pretty much like Chancellor Bromery," De Lima said, "only on a smaller scale."

De Lima said that his major goal as Speaker is to increase student involvement in University governance, especially in academic areas, so that the SGA can become more representative.

"Basically, we are here to learn," De Lima stated, "so we must get involved with academics. If students take an active involvement in their academic areas, take a greater interest in their education, they can affect the quality of their education."

The Student Organizing Project has done a great deal to increase student services, De Lima pointed out, adding that even more can be accomplished by obtaining a "grassroots involvement" of students.

Clinic has '72 roots here; aids teaching nationally

By JUDITH STEIN
Collegian Staff

The Clinic to Improve University Teaching is a national program whose roots are located on the UMass campus here.

This organization began in 1972 as a doctoral thesis by Director Dr. Michael Melnick, who attended UMass undergraduate and graduate schools. His concern was in assisting "the faculty in developing better teaching skills in the post secondary institutions." He is aided by Dr. George Bryniwsky who is the co-director of the program.

The money needed to subsidize the organization was funded by the W.K. Kellogg foundation who contributed "soft" money no string attached. The initial contract of $590,000 covered a three-year "exploration of the UMass campus," and today, the clinic is still in existence and is continually growing.

It has penetrated numerous other higher education centers in the United States such as Michigan State, Indiana University and the University of Rhode Island, as well as institutions overseas in Australia, Israel and England.

In October of 1974, the first International Conference was held and 35 countries participated. Many universities are still experimenting with this association, and they are finding the teaching developments to be quite satisfactory and rewarding.

All those who participate in the clinic work. do so in complete confidentiality where there is a one-to-one correspondence between the professor and graduate student specialist. These specialists primarily are offshoots of the UMass graduate school with degrees in education and have a concentration in this program. They are later hired "to direct the clinic process in various other universities," says Melnick.

There are six specific steps implemented in improving teaching skills. First, the individual teacher must take the initiative and admit to any teaching weaknesses and come to the clinic. Next, there is an interview between the specialist and professor "to define the areas that need attention." Many times a professor concerned with the seemingly apathetic response of the class may tend to blame the student body, as a whole, while the real problem may lie with his lecturing techniques.

The specialist will then observe the class and view the student reaction to their professor as well as the professor's handling and approach of his subject matter. The classes are videotaped for later analysis. After observing several lectures, the specialist will ask the class to do Teaching Analysis by Students (TABS) which is an evaluation of their instructor. The professor is required to fill out two questionnaires the first of which he must try and predict the class's response and the second in which he does a self-assessment.

These results are discussed in privacy and can be brought up at the periodic meetings of the clinic in which the staff continually "reevaluate" advice they pass on to various professors in the program. After a thorough examination of the interview, taped classes and surveys the specialist and professor come to a mutual acknowledgement of the various flaws in the latter's teaching method. The professor has the opportunity to prepare a lesson plan and present it to a small select group of volunteer students who will aid in improving the style of presentation.

There are a multitude of other clinical methods that may be employed. Through multiple survey data and intense research projects conducted, all of the clinic's services have proven to be positive.

However, this program should not be confused with the Center for Instructional Resources and Improvement (CIRI) which is completely separate from the clinic process.

Many students have expressed the opinion that the Clinic to Improve University Teaching" should be mandatory for the entire faculty body." One student said, "the ones involved are the ones who don't need it, but there is no one who has perfect methods of instruction without room for improvement."

NEAG spending restructured under plan

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

John Weisse, president of Northeast Area Government (NEAG), spoke to members of that body about the proposed restructuring of financial spending in the Northeast Area last night.

Weisse stated that the restructuring idea had been proposed by the Northeast Area Director, Jim West. This proposal calls for the abolishment of the Northeast and the Sylvan area finance committees, which were set up by former Northeast-Sylvan director Kenneth Burnham.

To replace the two separate groups, West has designed a Northeast-Sylvan Executive committee to work with the funds available to the areas.

This new committee will have no actual power to allocate funds. It will be solely an input committee consisting of the area government president and treasurer of Northeast and Sylvan, the area director, the area management director and two staff members.

With this arrangement, the area director has the final say as to what ideas will be acted upon, Weisse pointed out. The funds that the group will be working with can be spent at the discretion of the area director, said Weisse.

Members of NEAG expressed disapproval of the new committee and a proposal was made to change the structure to give the students of the area more power.

The proposal made was to change the amount of students on the committee from four to six, to keep the amount of staff the same, to give each member voting power, and to give West veto power over the body. The proposal was passed unanimously.

In other action, NEAG was asked to make a movie loan to Hamlin House. The house wishes to rent a movie to show to raise money, but funds are not available from the dorm to cover the entire rental fee of the movie.

The house representative asked for a loan of $300. NEAG ammended the amount to $200, and passed the motion to grant the loan.

Friday, November 19, NEAG will be sponsoring two movies "Sleuth," and "The Four Musketeers" on Friday, Nov. 19. They will be shown in the Worcester Dining Commons at 8:00 p.m. and will be free of charge to Northeast area residents.

A representative from the Southwest Center of Performing Arts, Fran De Vasto, spoke to the body

Two guilty on phone

Two UMass students, Robert S. Thouin and Thomas R. Smyth, both of Dickinson dormitory in Orchard Hill, were found guilty yesterday in Hampshire County Court on charges of making annoying telephone calls, said Capt. Robert Joyce of the UMass Police Dept.

Thouin and Smyth were tried before Judge Luke Ryan, who received evidence of the phone calls from the UMass Police Force and also from the New England Telephone Company. He gave both defendants $250 fines, which are being appealed.

"This is a serious matter and students should realize that this is not going to be the only arrest. We aren't going to play games with offenders," said Joyce.

Over 1500 hear Blanc

Mel Blanc, famous for producing the voices for over 97 per cent of all Warner Brothers cartoons, speaks before an over-capacity crowd at the Campus Center Auditorium. (Staff photo by Rob Carlin)

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"They told me he was a tough guy, a little stinker, so I tried to get the toughest voice I could think of," said Mel Blanc, speaking of the birth of Bugs Bunny's voice last night in a presentation held at the Campus Center Auditorium.

Blanc, who spoke in front of an over-capacity crowd of more than 1500 people, appeared as a guest of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Blanc, the creator of over 400 different voices, continued, "I couldn't decide which was tougher, the Bronx or Brooklyn accent, so I added them both together and Bugs was born," he said. Bugs is his favorite character.

Blanc received a standing ovation when he appeared on stage. He identified himself, to the crowds approval, by doing impressions of Bugs Bunny, Tweety Bird, Sylvester and Barney Rubble.

Mel Blanc started his career in radio in Los Angeles in 1927, when he was just getting out of high school. He started doing voices when he went to grammar school "I never studied voice, I more or less picked it up myself," he said.

From Los Angeles, he went to work for Warner Brothers Cartoons. His first cartoon voice was that of a drunken bull. Blanc, who did over 97 per cent of all Warner's cartoon voices, made over 3,000 cartoons until Warner Brothers shut down their cartoon studio in 1962.

Blanc said that while the voices he did were his own, the catch lines and phrases were copywrited by Warner Brothers, such as "Sufferin' Succatash," Sylvesters line, and "What's Up, Doc," Bugs Bunny's greeting.

Giving a little of Bugs Bunny's history, Blanc said that Bugs was originally called "Happy Rabbit," when he came into existance in 1938. Blanc himself suggested the name change as well as the greetings, "What's Up, Doc", which was changed from "what's cooking."

Following the first of three cartoons, Blanc explained how he created each of his famous cartoon voices, pictures of which, flashed on the screen behind him.

"I don't imitate voices. Taking a voice from someone else is like stealing it. The only voice I ever imitated was that of Elmer Fudd. He's the only voice I didn't create," he said.

Blanc said he would look at a drawing of a character in the animators studio and then try to imagaine how that character would talk if it had a voice.

Following the showing of an Academy-award, Oscar-award winning "Speedy Gonzales" cartoon, Blanc spoke at length of his radio career with Jack Benny and demonstrated several of the parts he played in that show – Carmichael the Bear, who guarded Benny's money vault, Benny's sputtering Maxwell car and Professor LeBlanc, Benny's harried violin teacher.

"I liked working on radio more than television. I could do eight or 10 different voices at one time," he said.

Blanc related how in one week he had done 18 transcontinental radio shows.

Besides Jack Benny, Mel Blanc was a featured performer with such other stars as Abbott and Costello, Burns and Allen, and Judy Canova. Blanc also had his own radio program in the late 1940's.

After the showing of "Birds Anonymous" with Tweety and Slyvester, Blanc took questions from the audience. He said that it took 125 people nine months to produce a single six and a half minute animated cartoon.

Todays cartoons, he said, use limited, not full animation as Warner Brothers did and this has caused the decline of the cartoon. Producing a full animated cartoon today would cost over $300,000, Blanc said.

Besides making appearances, Blanc said that he likes to visit crippled children's hospitals to do shows for the kids to "take them away from their pain for a half hour."

Blanc received another standing ovation as he concluded his talk.

The only upleasant incident of the evening was the constant door pounding by disappointed students who were denied enterance into the packed auditorium. Door pounding continued until campus police dispersed the offenders.

Buys synthesizer

Stevie Wonder shops here

EMS VOCODER

By PETER SWANSON
Collegian Staff

Stevie Wonder said the chances are good that he will cut his next album using only his own voice and a $19,000 voice synthesizer he bought last Friday in Northampton. Wonder was speaking over the phone to Everett Hafner, physics professor at Hampshire College and owner of the Electronic Music Studios of America store which sells the synthesizer.

A spokesperson for the Northampton-based distributor said he expects the synthesizer, called a vocoder, will be picked up today. The spokesperson said he thought it unlikely that Wonder, who had wired the $19,000 from California, would come for the vocoder in person, expecting instead Wonder's technician, Gary Olazabal.

"We invited Stevie," he said, "but we really don't know if he is coming, although he told us he might be in New York for the week."

Wonder's vocoder, which arrived Wednesday, is the first commercial voice synthesizer to reach the United States, although similar instruments have been used for years in voice research. Hafner said in a press release, "Stevie made his decision without playing the instrument, but solely on the basis of its description and a demo tape."

The vocoder breaks the human voice down into its component parts – pitch, wavelength and frequency – and then reformulates them to produce a variety of musical effects. Hafner calls the voice synthesizer and the tape recorder, "the only true 20th century musical instruments."

Among other things, the vocoder can change the characteristics of speech associated with one's age and sex. Using only one voice, it can create a chorus effect of multiple voices at different pitch. Describing one such effect, the spokesperson said, "It sounds like there's an 11-inch man standing on your shoulder mimicking you." Also, the vocoder can reformulate the sounds of a typewriter or a car engine to make them sound like speech.

Missouri: 'You are in the center of America!'

By DUKE SIMONEAU

"You are in the center of America!" bragged a Missourian we met. "Five states from the Atlantic, five states from the Pacific, two from Canada and two from Mexico. You're in the home of Presidents, generals, fan dancers, outlaws, do-gooders and no-gooders." Welcome to Missouri.

Missouri is the "show-me" state and Transcontinental Canoe Lines showed them something when we pulled into the state capital. In fact, the day we landed, a hoard of "River Rats" were showing Jefferson City's 30,000 residents a few things about river living.

After days of hard paddling upstream, we spotted an unlikely looking wooden raft with a cabin decked out with flags at the public boat ramp. "The Great American Flatboat Expedition" had landed the night before. The mayor promptly declared "Miss West" day, in honor of their craft.

Capt. Jeff Cogswell and his hardy crew of five strong men had left Three Forks, Mont. (the head of the Missouri) on May 15 heading for New Orleans. The crew was assembled by Capt. Cogswell through friends. Almost all are licensed, professional private boat skippers or sailors.

"Miss West" is a far cry from the luxury yachts this crew usually works. They built "Miss West" exactly as pioneers in the 1800's would have, using wooden pegs and square nails. People along the river have taken this private Bicentennial project to heart and donated many antiques and pelts for the crew to display. When "Miss West" reaches New Orleans, the crew plans to ship her back to Three Forks (with all her donated finery) to be used as a museum "to commemorate the discovery and development of the Missouri-Mississippi River System".

We met the Flatboat three days after Capt. Jeff had thrown his crew a curve. He left "Miss West" for four days and returned with a new bride and an English Sheepdog puppy. His stout-hearted band were in the midst of adjusting to a new lifestyle when we met them.

With the Flatboat was another Bicentennial project. On May 29, the Montana Bicentennial Commission launched the "Wan-i-gan", a replica of an old keelboat. The keelboat, though, was built of sheets of plywood and powered either by current or a 30 horsepower Johnson outboard.

Its only crew was skipper Dan Dalphonse (lovingly known to the Flatboat crew as Ben Bilgewater). Dan had left Miles City, Mont., then caught the Flatboat around Kansas City. He was traveling with them as far as St. Louis.

We toured their crafts and started swapping river stories. Suddenly, out of the setting sun, came a ridiculous looking sight (even funnier than ten river rats comparing notes). A shiny aluminum canoe with a makeshift mast slid downriver towards us. It was powered by a broad-shouldered, sunburned, greybearded man and a small woman in big sunglasses and a floppy straw hat.

"IT'S BILL!" screetched Capt. Jeff Bill McCoulough, his wife Penny, and the "Spirit of Sacagewea" crunched to a halt next to the Wan-i-gan.

On June 6, Bill left Three Forks alone. He passed both the Wan-i-gan and Miss West several times, camped with them a couple times. When the bicentennial projects landed in Levenworth, Kansas, Bill fed them royally.

Bill is a 51 year old retired corrections official from the prison in Levenworth. He wanted to canoe from Three Forks to New Orleans when he retired. His expedition, likewise, took a funny turn. While home in Levenworth for a week, his wife Penny decided she was going from their home to New Orleans with Bill. He was delighted. They act like a pair of honeymooning kids.

We feasted that night. A dozen river rats, with homes all over the country, meeting on the same day in the heart of America. The magnificent co-incidence was toasted late into the night with beer, bourbon, and down-home foot-stompin' music.

FacSen council set

By D.A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The proposed Extension Council of the Faculty Senate is now an established council and a number of motions for amendments to the council's by-laws were voted and approved by the Faculty Senate at their meeting yesterday.

"The Extension Council will oversee Continuing Education and the Cooperative Extension Service," said Professor Brian W. O'Connor.

The council will also give advice on the development of the Summer Session and examine proposals for all credit-free courses and programs. It will give recommendations, subject to the approval of the Board of Admissions and Records, on setting standards of admission for part-time and non-traditional students who apply for admission through Continuing Education courses and Summer Session. The Council plans to examine proposals for the development of both credit and credit-free programs and to establish standards of employment for those in credit and credit-free instructional programs in Continuing Education.

The senate also voted on a motion that the Foreign and International Studies Council review overseas courses and programs to be conducted outside the United States and recommend any improvements. The Foreign and International Studies Council helps to coordinate overseas courses and programs. The motion passed.

Moral achievement

By NASSER EGA
Assistant Black Affairs Editor

The establishment of the Black Affairs section in the Collegian is a moral achievement for the Black community in the Five College Area. It is an achievement in the sense that we struggled to overcome all the obstacles which were placed by those who couldn't or didn't want to see Black people's views represented in this incredible vehicle for informing the masses. It has shown me that we can get what is ours by right, by standing side by side and achieving the desired goal.

The media is a powerful tool. We have a tool that can represent the Black community's view. It is a tool that can raise consciousness for unity. It is a tool for enlightening those who have been stereotyped about what the Black person is. It is a tool which can create a beneficiary atmosphere for the Black people to function in, in an alienated environment. We should recognize this for what it is and work for it.

This section intends not to be a token. We intend to use our means to help effectuate change in the Five College Area. But this can only happen with your support.

We ask all the concerned members of the Black community who have writing ability and those who wish to express their feelings in writing, to contact the Black Affairs section in the Collegian. (Tel. 545-3500)

We need columnists, essayists, poets, reviewers, and commentators. Help support us so that we may be able to get the message across to the people.

Thank you.

Racism on campus

By DARRYLL MASTON

While coming from class on November 4, 1976, at approximately nine o'clock, I, a black student of this campus was harassed by some white students on fraternity row.

I was walking toward No. Pleasant Street between the fraternities and a car stopped and four white males jumped out of the car. One yelled, "Leave him alone", and the other three yelled racial obscenities at me.

I returned the favor and one said, "Oh, we have a smart nigger here". I knew the one who had told the others to leave me alone, and I made it clear to him that I recognized his face.

One came closer and put his hands on me, and I reacted by punching him on the side of the head, and then proceeded to run toward my dorm. Two followed, but gave up the chase soon thereafter. Hence, I walked home.

When I returned to the dorm in time for my racism colloquium, I found out that it had been cancelled because everyone but two participants were not able to come. The white students on campus are continually stating that they are unaware of the blatant existence of racism on campus. Yet very few take the time to learn about how racism is rampant right in their own community.

This is another example showing that everyone on this campus has a responsibility to take some action in fighting the racism that continues to fester at this university.

A case of the blues?

By KATHE SANDLER
Black Affairs Editor

Day 1 at UMass and I was one ex-New York girl on the verge of great discoveries. My mood was up and my spirits high as I nearly ran myself into a frenzy trying to check out everything and everyone.

I remember the first time I galloped up the stairs of New Africa House, seeing brothers lined up on the steps and reminding me of New York in a nice kind of way. I was smiling and rapping with them all and thinking, "Oh yes, he's got potential" and "Do yourself a favor girl!".

Somebody said, "Yeah, she must be a freshman. Look how she's smiling." There was a note of sarcasm in this voice, as if to say, "Wait till she finds out ... " but I pushed this out of my mind as I ventured out to meet the folks.

The "folks" as I was soon to find out consisted of about 550 Third World students, not even one per cent of the campus population.

Little consolation came from seeking out other brothers and sisters from the other campuses nearby as I was gradually inducted into the world of division between the Ivy Leaguers and the UMass Black population.

I had naturally assumed that since there were so few of us in the area that we'd be extremely friendly with one another. Through personal interaction with many of the other Five-College students my assumptions were soon shattered while I too began to resent some of the Smith sisters and Amherst brothers. (Mt. Holyoke and Hampshire were still foreign countries to me.)

In the meantime my classes, many of them being Afro-Am courses, began to grasp me. I eagerly digested much of the lectures and poured my heart and soul into papers. But a feeling of loneliness had begun to creep up on me and despair threated to take over.

"Yes", I had told myself, "I did come here to study, to exchange ideas and broaden my perspectives on life." I had no problems with that, but it seemed that my social life was to be non-existent and my inner needs would have to be sufficed through the pages of various textbooks.

After my second week, I was transformed from an eager, excited freshman, into a walking case of the worst blues that ever hit me.

I resolved in myself that I would have to get off campus twice a week, get involved in Black organizations, go home every other weekend and check out the West more often. Despite what I did the blues followed me everywhere, accompanying me on my occasional trips home.

As I ran out of alternatives to enrich my personal life I realized that my books were suffering as well. How could I pull myself up when the fact remained that I didn't seem to have a single friend on campus, no emotional outlets to speak of, an embarrassingly empty love life and lack of interest in all that I was doing. I grew tired of bitching sessions with various undergrads about the life here, yet there seemed to be no other conversations to be had.

That was my state when became Editor of Black Affairs. My condition has improved much since then, because I have learned to accept the disappointments that I've encountered here.

I have come to realize that one of the greatest problems facing me and other Black students here on campus is the lack of the ability to communicate with one another which has greatly divided us. Many of us feel isolated and alienated because of this.

Black Affairs is an outlet through which I seek to express my views, thoughts, and feelings, about my experience here, but even more important it is a channel of communication open to Black and third World students to express themselves.

I am achieving personal satisfaction by attempting to alleviate some of the communication problems here, but I need your voice because this is your page. Help Black Affairs, help me and help yourself. Let us hear from you.

Stereo Co-op burdened, may require member work

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

"A work requirement may be imposed on members of the Union Stereo Co-op if more members do not volunteer their help," said Richard A. Dimambro, president of the Co-op, in an interview last Friday.

The Union Stereo Co-op is a Recognized Student Organization working as an information reference to provide its members the opportunity to purchase stereo and high fidelity equipment at prices lower than retail stores can offer.

According to Dimambro, more and more people are taking advantage of the low prices the Co-op offers, but a majority of the members don't understand the principles behind the operation of a co-op.

"The Co-op is a group effort," said Dimambro. The reason we can offer low prices is because we are staffed almost completely by volunteers, so there is practically no overhead."

Dimambro noted that presently only five or six highly dedicated members volunteer their time on a regular basis.

"The Co-op began two years ago, conducting business at a table in the Campus Center concourse. We are now one of the largest RSO affiliated businesses on campus with a membership of over 800 people and an average weekly sales volume of just under $10,000. You can't run a business of that magnitude with just a handful of regular workers," said Dimambro.

Last year business became so extensive the Co-op had to move into room 166 of the Campus Center, a room previously occupied by the Federal Student Credit Union.

Dimambro said that while acquiring their own room had its advantages, it also contributed to the Co-op's help shortage problem.

"We have now set up a display of demo and loaner equipment, a service critical to the decision process of potential buyers," said Dimambro. "Without our own room these types of services could not be provided. However, being located in an obscure place, away from the traffic we were accustomed to in the Concourse, has also had an adverse affect on our help shortage problem. The Co-op office has become alienated from it's members."

Dimambro also noted that only five or six members were showing up at the Co-op's meetings held the first Monday of every month.

"I implore people to attend these meetings, as important policy decisions are made," he said. Dimambro informed the Collegian that a decision to spend over $1000 on demo equipment was made at a meeting that only five members attended.

The Co-op offers a 5 per cent discount on merchandise, and a membership fee waiver to anyone willing to do volunteer work. The phone number at the Co-op is 545-1594. Their office is open Monday, Wednesday and Friday, from 10:00 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Tuesday nights from 7:30 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.

Trekkies exploited

[CPS] – Nothing is more down to earth than taking a popular subject and exploiting it to its limits. With the ever-increasing popularity of Star Trek, space exploration and science-fiction literature, the potential for buck-gathering is reaching new heights.

While U.S. and Russian military scientists work on feasible laser weaponry, while a professor from Princeton espouses on the advantages of space colonization and while everyone is still wondering whether there is life on Mars, former Star Trek actors rake in the money on the lecture circuit.

No one is denying the enthusiastic feelings people are extending to a television series that has been off the airwaves for eight years. No one is denying the increasing market and demand for more science fiction literature. And no one is denying William Shatner, Leonard Nimov and Gene Roddenberry speaking fees of up to $3000.

Intertwining his talk about the future of man's exploration of space with poetry and science fiction excerpts, Shatner recently received $6000 for two presentations at a college in Boulder, Colorado. Some of the more ardent fans of the series, which has grown to cult proportions, were angry at the 'intellectual presentation.'

Leonard Nimoy, the pointy-earred half-Vulcan Mr. Spock, got $2500 for describing himself not as Spock but as an incurable romantic. Speaking before a packed house at the University of Arkansas, Nimoy tried to bring the concepts of the Star Trek show into perspective with what humans find missing in their lives: life, truth, goodness, humanity.

While these two and others of the crew of the starship Enterprise are just recently capitalizing on the bursts of craziness affiliated with fans, the creator and producer of the series, Gene Roddenberry has been accepting engagements since the show was cancelled in 1968. Currently involved with putting together a much demanded Star Trek movie, it is estimated that for $2000 an audience can hear his views on the show, its potential and impact.

Trekkies who find that their thirst for their heroes is not satiated by mere speeches and film clips will find entrepreneurs eager to fill the gap.

about a proposed one-act play competition to help throughout the campus at some future date. De Vasto said that the competition would be held between dorms for winners of each residential area, and then there would be a "play off" to determine the campus winner on the one act play competition.

The motive behind this, according to De Vasto, would be to interest people in a different type of activity, motivated by the competition between dorms. He said that he wished to have feedback on this idea before anything was started.

Representatives were asked to speak with residents about the idea to see if there would be adequate response to follow through.

"We'll learn something from doing these plays," said De Vasto. "They can serve to pull the dorm together and to bring different areas in contact with each other," he said.

Hijacker seizes plane with 'guns' of bread

VIENNA, Austria [AP] — A young Pole being deported from Denmark wielded dummy weapons made of bread colored with shoe polish to hijack a Polish airliner yesterday and force it to land in Vienna, officials said.

Police armed with machine guns ringed the plane of Poland's LOT airline as it landed at Vienna's Schwechat Airport, but the hijacker immediately surrendered and was taken into custody.

Police identified the man as Andrzej Jaroslaw Karasinski, 20, who they said had been ordered deported back to Poland after serving a four-month prison term in Denmark for burglary, theft and forgery.

The incident marked the second hijacking within a week involving an airliner of one of the Eastern European Communist countries. A Czechoslovak plane was hijacked to Munish last Friday.

Authorities said yesterday's hijacking occurred while the Polish airliner, a Soviet-made TU-134 carrying 29 passengers, was flying over Polish territory on a flight from Copenhagen to Warsaw.

A passenger who had sat next to the hijacker said Karasinski brandished what appeared to be a hand grenade and a pistol as he quietly handed a stewardess a written note threatening to blow up the plane unless it was diverted to Vienna.

When the plane landed at the Austrian capital, passengers said, Karasinski quickly got up from his seat, grabbed his suitcase, nodded politely and said good-bye to fellow passengers, then left the plane and immediately surrendered to waiting police.

Police said it was found that the hand grenade and pistol were made of partially chewed rye bread colored with shoe polish.

In Copenhagen, Karasinski had been escorted to the airliner by two Danish police officers. But the bread "weapons" did not register on airport metal detectors and were not found in a search before he boarded the plane.

Fighting regains intensity in Beirut clash

BEIRUT, Lebanon [UPI] — Moslems and Christians battled across Beirut yesterday in the fiercest fighting since the latest cease-fire went into effect. The fighting set the parliament building on fire and delayed deployment of an Arab peace-keeping force.

The leftists and rightists hurled tank, rocket, mortar and machine gun fire at one another along confrontation lines in the uptown commercial district the midtown museum front and the southern suburbs.

The fighting threatened the 55th cease-fire, which entered its 15th day, and delayed the arrival and deployment of the 30,000 man Arab peacekeeping force due to move into the "green line" no-man's land separating the warring factions.

At one point in the battle, the parliament building on the "green line" dividing the city was rocked with incendiary bombs, setting a flash fire in one section of the building.

The snags over how the 30,000-man peacekeeping force will be composed and deployed delayed its arrival until at least Friday, according to Arab League special envoy Hassan Sabry elKholy.

The 22,000 Syrian troops already in Lebanon were expected to contribute the bulk of the force. Saudi Arabia, Sudan, North and South Yemen, Libya and the United Arab Emirates also will be represented.

President Elias Sarkis, who will have overall command of the peace force, announced the appointment of nonaligned Lebanese Moslem Col. Ahmed Al Hajj as military commander for the troops.

"It's been agreed that no more than 5,000-6,000 men from Arab countries other than Syria can be raised for the 30,000-man Arab peacekeeping force," said a spokesman for the 2,300 peacekeeping troops already in Lebanon.

"So the remainder is expected to be provided by Syria," he said.

"One of the factors that delayed the deployment of the troops has been leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt's rejection of Syrian forces entering his Chouf constituency south of Beirut," he said.

Rightist leaders also have voiced reluctance to allow the Arab force into areas they control.

Mugabe sets goals for leading Rhodesia

GENEVA, Switzerland [AP] — Robert Gabriel Mugabe, who is making a strong bid to become the first prime minister of a black-ruled Rhodesia, says he would spurn a $2-billion trust and investment fund planned for his country by the West.

"We would have nothing to do with it," the nationalist leader said in an interview with The Associated Press. "To us it seems as it its purpose is to bind Zimbabwe politically and economically and it could therefore compromise our independence."

Zimbabwa is the name the nationalists will give to their new state, and Mugabe is projecting the toughest line of the four rival black leaders attending the Geneva conference on Rhodesia's future.

The 52-year-old carpenter's son is the chosen political spokesman for most of the black guerrillas in the Mozambique-based Zimbabwe People's Army ZIPA. The guerrillas today are at the forefront of the black struggle for control of the colony that broke away from Britain 11 years ago under the leadership of Prime Minister Ian Smith's white minority regime.

Mugabe has spent time in detention centers or jails in Rhodesia and in pre-independence Mozambique and Zambia. During 11 years of Rhodesian captivity, he studied by mail and accumulated a string of academic degrees. Even his political opponents acknowledge that he provides much of the intellectual drive in the black nationalist movement.

The future Zimbabwe will be nonracial and nonaligned in the East-West struggle, he said in the interview. "We would hope to be guided by socialist principles."

He said the new constitution would guarantee the rights of the white minority because "our concern is not to differentiate. We want a united Zimbabwean nation. This is the correct approach."

For the Geneva conference Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo, the elder statesman of black politics in Rhodesia, have united in a so-called Patriotic Front.

The conference has been stalled on the issue of an independence target date, but the British, trying to break the stalemate, have proposed March 1978 as the goal.

Mugabe claims leadership of the Zimbabwe African National Union ZANU, and Nkomo leadership of the Zimbabwe African People's Union ZAPU. They are together again after a split between ZANU and ZAPU dating back to the early 1960s.

Boston Edison proposes new pricing plan

BOSTON [UPI] — Boston Edison Co. yesterday unveiled a time of day, pricing plan for all its customers, but conceeded it will not reduce electric costs for small residential consumers.

The proposal was presented to the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities by Robert D. Saunders, Edison's senior rate engineer, at a hearing on the DPU's plan to replace block rates with peak load prices, under which power costs will change according to the time of day.

Edison's plan imposes time of day price differentials on existing groups of customers without shifting the financial burden from one group to another as proposed in the flat rate referendum defeated in Tuesday's election.

"By this testimony Boston Edison adopts time of day rates where feasible and applicable," Saunders said.

He said savings for the average residential customer probably will not justify installation of special peak load meters which cost more than $145 each.

Installing new meters for all 540,000 residential accounts would cost more than 178 million, Saunders said. If new meters are put in at the rate of 20 per day it would take 75 years to complete the project.

Saunders said time of day pricing can help large users save money by permitting them to use costly electric equipment at off peak hours.

But he added, "In my humble opinion I do not think peak load prices can help small consumers.

"There isn't much load the average consumer could shift to times of day when rates would be lower," Saunders said. "Large residential users could shut off air conditioners or clothes dryers, the small guy doesn't have these things.

In an interview, Saunders also conceded even savings realized by large users eventually will have to be made up by future rate increases if the company's income dropped.

Cobalt 60 missing from stolen car

MILTON, Mass. [AP & UPI] — A bar of radioactive material was missing yesterday from a stolen car found stripped and abandoned in a wooded area here, police said.

Police had described the missing material as dangerous and warned nearby residents of the situation. But investigators from the state Office of Radiation Control at the scene said the material was not as dangerous as was initially suspected.

Dozens of residents evacuated their homes as a precaution against contamination by a radioactive isotope missing from the stolen car. Police and state health officials searched the area with geiger counters, but called the search off before 3 p.m. Police roadblocks stopped traffic from going into the area until the danger was assessed.

Police said another small container of radioactive Iron 5 was in the car and left on the back seat by the thieves.

About 30 policemen searched the area near where the car was stolen for what police described as a three-inch square of Cobalt 60.

"We're concerned someone will see a package, not knowing what it is — and that could be fatal," said a policeman at the scene.

The material had been inside a tool box when the car was stolen early today in Norwood. Norwood, like Milton, is a suburb of Boston.

Police initially said two bars of radioactive material were missing. But after searching the car they discovered a section of Iron 65 was still in the tool box.

Judge decides not to try cocaine

BOSTON [AP] — A district court judge has decided he will rule on a cocaine case now without trying to drug because he said, widespread publicity had turned the proposed experiment into "a circus act".

Roxbury District Court Judge Elwood McKenney yesterday cancelled the planned experiment saying, "I feel that it will be impossible for the result to be meaningful."

The judge said his decision in the cocaine possession case against Richard Miller would be handed down in the near future.

Lawyers for the defendant argued that the charges be dismissed on the grounds cocaine is a "harmless non-addictive recreational drug" in a test of the constitutionality of the state's drug law.

McKenney said last week he wanted to try the drug himself before ruling on the case. Arrangements were made by Miller's lawyers to have a New York Medical College professor, Richard Resnick, administer the drug.

McKenney's decision was made after several days of consultation with the chief justice of the district courts, Samuel Zoll.

"I'm pleased that it worked out this way," Zoll said. "Judge McKenney has been very cooperative, and he has a strong sense of the dignity of the district court system, and for that I am extremely pleased."

Zoll said he approved of McKenney's decision to "handle the case through the customary procedures."

The chief justice had expressed some concern over the implications of the proposed experiment for the judiciary.

Soviets contact President-elect

[UPI] — The Soviet Union's official news agency called on President-elect Jimmy Carter yesterday to pursue relaxation of tensions and reject "force, pressure and threats."

The Tass commentary came as world leaders kept up a steady flow of telegrams congratulating Carter on his election victory and expressing hopes for closer ties with the United States.

In the Soviet commentary, the Tass news agency said the main thing for Carter is "the understanding of the need to reckon with the real alignment of forces in the world."

"The existing alignment of forces in the world arena," Tass continued, "makes it imperative for the states to guide themselves by considerations of reason and relaxation of tension."

It said this alignment "dictates the need for taking a sober approach to international affairs, an approach under which major problems are decided at the conference table and not with the help of force, pressure or threats."

Tass said Soviet-American relations "on the whole" have been developing favorably and have "good prospects."

"Moscow and Washington can find, and often do find, a reasonable and mutually acceptable approach to many major problems," the news agency said.

The Tass commentary was among the first Soviet statements on the direction the Kremlin hopes Soviet-American relations will follow under the Carter administration.

The Soviet Communist party newspaper Pravda said the election result showed a wish for change among the American people.

Swine flu

Turnout sparce among poor, Blacks

ATLANTA [UPI] — A national Center for Disease Control official said yesterday health authorities have become concerned over the large percentage of blacks and poor people who are not receiving swine influenze immunizations.

Dr. J. Donald Millar, director of the center's Bureau of State Services, said blacks and persons with a "lower socio-economic background" are not participating in the nationwide program to vaccinate the population against swine flu.

"The black population has not responded," Millar said. "We are concerned about this and it's hard to put our finger on the reason."

Millar said poorer people critically need the inoculations since their lifestyles — usually characterized by inadequate housing, congested neighborhoods and improper diets — tend to make them less resistent to disease.

"If anything, one would hope for a better response there among poorer people because their risks are a little higher," Millar said.

Hugh Coward, coordinator of the Georgia swine flu program, said one principal reason for the reluctance in this state appears to be fear, following the deaths of some 49 elderly persons after taking the flu shots.

The center has said there was no medical evidence the deaths were caused by the flu vaccine.

Coward said his office, in an effort to get more blacks to take the shots, is "attempting to contact key black persons who are well respected and influential and ask them to make a statement" concerning the safety of the vaccine.

Overall, the nationwide immunization program has achieved "mixed success," Millar said.

"There's no queston...theat in some parts of the country they are doing quite well," Millar said. But in other areas, especially those states which "have not begun mass campaigning yet," inoculation percentages are lower.

The center reported that 7.1 per cent of those Americans eligible have received the immunizations.

The ballots are in...

Ford cleans up

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford cleaned up his desk, appointed a transition team to smooth the way for Jimmy Carter's presidency and contemplated his own future yesterday as an election aftermath quiet settled over the White House.

An aide said Ford had always been a "today" man, but he now must make plans for a future outside the White House.

"It's like planning for a funeral," the aide said. Ford named White House counselor John O. Marsh to be his chief representative in talks with Carter's envoys on the change-over after Inauguration Day, Jan. 20.

The President also has asked Maj. Robert Barrett, his military aide, to handle his own post-presidential planning, including the moving of his papers and belongings out of the White House.

In a quiet, mellow atmosphere, Ford did spadework for the federal budget he must submit to the next Congress and cleared his desk of paperwork in preparation for departure Sunday on a vacation trip to Palm Springs, Calif.

Aides said he also read telegrams, mostly from well wishers, and was still recuperating from the exhaustion of a final campaign drive.

They said Ford got 956 election night wires expressing sadness over his defeat, and 36 that said, in the summary of one aide, "we're glad you lost."

Putting aside the emotional disappointment over his defeat in an election he thought he could win, the President set aside time for talks with Barrett on his post-presidential life yesterday.

He was being urged by aides to take up residence outside the Washington area, perhaps in California, but to keep a post-election transition office in the capital.

Mrs. Ford has indicated she would like to move back to the Alexandria, Va. home they occupied when he was in Congress, but with their children scattered, it appeared the Fords might not settle in the Washington area.

Many job hunting

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Henry Kissinger could go back to teaching, but is quite likely to write a book for big money. Labor Secretary W.J. Usery is weighing job offers as a labor relations executive in private industry, at salaries running to six figures.

Attorney General Edward Levi, his old job as president of the Univeristy of Chicago now in other hands, still could write his own ticket in the education field.

Few Americans enjoy a more open and lucrative job market than those who have served in a president's cabinet.

Among Gerald Ford's people, only Usery has given any firm indication of plans after the Jimmy Carter administration takes over in January. But virtually all are specialists in one field or another, and very often, in these cases, this is the determining factor.

Kissinger's is international affairs, of course — both the practice and the teaching thereof. He built up tremendous power and prestige during more than seven years as national security advisor and secretary of state, and observers consider it unlikely he will go back to the academic life after that heady experience.

He has joked that he wouldn't go back to teaching because no university could supply him with his own jet plane.

It is known that The New York Times has approached foreign newspapers on syndication rights to Kissinger's still-unwritten memoirs, and it is reported that the London Sunday Telegraph was offered exclusive rights for 150,000 pounds.

Usery is a Democrat and considered the most accomplished labor mediator to come along in many years. His aides say he has decided to take an industry job although nothing definite has been worked out.

Levi also has received offers of prestigious jobs, and has a standing invitation to teach for a year at Cambridge. He has announced no plans.

The outlook for some other members of the Ford team:

Defense Department — Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, whose forte has been politics and government service, told reporters: "I haven't got the vaguest idea...I have literally not given any thought to what I would do after leaving."

Venice is all wet

VENICE, Italy [UPI] — An Adriatic tide turned Venice streets and piazzas into muddy lakes yesterday on the 10th anniversary of floods that destroyed and damaged art treasures here and in Florence.

Sirens warned Venetians of the fourth high tide in three weeks.

Brownish-gray waters swirled over St. Mark's Square and other low-lying parts of the city, rising 42 inches above normal before receding.

Carter and Mondale begin to make plans

PLAINS, Ga. [AP] — President-elect Jimmy Carter began planning for the coming change in administration yesterday before leaving for a working vacation on a resort island off the Georgia coast.

Carter and his vice president to be, Walter F. Mondale, planned a joint nationally televised news conference here after a day spent in conferences on how best to achieve an orderly change in administrations. Meanwhile, it was learned that Carter's senior advisers are placing first priority on appointments in the government's top economic posts, including the Office of Management and Budget, the Council of Economic Advisers and the U.S. Treasury.

Their reasoning is that these appointments provide the surest and most efficient way of taking charge of the government apparatus.

The meeting with Mondale, Minnesota's senior Democratic senator, is the first between the two since their election victory on Tuesday.

Carter made Mondale an issue in the campaigning by contrasting him favorably to President Ford's running mate, Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan.

Several national opinion polls have concluded that Mondale drew considerable votes for the ticket.

Carter chose him after a long selection process, and said his choice was based on which man would best be able to succeed him as president, not on whether he would balance the ticket or be most politically attractive.

Carter met through the day with a tight circle of advisers, mostly Georgians, who helped him win the presidency and now are helping him plan his administration.

They are campaign manager Hamilton Jordan, campaign treasurer Robert Lipshutz, administrative assistant Greg Schneiders, senior adviser Charles Kirbo and Jack Watson, the Atlanta attorney who heads Carter's transition office.

Rumsfeld works for smooth transition

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld pledged yesterday to make the transition at the Pentagon as smooth as possible but emphasized that President Ford would keep control of the nation's defense until January — including final decisions on the 1978 budget.

Rumsfeld indicated the budget to be presented to Congress before Jimmy Carter takes office in January would inevitably go beyond the $120.6 billion previously forecast.

Rumsfeld, holding an unannounced news conference, said he told senior Pentagon officials Ford's desire was for the best transition in history, but that he "will be the president through noon Jan. 20 and has the responsibilities of that office."

"You don't want to have 18 hands on the steering wheel, and there won't be," said Rumsfeld. "The people in until Jan. 20 have the obligations until then, and we recognize that."

Rumsfeld was asked about a number of programs, including the $22.9 billion B1 bomber project now being reviewed by the Air Force in preparation for a production go-ahead later this month. Carter has questioned starting production now.

Money for B1 production is expected to be in the new budget, which would go into effect Oct. 1, 1977. Rumsfeld declined to be specific about those funds but said he talked about the B1 with Air Force Secretary Thomas C. Reed Thursday.

"There is no doubt in my mind but that the realities of the strategic nuclear world are such that there needs to be a follow-up to the B52," he said.

The defense budget Congress approved for this fiscal year is $112.7 billion. Ford said last January the 1976 budget would be around $120 billion, but Rumsfeld said that in his view inflation made it inevitable the final total would go beyond that.

News in Brief

Senate appears just as 'liberal'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Retiring Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said yesterday the new Senate will be just "as liberal" as the outgoing one but will be more effective because it will no longer have to fight "a veto-happy president."

Mansfield also appeared to leave the door open for some future role in the Carter administration and said he thought Republicans had a "death wish" which has prevented the GOP from expanding its base of support.

Mansfield, who returns to private life at the end of the year, predicted in an interview there would be "a good deal of togetherness" in the early months of next year between President-elect Carter and Congress.

"How long it will last will depend on developments," Mansfield said.

Mansfield also suggested if Carter hopes to make good on his pledge to reorganize the government, he had better act early next year.

"If he moves quickly, the chances of success are much better," he said. "He's got to do what he can during the honeymoon period."

But Mansfield warned "some of the promises Carter made in his campaign are going to take time before we can get solutions and make changes.

"It must be understood that what Carter pledged he will do, what he wants to do, he will have to accomplish with the help of the Congress.

Women rank high on Carter list

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Two women are high on Jimmy Carter's appointments list, both in the federal budget area, according to the North American Newspaper Alliance.

Reporter Robert Wagman, writing from Atlanta, said he learned from Carter sources that Dr. Alice M. Rivlin, who heads the new Congressional Budget Office, has the inside track to become Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Under Carter's proposed White House staffing plan, OMB director will be a White House staff position. It is now a separate agency and the director requires Senate confirmation.

Also mentioned for a budget job is Nancy Teeters, currently an assistant director for economic analysis of the House Budget Committee.

'Family Hour' ruled against

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — A federal judge ruled yesterday the "family hour" concept adopted by television networks for early evening viewing violated the First Amendment guaranteeing freedom of speech, but said his court did not have the authority to end the practice.

U.S. District Judge Warren Ferguson handed down a decision in the suit brought by guilds representing writers, producers, directors and actors against the Federal Communications Commission, the National Association of Broadcasters and NBC, CBS, and ABC television networks.

In a key section of the 223-page decision, Ferguson said:

"The adopting of family viewing by each of the networks constitute a violation of the First Amendment. The networks are free to discontinue any variant of the policy provided that such programming decisions are made independent of concern for government reaction."

CBS, NBC and ABC, along with the National Association of Broadcasters, adopted the "family hour" in the spring of 1975 in hopes of reducing the level of sex and violence that could be shown on television from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. local time.

Weicker calls for new GOP image

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] — Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, coming off the largest win ever by a Republican Senate candidate in Connecticut, said yesterday the GOP should follow his example and emphasize its liberal side.

Weicker Tuesday was overwhelmingly re-elected to the Senate in a campaign that downplayed his party affiliation and made a strong appeal for Democratic and independent votes.

Republicans are greatly outnumbered in the state as they are nationally. The most recent voter registration campaign, completed weeks before the election, showed only 14 per cent of those signing up joined the GOP.

"On the whole if you take a look at the Republicans that won they were a progressive lot. I think people are going to have to go ahead and learn by example," Weicker told a news conference.

Weicker's record as a political maverick, unwilling to toe the party line has, caused him problems with some Republicans.

"There has got to be a realization that the Republican Party in the state of Connecticut and nationally need to broaden its base to include labor, the cities and minorities," he said. "I can't conceive of the fact that we're not going to the progressive route in this state."

Weicker was a vocal opponent of conservative Republican Ronald Reagan as the GOP presidential nominee. Weicker contended the only hope for a GOP revival was a move to the left of the political specturm.

HARTFORD, Conn.: Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, Jr., pictured here with Republican State Chairman Frederick K. Beichel, urges the GOP to follow his examples and emphasize the party's progressive side.

Hare Krishna member freed from parents and hospital

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [AP] — A member of the Hare Krishna sect will be allowed to [illegible] a psychiatric hospital but must report weekly to a court probation officer, following contentions he had been brainwashed by the sect.

Middlesex Probate Court Judge Lawrence Perera ordered Edward Shapiro, 22, freed yesterday from the temporary guardianship of his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Eli Shapiro of Newton.

Shapiro's parents had him committed to McLean Hospital in Belmont two weeks ago for a psychiatric evaluation. Psychiatrists from the hospital testified Shapiro had "no mental disorder."

Lawyers appointed by the court to represent Shapiro said his parents wanted not just a hospital evaluation but "a psychiatric exorcism" designed to rid Shapiro of his beliefs in the sect.

"I look forward to going back and being able to associate with the people of my choice," Shapiro said following the hearing, "Particularly my religious group, the Hare Krishna movement."

The soft spoken Shapiro, still sporting the traditional close cropped Krishna haircut, said, "I became a member of Krishna after careful consideration and because I liked their philosophy."

Asked about the brainwashing charge, he said, "The only people who think that are my parents and their associates who don't believe in my religion."

Shapiro later shook hands with his parents, then touched his mother gently on the shoulder.

Perera ordered Shapiro to report to the probation officer where he is living, what he is eating and whether he is seeing a doctor for regular checkups to assure his diabetes is kept under control

Police see possible link of abduction and drugs

PLYMOUTH, Mass. [AP] — Four or five men, armed with a shotgun and handguns, abducted a man from his home yesterday and robbed two others in the house, leaving them bound and gagged.

Police and state police searched for the abducted men and the suspects, who escaped in two cars. The FBI offered to assist in the case.

Abducted shortly after midnight from his home at 8 Murray St. was James H. Menton, 29, said the office of Plymouth County Dist. Atty. Thomas E. Finnerty.

State Police Detective Lt. Robert J. Zullas, assigned to Finnerty's office, said the men invaded Menton's house, bound the other two men and taped their mouths, and left, taking Menton with them.

The other two victims were identified as Ronald P. Burns, about 26, of Miami, and Robert A. Garry, about 24, of Perrine, Fla.

Zullas said officers were investigating a possible connection with the abduction and narcotics. There was no ransom note.

He said Burns and Garry escaped from the house through a window, cutting themselves as they did, and reported the incident to police. The two men were treated at a hospital for the cuts.

Environmental Issues

Anti-whaling groups employ various boycott tactics

[PNS] — The unrelenting efforts of some small but dedicated conservation groups have finally achieved a glimmer of hope for a truce in the Great Whale War.

The recent hopeful signs include:

A statement issued Oct. 18 by a coalition of 15 Japanese environmental groups, calling for a 10-year moratorium on whaling (Japan and Russia account for more than 80 per cent of the international whale kill);

—a progressive reduction in worldwide whaling quotas decreed by the International Whaling Commission (IWC) this summer; —and persistent rumors that the governments of Japan and Russia have agreed to suspend all whaling within two or three years.

Yet in the wake of these breakthroughs, cracks have appeared in the Save the Whale front over the various tactics pursued by the organizations responsible for the progress.

The most controversial tactic — a boycott of Japanese and Russian products — has produced recent charges of "vicious racism" against Japanese and Japanese-Americans.

Dr. Clifford Uyeda, head of the Japanese American Citizens' League's (JACL) anti-whaling committee, claims the boycott against Japanese goods has led to the belief that "American conservationists are not really interested in saving the whale." Many Japanese, he says, believe the boycott has served the interests of American industrialists more than it has the survival of the whale.

Dr. Uyeda adds that the boycott tactic has prevented the anti-whaling organizations from gaining the important support of Japanese industry or trade unions.

The JACL supports the demand for a 10-year moratorium on whaling, but opposes any kind of boycott.

Among the groups in the forefront of the anti-whaling effort, few favor the inclusive boycott headed by the Washington, D.C.-based Animal Welfare Institute.

Jersey tightens control on clams

TRENTON, N.J. [AP] — The New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection proposed yesterday to tighten restrictions on the harvesting of sea clams.

The 44-mile off-limits zone established earlier this year will not be changed, but clammers will be limited to a catch of 100 bushels a day; the landing fee will be raised from 1.5 cents to 5 cents per bushel; and clamming on Saturday and Sunday will be prohibited.

The regulations will take effect Dec. 1 unless protests substantiate a need for changes, said Russell A. Cookingham, director of fish game and shell fishers.

He explained that the algae fish kill this summer wiped out more than half the clams in 2,200 square mile area off the Jersey shore and overfishing is seriously depleting what remains.

Presenting Jimmy Carter: Hero and savior

Horatio Alger's hero, Frank Cortney was that perfect American. Left penniless by his selfish, almost villainous stepfather, Frank journeys to New York City to establish himself, finding a father figure to model himself after, a career, and a large enough fortune to be happy and nothing more. And Frank was that hero, that perfection in manner, that calmness, that meekness that fits into the American Dream. It's that puritan ethic that the good shall be successful and it goes even further than that. It's that American ideal that the streets cover mounds of gold and all one has to do is work and drill for that gold. And what's more, anyone can succeed if one works for it. Just like Jimmy Carter, the newest American hero.

He cries and laughs and smiles — unashamed to be human. And he even plays it up as part of his winning image. He was a nobody destroying that fatalist theory that a president has to be "somebody". Carter proved that American melting pot theory where anyone can succeed. And Puritan ethic? — it was obvious Carter who worked the hardest. (That's probably why he won.) Carter drilled for the gold.

Carter is more than just the American hero. He's a savior. He's offering a healing message. He's offering a healing message to bring up the morale of America, to heal the wounds that Richard Nixon left behind.

And people will listen to Carter because he is both the "agrarian" and the "intellect". He encompasses all the "heroes" from our past.

He's Mark Twain's hero set on the Mississippi River. Twain's hero epitimized freedom and an identity outside of society befriending a Black slave; Twain was writing during the time right after the Civil War.

At the rise of the city, the hero was the agrarian farmer — Jeffersonian rhetoric revisited. With the inception of industrialization, who could become the hero besides the farmer, the one who stayed behind and toiled the land staying close to the earth, that essence of being. And Carter is there, also — with peanuts known for their "high energy".

War — you were hero if you played with guns and sang while you marched. You were a hero to fight for your country. And that war principle was interrupted by the depression. But it picked up after with World War II and then the Korean War. That's when they invented G-I Joe's. Carter was there.

The science boom came in the 1950's. Astronauts and scientists became the hero. Education became important. The intellectual was finally accepted at the dinner table unlike the transcendentalist of the late 1880's. The American intellect was finally accepted and being developed. Emerson wouldn't be booed out at Harvard now. And Carter is an intellect, also — grinning, holding up his degree in nuclear physics.

Jack Kennedy played the inspirited boy wonder, the Frank Cortney of the 60's. "Don't ask what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country." It's what everyone needed to hear and heard and followed. Kennedy brought the country together and when he died, that "togetherness" began to fade into oblivion.

Johnson's easy Texan-drawl wasn't quite powerful enough. And should we, need we ponder on Mr. Nixon's destruction of the American morale? Watergate destroyed the vigor of the 60's movement. All the flower children went home to study for 8:05's or to work on Wall Street or to dream their dreams in a new bitterness.

And then came Jimmy Carter.

Only two years ago, he was an unmasked guest on "What's My Line" as the governor from Georgia.

"What, do you recruit nuns?" Kitty Carlisle asked the future 39th president of the United States.

"Something like that — no actually not", he answered.

And Jimmy — who would have more of those problems through eighteen months of campaigning and primaries — is an idealist. He's the new boy wonder, the new Kennedy. He speaks to the people and shakes their hands. His family has somehow taken on the glow of the Kennedy's. Lillian Carter reached the heights of Rose Kennedy during the convention, I think, without even trying. And Amy — the future spoiled brat if she isn't already — is another Caroline, another John-John. She'll be 16 by the time her Dad's out of office and will have had her first kiss in some White House closet. I'm sure we'll hear about it.

Jimmy also can deal with the press. He has charisma. He has that unifying quality. He is a compassionate man. Yes, he's known for his bad temper and oftentimes un-open mind, but he's compassionate.

"President Carter will be the greatest president in the history of the U.S.," his vice-president said Wednesday morning at 4 a.m.

"He will make this nation the most compassionate nation we can be," Mondale continued. "He will unite this country."

And Carter..... "Are you proud of this nation?" he asked to the affirmative roar of the crowd. "Do you think we can unify and bring them back together?"

He knows he can. (He doesn't just "think" he can.) That's just part of being the new American hero.

Welcome home, Democrats

By GEORGE SOMMERS

The Democrats who shamelessly helped Richard Nixon on to victory in 1968 and 1972 have finally come home. Jimmy Carter seems to have successfully restored the Roosevelt coalition of ethnics, Catholics, Jews, blacks, urban voters, and the South — which in spite of its increasing supports of the G.O.P. in recent elections, came back to help a local boy make good.

Even political heavy John Conally, who headed Democrats for Nixon, failed to convince enough of his fellow Taxans to make a Ford victory possible in that state. Traditional Democratic northern industrial states such as New York and Pennsylvania returned to the Democratic fold after their brief love affair with Richard Nixon.

Ironcially, big labor unions and the top Democratic power brokers, the very forces Carter shunned in the primaries, may be responsible for his narrow margin of victory in the election. These groups, aided by growing voter interest as the race between Ford and Carter tightened, voter registration drives, and generally good election day weather, were able to get out the vote that put Jimmy Carter over the top. It is generally agreed that most non-voters are potential Democrats. Voter turnout for this year was much larger than experts had anticipated, and this helped Carter.

The major impact of the 1976 election is the repudiation of the Republican policies of the past eight years. People are simply sick and tired of a stagnant economy. Gerald Ford is a very nice guy personally, but he lacks a strong leadership image. Carter was perceived as an unknown, but unlike the '72 election, voters were willing to gamble.

What can we expect under a Carter administration? That remains to be seen. During the primaries, some regular Democrats expressed the fear that Carter was peddling conservative, Republican policies. His choice of liberal Walter Mondale for running mate, proposed pardon for Vietnam war resisters, and advocacy of such traditional Democratic programs as the Humphrey-Hawkins full employment bill are dispelling these fears. Jimmy Carter can be relied on to carry on the spirit of detente, though without letting them Soviets get the upperhand on us, as they did in the great grain robbery of 1972.

Under Jimmy Carter, taxes may increase, but this will be offset by sharply cut rates of inflation and unemployment. Jimmy Carter has told NORML (National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws) as well as High Times magazine that he favors marijuana decriminalization — a long overdue measure. I believe that Democrats, after a term and a half of Nixon, and a half term of a Nixon appointee, will find that, at last, Happy Days are Here Again.

The community is gone

By R.A. TRICOMI

In these days of the liberation shuffle, where oftentimes one is identified by cause rather than by name, it is so very facile to escape into a myriad of escapism.

Doesn't it serve to produce a particle of paranoia for those of us who grew into conciousness when "community" meant more than a geographical or idealogical boundary?

The community is gone. It lies in a rubbish heap of slogans and some idealistically picked wildflowers. It sits hard, cold and empty to all those well-meaning children who carried banners and waved long hair in the face of revolution.

The city commons which held our dearest dreams sit solitary, holding the tractors and trenches of creating a "new look," for Boston, for New York...for whatever we not only held our ideals close, but each other.

Somehow, then, we were not alone, not lost in a shuffle of louder voices. Those of us who had tears in our eyes were understood. There was no insult.

The revolution existed in all...the rhetoric may have been simplistic, but the heart was most definitely in the right place.

No, I am not writing a eulogy for cause, nor for those whose ideals still preclude the person.

I am saddened by the loss of those smiles, those words of encouragement, which followed the cause; held the person intact, despite the "winds of change."

This university will never succeed as a basis for change. So long as there as are loners, recluses, ghosts living in dorm rooms, we will never have to true revolution.

Those who sit in judgement sit scared of recrimination. To reach to a stranger is a crime. To reach to a stranger is a mistake.

I am not judging you. I sit disillusioned...with apologies to those who reside on islands — and with that my utmost understanding of a basic inhumanity.

Facts about food nutrition

To the Editor:

It is quite shocking that a senior Nutrition major could seriously believe that there is little or no advantage to eating unrefined natural sugars as opposed to white refined sugar, or that white bread is not nutritionally inferior to breads made with whole grain flours.

After reading Gary Cresswell's editorial entitled "Unjust Criticism" in Tuesday's Collegian, I have to ask him — Where have you been doing your reading?

Open your eyes beyond "Consumer Reports" and look into the stacks of material written by medical doctors, nutritional experts, and university researchers, who firmly believe that white bread is — at most — useful for scraping up the dirt on your floor, and that white refined sugar is probably the worst thing that you can take into your body, accounting for the abundance of tooth decay, skin problems, obesity, diabetes, heart disease and nervous disorders prevalent in this country today.

Or better yet, Mr. Cresswell, look around you at the living proof of nutritionally unsound diets, at the overflowing hospital wards and the billions of U.S. dollars spent on doctor's bill each year, at the scores of people with obvious vitamin and protein deficiencies who eat nutritionally unwholesome foods such as white "bread".

Yes, white bread may be fortified with 3 of the B-vitamins, but did you know that these 3 vitzmins were put back in after all 13 B-Complex vitamins [along with protein, Vitamin E, and necessary fibers] were bleached out?

The principle point being made here does not concern the quality of D.C. food, but is this: It is not at all valid to separate the "nutritional' content of a food from the entire content, since it's not just the nutritional portion of your food that gets swallowed.

Check into what else, besides "3-B-Vitamins" and iron, is in white "bread", Mr. Cresswell!

The ideas market

Eldridge Cleaver is a wishy-washy liberal.

Or at least he would like to be. Liberals, it will be remembered, are those folks who believe that there are many sides to every issue, and can't quite ever decide amongst them. They'll hold an idea for a while until they see one they like better. But that waffling and wiggling is a grave threat to the American system.

It has been said that the free flow of ideas is the key to the maintenance of democracy. Naturally, some thoughts are better than others. In the capitalist system, volume of sales is a key indicator of worth. As Justice Holmes once wrote, "the best test of truth is the power of the thought or idea to get itself accepted in the competition of the market." (Abrams v. U.S., 250 US 616 for footnote freaks.)

Now America is a weird place. It could be considered the Sears Roebuck of the ideas industry. There are an incredible number of thoughts, beliefs, theories, and the like lying around for inspection. One can try on almost any conceivable concept. But the sceptic might ask how this can be. How can this setup lead to a good profit? The answer is simple. With such overhead in ideas inventory, thoughts can, of course, not be exchanged once bought. A brief allegory should make this clear.

Back in 1968, Eldridge Cleaver bought the idea of being a Black Panther. Now it turned out that this idea was defective, but when he tried to return it, the Oakland police shot at him. (Customer service is ALWAYS a problem). Somewhat peeved, he decided to try the markets down the road, and visited all manners of places. He found that while most of the shop owners were pleased to have his patronage, they stocked only a few ideas. Cleaver finally decided that a wide selection of merchandise was worth more than a money back guarantee. So he came back and declared that America was the best market around. The management in turn was so pleased to have him back that they said he could exchange his original idea after all.

But of course this made all the customers who had bought the same ideas pretty sore. And no wonder! Ideas are investments, and nobody likes to admit he's made the wrong investment, especially in a bull market. So it comes as no surprise that some disgruntled folks spitefully claim that Cleaver was actually working for the management all along.

Returning to reality, we rejoice to find that so many people seem to agree with us that changing one's mind is somehow not right. While we have trouble reaching the same pitch of eloquence achieved by some of the more civil members of the crowd attending his lecture, we too felt that the system has been unfairly biased in favor of Mr. Cleaver. His case will surely set a dangerous precedent.

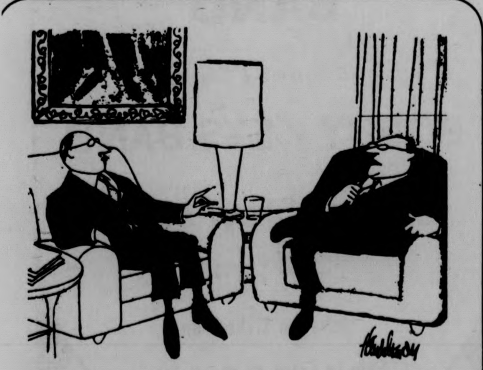
Already in national politics, the effects of idea hedging are making themselves felt. Gerald Ford of course has never been to the ideas market. Jimmy Carter, on the other hand, will frequently buy an idea and then try to return it, or even worse, claim that he never bought it in the first place. Mr. Carter has been quoted as saying, "of course my thinking changes over a period of years as I see things from a different prospective." Convenient. Is it any wonder that the American voter is disgusted with this state of affairs?

Even our language militates against changing one's mind. Think about it. How many times have we not heard men praised for "having the courage of their convictions"? Stubbornness is just an abbreviation for "strength of character". Conversely, one is hard-pressed to think of a nastier term of disapprobation than "compromise candidate". Conclusive proof comes when one considers that even the French have a phrase describing firm adherence to one's beliefs, that of course being "idée fixe". Now if one remembers that Frenchification is to language as bronzing is to baby boots, no further comment should be required.

Consider a few examples from history. The Supreme Court, normally a paragon of virtue and correctness, foolishly changed its mind in Brown v. Board of Education, thereby upsetting the noble doctrine of "separate but equal". And thanks to the fact that the Court did not have the guts to stand up for its beliefs against Franklin Roosevelt in 1937, we're all stuck with Social Security. Contrast this with the far more healthy era of the Civil War when nobody changed his mind. In those days, they'd "rather fight than switch".

We certainly hope that campus voters stuck to their guns in Tuesday's election, and that all the wishy-washy liberals have now been defeated.

While Mr. Randy Ginzig's contention that all citizens of Idaho are hicks (Oct. 28) is in fact true, he might also remember that some fools actually consider college students to be barbarians.



"All I can say is that if being a leading manufacturer means being a leading polluter, so be it."

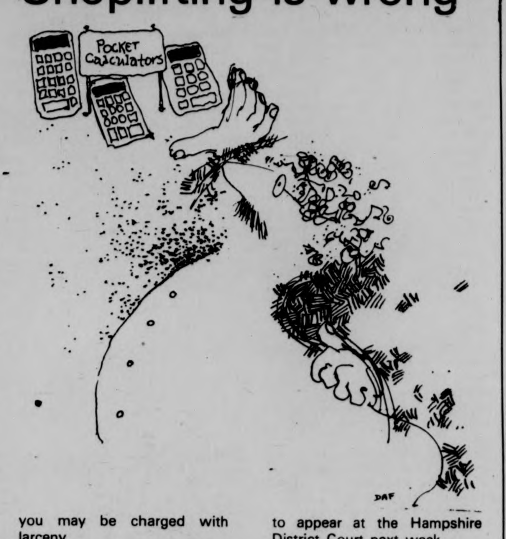
Shoplifting is wrong



By ELIZABETH KENT

You know who you are. You appeared at the Hampshire District Court Wednesday. You also might not have been caught shoplifting though you have "indulged" or presently do commit such an act. You are just like everyone else around you, for I think that many young people today have at one time or another stolen something from a store.

You might now be heaving a big sigh of relief because Judge Ryan was lenient with you yesterday and now all that you have to worry about is paying the $100 fine levied by the court. Or, you might be sniggering in your sleeve because you never have been caught. Please realize the risks that you are running each time that you take something that you don't pay for.

A sample case: You have been observed leaving the school with merchandise that you have not paid for, an umbrella, sunglasses, cosmetics, or clothing. A security guard stops you and asks that you come to the back of the store to answer some questions. You are ushered into the office and then are read your rights. The color drains from your face because only criminals have their rights read to them, you are not a criminal, or are you? If you have taken something without paying for it, you have opened yourself to criminal prosecution, namely, you may be charged with larceny.

Is it worth taking the risk of such prosecution in order to get some kicks or in order to take something without paying for it? I don't think so. When you have to watch as other students are found guilty or given fines, I don't think that you will consider shoplifting to be fun either.

Shoplifting is wrong. Need anything more be said? I guess that something needs saying here because seven students appeared in court Wednesday and three more are scheduled to appear at the Hampshire District Court next week.

It is wrong, there is no getting around that fact. Only you, you who know what it's like to have the Clerk of Court read your names, who have had a judge look you over, can help your fellow students resist the temptation of shoplifting. Speak out, speak up so that other kids like yourself don't go to jail because Judge Ryan is tired of giving college students the breaks when they are brought before him.

— our next referendum

The Dukakis proposition

By THOMAS MAJOR

The campaign and election so fortunately behind us gave voters a chance to express their pleasure or displeasure over a broad range of subjects and issues ranging from the cost of turning on a television set to the presidency of the United States. But nowhere on that ballot could you find a box, lever, or switch that would let you express your undying love and affection towards the great governor of our state, the man who gave you no new taxes and new leadership, Michael Dukakis.

What I had in mind was a referendum question. It could be called Proposition 13. Through this proposition, a voter could have simply voted "yes" or "no" on Governor Dukakis. A "yes" vote would mean approval; a "no" vote would mean disapproval.

There was one great advantage to this new system. Under the present election system, the only way to vote against Dukakis is by voting for somebody else. This would mean that the only way to vote "no" on Dukakis would be to vote for Elliot Richardson or Michael Robertson or whoever else the Republican Party could dredge up for their candidate.

While the mind boggles at the possible list of people more preferable as a governor than the incumbent, the Republicans have always had a genius for consistently producing candidates less palatable than their Democratic opponents. It is a perverse talent that, if it is exercised in 1978, could re-elect Dukakis, despite his horrendous performance in office.

My Proposition 13 would remedy this. If the "yes"'s won, the governor would stay. But if the "no"'s won, the governor's chair would be left empty until the next election. Alarmists might worry about what would happen if the state had no governor, but considering some of the horrors perpetrated on the state in the past with a governor, it might be a good idea to try going at it without a governor on the principle that a drifting ship with no captain is drier than a sinking ship with a captain.

New wave of ocean piracy

Last May 12 a Portland, Ore., couple set sail from Hawaii for Port Angeles, Wash., in their 25-foot trimaran, the Drum. Michael and Cordelia McMinn, both 26, carried provisions for nearly three months but expected to complete their trip within six weeks. They have not been heard from since.

Two months later, four Spanish-speaking pirates boarded the disabled sailing sloop Feisty off the coast of Colombia, and, according to the Coast Guard, murdered two of its crew. Two other Americans on board survived, but the killers escaped, their motive still unknown.

These seemingly isolated incidents, separated by thousands of miles, may signal a resurgence of "yachtjacking" — a deadly form of highseas piracy in which amateur drug smugglers hijack private pleasure boats, murder the owners and crew at sea, then destroy the boats after using them for drug runs.

Between the spring of 1971 and the summer of 1974, according to Coast Guard records, 611 private pleasure boats mysteriously vanished at sea.

Although they departed ports scattered from Hawaii to the Bahamas, they all conformed at least in part to a general profile: they were seaworthy, outfitted for long voyages, capable of carrying large cargoes, departed their last ports of call unobserved, had large sums of money aboard and-or had at least one crew member of suspect identity.

Most of the 611 boats vanished without a trace, carrying some 2,000 persons with them. But in 44 cases involving some 200 missing persons, there was at least strong circumstantial evidence that foul play was involved, according to an investigation by the U.S. House of Representatives Coast Guard Subcommittee.

During the same three-year period, the Caribbean, Gulf and Pacific waters long favored by pleasure boatsmen were invaded by an element that seemed a world apart: drug smugglers, opening up new routes from South and Central America to the U.S. after the demise of the French connection.

At first the smugglers crowded the airways with private planeloads of Mexican heroin, Bolivian cocaine and Colombian marijuana. Then, when air routes became closely monitored, they switched to boats — motorboats, commercial fishing vessels, even trawler yachts, docking along the pockmarked coastlines of Florida or California.

Yachtjacking offered amateur smugglers a chance to make big scores with little investment or sik. "it's the perfect crime," says congressional investigator Carl Perian. "The beauty of it for the criminal is that he gets rid of all the evidence."

Then, on Aug. 28, 1974, the same day the House subcommittee opened its yachtjacking probe, the Coast Guard issued its first warning to boatsmen about the latter-day piracy.

In a coincidence striking in its implications, the more than three-year wave of unexplained boat disappearances came to an abrupt end starting that same day. In that period, there had been an average of more than 15 such disappearances per month — leaping from just one or two per month in 1970.

Now, two years after the crew of a Connecticut-based boat named the Sea Wind became the victims of the last documented yachtjacking on Aug. 28, 1974, some investigators fear the phenomenon may be back.

"We're keeping a continuing file going," says Carl Perian, who spearheaded the congressional yachtjacking probe two years ago under the direction of his boss, Rep. John M. Murphy (D., N.Y.), then head of the House Coast Guard Subcommittee. "The Drum and Feisty both fit the general profile of suspected yachtjackings — the first since the Sea Wind."

Mark T. Sheehan, a public information officer for the Justice Department in Washington, D.C. — and the father of Cordelia McMinn, missing with her husband Michael aboard the Drum — agrees with Perian.

According to Sheehan, there have been at least three reliable sightings of the Drum since mid-September. All were near Haro Strait in Canada — only 40 miles from the McMinn's destination in Washington.

"I think hijacking is the most likely possibility" to explain their disappearance, Sheehan says. "Michael was an experienced sailor. The Drum had an emergency transmitter. And trying to be objective as I can, he and Cordelia aren't the types to run off for a lark to get involved with drug-running themselves."

Frank Power, a navigator of the yacht Kamalii, was one of the rare survivors of a yachtjacking in 1971. Power and two Kamalii crewmates were rescued in the Pacific Ocean after being dumped overboard by three drug-smuggling hijackers. (Rolling Stone photo)

Mt. Holyoke honors actress Julie Harris

Mount Holyoke College, the nation's oldest continuing institution of higher education for women, will honor a distinguished woman of the American stage and film on Founder's Day Sunday.

The college has announced that actress Julie Harris will be awarded a Doctor of Fine Arts degree during the ceremony which each year marks the anniversary of the school's founding in November, 1837.

The recognition of Harris' outstanding career, which spans over 30 years and includes four Antoinette Perry awards, coincides with her national appearance in "The Belle of Amherst," a dramatization of the life of poet Emily Dickinson. The actress received triumphant reviews for her sensitive interpretation of the William Luce script, which is based on the poet's letters and verse, when the play opened on Broadway last spring. Currently on tour, Miss Harris will bring her one-woman production to Amherst for eight performances during the first week in November.

String quartet in Amherst concert

The Department of Music at Amherst College will present the Cleveland Quartet in 1976-77 in a five-concert series of the complete Beethoven Quartets.

The series opens on Saturday, Nov. 6, with the first of five concert appearances that will take place between then and April 6, 1977. Series tickets are now available to the general public. The price for series tickets sold to the public will be $15. Tickets for individual concerts will be $4 and will be available to all the week of the performance. Seating will be reserveed, and tickets may be obtained through the Department of Music at Amherst College.

Community center in art show, sale

The Jewish community of Amherst (JCA) invites the public to view some of those broken windows from the new John Hancock Tower in Boston — melted down and blown into unique bowls and vases by Roberley Bell — at its annual Art Show & Sale Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. at 742 Main Street.

The JCA show will provide a gallery-like atmosphere where buyers and browsers alike can enjoy the delights of art in various media. Featured works will range from oils, graphics and framed photography, to enameled copper items, handthrown pottery and natural yarn pillows.

For art lovers who want something different, the JCA will have examples of a new art form called "Heliokinetics". These creations by Ben Chasiel appear to change their shape and color as the viewer varies his distance and angle of approach. They involve painstaking construction based on principles of refraction of light.

Other unique art works include enamel on copper "Ming Trees" by Peter Merzbach, and polished geodes and other lapidary by Larry Feldman.

Summer Session announcements

UMass' Summer Session for 1977 is now in the planning stages, according to Alan Ashton, who was recently appointed director. Ashton also announced the formation of a Summer Session Advisory Committee, which will make recommendations regarding policies and procedures for the Summer Session. The ccmmittee, which meets bi-weekly, was selected to represent all aspects of the University community.

Since its inception, the committee has met twice and finalized a calendar and course and services fees. The Summer Session for 1977 will consist of two six-week sessions. The first session begins May 25 (evening classes begin on the 24th) and concludes July 6. The second six-week session begins on July 11 and ends on August 18. Courses and workshops which deal with subject matter that can best be taught outside of the standard six-week framework may be specially scheduled.

Day classes, in most cases, meet each day during the morning hours. Most evening classes will meet for three nights a week, excluding Fridays, with each meeting lasting for two and one-half hours.

The 1977 Summer Session will be fee-assisted. This means that the course fees collected are used to cover instructional expenses, while state funds are used to offset the administrative costs. The course fees for the upcoming Summer Session will remain the same as they were in 1976: $25 per undergraduate credit and $40 per graduate credit.

Service fees for student activities, health services, and Campus Center amortization will continue to be charged on a per-week basis. At the present time, no increases in service fees are anticipated.

A listing of Summer Session courses will be available to students during the Spring semester preregistration and counseling period, Nov. 15 to 19. By making the list available during this period, it is hoped that students who anticipate attending Summer Session will be better able to plan their Spring semester ccurse schedule.

The Collegian and WMUA will continually bring students updated information on Summer Session 1977.

Hampshire Neighborhood Center and radio station WHMP are holding a Food-a-Thon starting Sunday to aid low income families and individuals throughout Hampshire County who need emergency food assistance.

The Food-a-Thon, which will be based at Hampshire Neighborhood Center, 80 Main St., Northampton, is a combination of many efforts:

— A radio auction will be held nightly with WHMP broadcasting from the Neighborhood Center, Monday through Friday from 7 to 9 p.m. Items to be auctioned have been donated from local merchants and national celebrities.

— "Kick-off Sunday" is Sunday. Churchgoers throughout Hampshire County will be bringing food items to their own churches. These offerings will then be brought to the Neighborhood Center for distribution throughout the winter.

— Many clubs are donating food items through their organization.

With the coming of winter, many families will find themselves in an economic dilemma. They will be choosing between a utility shut-off and groceries; out of a job and waiting to collect unemployment compensation; and without unemployment compensation because their fund has run dry.

These situations occur every day throughout Hampshire County and these people need support.

By contributing to the Food-a-Thon, bidding in the auction, or bringing a food item to church you can help insure that people in Hampshire County will nt go hungry this winter.

Alternative energy display here today

Kye Cochran, administrator of the Alternative Energy Resources Organization (AERO), of Billings, Montana, will give a slide, movie and videotape presentation of the New Western Energy Show (NWES), a traveling energy show built and exhibited in 13 Montana towns last summer. The presentation will be held today from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. in Campus Center room 169. A videotape of the show will also be shown at the lobby area of the Student Union Builing.

The NWES is a uniquely integrated display of working hardware, (wind generators, solar devices, water turbines, etc.), informational panels, educational materials to read and for sale, and theatrical-musical presentations. In addition, NWES technicians conduct hands-on workshops; last summer they directed participants in building working solar water-heating panels in 9 of the 13 towns visited. The NWES encourages citizens of each community it visits to bring local renewable energy projects to display at the show.

In her presentation, Kye plans to talk with people about how a similar format could be developed locally.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Child health topic of final workshop

The final workshop in the three-part series offered by Dr. James Abel, staff pediatrician of the University Health Services, will be held tomorrow from 3 tp 5 p.m. in the auditorium of Skinner Hall.

Abel will conclude his presentation with a discussion of Hyperactivity, Behavior Problems in School and Learning Disabilities and their link with health and nutrition. This workshop is of particular interest to those parents with a child who has been diagnosed as having one of these problems, to educators, and to those interested in the importance of proper nutrition, environmental controls, and their role in the developing child.

Limited child care will be offered, with volunteer students supervised by a staff of professional pre-school teachers. If this care is necessary for you, please call Alex or Susan Mackey at 665-2885, or leave a message at 545-2403.

The seminar, Buddhist Meditation, the Path of Non-aggression", will be held in room 803 of the Campus Center. It will begin with a talk at 8:00 tonight and continue from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. tomorrow and Sunday with more talks, discussions, meditation, and personal meditation instruction. There will be people going from dorm to dorm Sunday, Monday and Tuesday collecting donations for this fund.

There will also be an information and collection table set up on the Campus Center concourse starting Nov. 15 to 19.

Recommendations for future grads

If you are a senior graduating in June, the next few weeks can be important to you in thinking and planning about graduate or professional school. Deadlines for applications generally fall early next year, so now is the time to gather applications, put together some recommendations, and take the necessary tests, such as Law Boards on GRE's.

What is just as important is sorting out the alternatives. Even if you know you will be out of school for awhile, it is wise to look into alternatives before you leave campus.

If you want help with any of these issues surrounding graduate study, see the Pre-Graduate Study advisor, Frank Lennox, in CASIAC E 26 Machmer Hall Tuesday through Thursday mornings and all day Friday. The telephone number is 545-2191.

YOUR BIRTHDAY

by Stella Wilder

Friday, November 5 — Born today, you are one to establish many enjoyable relationships with members of the opposite sex – but you are not particularly interested in making any one of those relationships permanent. You enjoy "playing the field"; you do not, however, take lightly any with whom you "play." You have a special fondness for children, for you possess yourself much of the child's nature. You take yourself seriously, though not so seriously that you cannot see the funny side of a given situation. You enjoy any activity that brings you into contact with the young or the elderly, for from all three you gain a deep sense of peace and experience a sense of sympathy.

Calm of nature and thriving on the security that comes of order, you are a methodical person who works best when sticking to a definite schedule fitted in dovetail fashion into the time slots of your waking hours. You do not enjoy surprises, nor are you one to take even logical changes of plan in stride; you prefer being asked -- and receiving what you ask for.

In spite of the fact that you appear calm, cool and collected, you do a great deal of decision making with your heart. Fortunately for you, your heart is in the "right" place, for through intuitition and instinct, you manage to gain your ends more often than not. It is difficult for others to fool you or to take advantage of you in any way, even though you do not always remain alert to the possibility that they might try.

Saturday, November 6

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — This is no time for mixing playtime with business hours. Make your bid for advancement early. Decisions have long been made by evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Have your responses ready. Otherwise, you may become flustered and find yourself unable to respond at all.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Precarious finances make it difficult for you to accept new invitations to participate in social gatherings.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Aggression is the key to success at this time. Your tendency to submit to authority at the drop of a hat may cause setbacks to your career.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — An exuberant acknowledgement of another's praise brings you more of the same. Be sure to realize your own image. Clarify your position in the evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Save your strength and your ammunition. Don't be suspicious of those who offer to help; they are probably sincere.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You should be able to carry business forward with relative ease today. Avoid embroidering your story when the time comes to tell it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Work on the home front proceeds with little interruption – unless you have taken into your confidence those who would interfere.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A mood of nostalgia brings you face to face with memories you thought you had left behind. Old wounds may need to be rehealed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Demonstrate your ability to lead to those in your community searching for someone to place in a key position where community projects are concerned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — The drama of the present situation on the home front should come home to you with considerable force this evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The more broadmindedly you can consider new knowledge of another's behavior, the more you will be able to live happily with what you know.

Moon Waxes full with Desire

By JACOB LOVE

Just as the Moon pulls the tides, our em-oceanl life also moves with her waxing and waning. The Moon symbol-izes our fluid emotional web of habit-patterns. She is thus the primary indicator of "the people's" mood. Each moon-th, the new Moon marks the co-munion with the Sun and, as she waxes towards full, the solar message is carried to maturation thru the succeeding signs of the Zodiac. Two weeks ago, the new Moon occurred in the sign of Scorpio. The unfolding message has been that of partnership-productivity, the death-and-rebirth of relationships — romping thru the scorpionic swamp. The Sun enlightens our soul from the wealth of hidden meaning in the secretive sign, Scorpio, and the Moon works thru the necessary emotional changes symbolized by the succeeding signs while moving towards full. The Full Moon occurs as she passes into Taurus this afternoon at 12:24 and comes to oppose the Sun, at 6:15 p.m. Saturday.

While the Moon is in Taurus, she will accentuate that sign's love of material goodies. Taurus is symbolized by the Cow or Bull, a quiet bovine creature happy in the green flowery pasture of plenty. But the Taurean energy can tend to get over-possessive and, if we don't balance with our Scorpionic need to share, we may find ourselves in a self-defeating tug-of-war that rips open the candy bag. Scorpionic energy tends towards secret selfishness unless it's reborn to behold the true beauty of the gifts of materiality. That beauty flows from the Sun — and nobody owns it.

Today begins with a pleasant after-glow from yesterday's insights. 7:30 a.m. contained the seeds for a few scattered mildly bad dreams that served to remind us that we can't flow unless we take action to work our dreams out in the real world. For anybody who enjoys meditation, 9:40 a.m. could be filled with harmonious serenity. But as we move towards two p.m., a growing wave of discontentment may trigger selfishness and greed unless we balance with an enlightened sense of sharing. The rest of the afternoon should flow smoothly with time for toughtful reflection and refreshing insights. Towards midnite disharmonies may increase. After that, the probability of misunderstanding and selfishness will increase intermittently thru Monday morning.

Unless, of course, we are able to balance by accepting our own limitations and recognizing the rights of those less-than-perfect but very lovable people around us. The truth of honest sharing will be available through-out the week-end, if we have the grace to reach out for it. After all, it was the Taurus Full Moon which brought the Buddha enlightenment.

NHL prexy imposes stiff fighting penalty

MONTREAL [UPI] — NHL president Clarence Campbell imposed one of the stiffest penalties of his career Thursday in suspending Detroit Red Wings defenseman Bryan Watson for 10 games for a fight with the Chicago Black Hawks' Keith Magnuson in a game Oct. 30.

Magnuson, the 29-year old seven-year veteran defenseman with the Hawks, suffered a broken jaw in the fight.

In suspending Watson without pay until after Nov. 21, Campbell said "players have no right to take the law into their own hands to affect retribution ... such a philosophy would simply destroy efforts to produce orderly discipline."

The suspension is the first under a new NHL rule this year which states a player involved in a fight can be given a major and game misconduct penalty for being the aggressor and "is plainly doing so for the purpose of intimidation or punishment."

The NHL president said his decision was carefully thought out on the basis of the facts surrounding the incident which were given at a hearing in Detroit Wednesday.

He said midway through the third period of the Oct. 30 game won by Chicago 4-1, Watson attacked Manguson after the Hawks defenseman high-sticked Mike Bloom of Detroit.

Campbell said referee John McCauley correctly assessed the game misconduct to Watson and a minor penalty on Magnuson for the highstick offense against Bloom.

"It was contended on behalf of Watson that if the high-sticking foul to Bloom had been called properly, the attack on Magnuson would not have happened," the NHL chief said.

"This of course is simply conjecture. But what is certain is that players have no right to take the law into their own hands to effect retribution on their own behalf much less so on behalf of teammates.

"Such a philosophy would simply destroy all efforts to produce orderly discipline."

In addition to the 10-game suspension, the 31-year old Watson must also pay the automatic fines of $100 for the misconduct penalty.

even less effective at net.

At one point Smith led by a score of 13-3. UMass then attempted a comeback surge, but could only muster three points before Smith closed the door.

UMass was devastated 15-2 in the final game which featured some outstanding serving by Smith's Shuko Hashimoto. Hashimoto served up the first ball and did not stop serving until Smith had a 10-0 lead. Her teammates resumed their overpowering net play while UMass rolled over and played dead.

"Receiving serve was our number one problem," said Thompson.

Reggie Jackson, who was Montreal's No. 1 selection Thursday in baseball's re-entry draft, said yesterday he will talk with the Expos and several other clubs before making a decision on signing a contract.

He told a news conference that his financial adviser, Gary Walker already had held a brief conversation with Buzzy Bavasi of the San Diego Padres and would talk with other club owners before he, Jackson, got involved personally.

"I don't see any ball clubs I don't want to go with," Jackson said, adding he thought he could help any team.

He declined to discuss his salary demands, saying what he earned was his business. Other conditions were more important, he said.

"It isn't just the money up front."

While with Baltimore, Jackson worked with disadvantaged children and he said he would like to be able to continue such projects.

"I've taken a lot out of the earth and I'd like to be able to put something back in," he said.

Jackson was at the La Costa Country club to film a television series in which he interviews sports figures.

The Kansas City Royals, hopeful of finding a fulltime first-string catcher, yesterday made Oakland's Gene Tenace their first pick in baseball's re-entry draft.

Manager Whitey Herzog, in New York for the draft along with general manager Joe Burke, said he was optimistic the Royals could sign Tenace.

"Everything being equal I think Gene Tenace would come to Kansas City," said Herzog. "There is going to be plenty of tough competition in trying to sign him."

Tenace was the first player who was selected by the maximum of 12 clubs. Herzog seemed to think the Royals' strongest competition would come from the Chicago Cubs, Philadelphia Phillies and California Angels. Tenace also was taken by Baltimore, the Chicago White Sox, Cleveland, Houston, Milwaukee, Pittsburgh, San Diego and San Francisco.

The Texas Rangers chose Oakland A's Don Baylor, Bert Campaneris and Sal Bando in baseball's re-entry draft yesterday. Now all the team must do is sign some of them or the eight other players drafted.

Baylor, the first baseman-designated hitter for the one-time American League Kingpin A's, was the Rangers' first pick and is considered the most likely to be playing in Arlington next season.

Team-by-team selections in Thursday's re-entry draft:

Celts return home; NBA title banner hoisted to rafters

BOSTON [UPI] — NBA pomp and circumstance will precede Friday night's game between the Boston Celtics and Washington Bullets when Commissioner Larry O'Brien presents the reigning champions with their title rings.

The 1975-76 championship banner also will be hoisted to the crusty rafters of Boston Garden to join 12 other NBA title banners prior to the Celtics' home opener.

O'Brien will present the rings to Captain John Havlicek, then give the Walter Brown Memorial Trophy, emblematic of league supremacy, to club president Red Auerbach and owner Irv Levin.

Havlicek is expected to be ready, but sore from a pulled left leg muscle as the two teams meet for the first time this season.

The Bullets are 2-4 under new coach Dick Motta. Their starting five players are the same, Wes Unseld, Truck Robinson, Elvin Hayes, Phil Chenier and Dave Bing. But the Bullets also will feature three impressive rookies, guard Larry Wright, the first round draft choice, and centers Mitch Kupchak and Joe Pace.

The Celtics won their first game this season and lost the last two.

Orr plans to play until he can't skate

BOSTON [UPI] — Bobby Orr says he "definitely will not retire" and plans to play hockey "until I can't skate" anymore, according to a copyrighted interview published Thursday.

The Chicago Black Hawks' defenseman told Russ Conway of the Lawrence Eagle Tribune he hoped to play in three weeks following minor surgery on his delicate left knee.

"I'll play hockey until I'm not able to skate. The game has been great to me and I'm definitely not retiring now," Orr said in a Wednesday night telephone interview from his Northbrook, Ill., home.

"I'll play and just keep letting them fix me up until I can't skate and help the Hawks anymore."

Chicago signed Orr as a free agent last June after contract negotiations between the star and the Bruins broke down. After seven months of inactivity, Orr returned to be the most valuable player for victorious Team Canada in the World Cup Series.

Talk of retirement resurfaced after his knee swelled up again last week. One published report quoted Dr. John Palmer, Orr's surgeon, as saying the player planned to retire.

"I talked to Dr. Palmer about that and he never said that I was thinking about retiring," said Orr. Palmer said he was misquoted.

"The first time I heard the story is when I read it in the newspaper."

Orr, 28, has undergone five major operations on his left knee and had bone chips removed twice in the past four months. He underwent arthroscopic surgery, in which a laser beam is used to flush out the chips, early this week and checked out of Toronto General Hospital Wednesday.

He admitted the pain in his knee is severe and it hurts even as he sat and talked on the telephone. But he said he will exercise the leg to keep the muscle tone and is anxious to get back in uniform.

The latest setback was fully expected, Orr said, indicating he probably will have to undergo similar flushings the remainder of his career.

"It's not like I thought I would be able to play without trouble. Dr. Palmer told me in June I would have to go through these arthroscopes every once in a while. I didn't think it would last this long. I went (played) three months before it kicked up," Orr said in the copyrighted story.

"We all know the knee isn't the best knee in the world. But if I want to play — and I do want to play — this is what we have to do. I'll take it that way any time rather than not play.

"And I've been assured that when I'm finished playing, they can go in there and fix me up for good."

Expansion draft today

Stockpile of talent available

NEW YORK [UPI] — The Seattle Mariners and Toronto Blue Jays, who were hoping to build their franchises around young players, will have to change their tactics today when the American League conducts baseball's first expansion draft since 1969.

The stockpile of talent for the expansion draft comes from the rosters of each of the 12 existing clubs, but most of the names that have been made available are those of aging veterans whose best years are behind them.

"The clubs have done a fine job of protecting their players," said Lou Gorman, director of player personnel for the Mariners. "I couldn't have done a better job if I was on the other side."

"We wanted to go for youth instead of veteran players," said Peter Bavasi, general manager of the Blue Jays, "but we will have to change our thinking. There just isn't that much young talent available."

What is available are names like Paul Blair, Rico Carty, Boog Powell and Rico Petrocelli — players who once were all-stars but are now in the twilight of their careers.

While the lists of unprotected players were supposed to be kept secret, some clubs have made it known which players have been made available to the expansion teams.

The Cleveland Indians, for example, admitted protecting two young catching prospects, Alan Ashby and Rick Cerrone, while exposing veteran Ray Fosse and outfielder Charlie Spikes to the expansion draft.

The Boston Red Sox are known to have protected young pitchers Don Aase and Bob Stanley, while placing catcher Bob Montgomery and Petrocelli on the list, and the New York Yankees are believed to have protected young pitchers Ron Guidry and Ken Clay instead of aging outfielders Lou Piniella and Carlos May.

Each club is permitted to freeze 15 players from their 40-man rosters, but the remainder of each club's roster plus all minor league players under the control of the major league clubs are eligible for selection.

The established clubs have a loophole in making out their list of unprotected players — the "10-and-5" veteran. A veteran who has been in the majors for 10 seasons, including the last five with the same club, has a right to veto going to an expansion team. However, his team can still put his name on the unprotected list, knowing full well the expansion teams will not take him, and thus protect another player.

Boston's Carl Yastrzemski is an example. He informed the Red Sox that he would not go to an expansion team, so the Red Sox left him unprotected. Petrocelli falls into the 10-and-5 category but, since he no longer is a regular with the Red Sox, has agreed to go to an expansion team.

The draft will consist of five rounds, with Seattle and Toronto selecting six players on each round. After each round the established teams may withdraw additional players from the list — three after rounds one, two and three and two after round four.

Revitalized booters hunting for Wildcats

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

Just in case readers of yesterday's Collegian didn't believe what they read about the University of Massachusetts soccer team, I will reinforce it at this time.

The Minutemen scored two goals and defeated Springfield College 2-1. Joel Mascolo and Mark Abbott were the goal-getters.

This may seem hard to believe since the Minutemen hadn't scored a goal in nearly three weeks, but if you try hard enought at believing it, it is really quite simple; especially if you have followed the team through its period of showing nothing but goose-eggs (O's) on he scoreboard. The Minutemen tried, and tried, and tried and tried during the entire time. Finally, perseverance paid off and put the ball into the net.

Tomorrow, the Minutemen play their last home game of the season (1 o'clock) on Boyden Field. The point to be made is if you've been meaning to go to a soccer game this year and haven't done so because the Minutemen haven't been winning, leave your absenteeism behind you and attend this game.

The New Hampshire Wildcats come to Amherst, with fourth place in the Yankee Conference at stake. UNH currently stands 2-3 in the conference, while UMass is just below them at 1-4. UConn and URI, both 5-0, will decide the title when they meet November 13th.

UMass coach Russ Kidd has shown an incredible amount of patience this season. His frustrations about not scoring have been lessened somewhat by the tremendous effort put forth by his team.

Anyone for 'beat the crowds'

The Collegian sports pages concentrate mostly on the organized teams which represent UMass. Of course, only a small percentage of the student body constitutes these teams.

There is occasional mention of the intramural activities, particularly during playoffs. Although a good number of students participate in the intramural program, many choose not to display their skills.

There are certain sports on campus which receive no publicity at all. Everyone participates, although some have greater ability than others. The arenas for these games encompass the campus. There are events every day, but the action is more spirited on the weekends. Fans from all over the East Coast travel to UMass to witness the affairs.

This week I'll discuss a sport in which all of us compete, consciously or unconsciously. This sport is "beat the crowd", the most popular game in the Campus Center-Student Union complex. In this test of speed and agility you can run either the downhill course from the Student Union entrance to the exit near the Blue Wall or the uphill course from the Blue Wall to the Student Union. The object is to complete the course in the fastest time while knocking over the fewest people.

"Beat the crowd" is gaining national acceptance as can be witnessed on the Avis commercial starring O.J. Simpson. In this televised extravaganza O.J. runs wild across an airport, much to the delight of an old lady who shouts, "Go O.J. go."

Even O.J. would have trouble with the Campus Center course. On the downhill course you must first race through the glass doors without having one smashed in your face. Then you have to dash through the masses of people buzzing like bees in a flower garden around the Collegian stack, the candy counter and the stairs.

You then approach the winding stairs. They have been known to slow down even the slowest runners. The stairs, of course, lead you to the strategically located pinball machines.

As soon as you get through the crazed pinballers you must make a split-second decision. Do you take the route through the crowded Hatch or do you choose the straightaway to the left of the Hatch? Foresight and quickness mark the top runners at this point.

No matter which route you choose, you'll end up in another mass of pinball machines. This area is especially difficult. There are not only more machines than outside the Hatch, but there are also numerous tables set up with tempting goods to catch your attention.

These tables are only the beginning. The remainder of the course is dominated by similar tables, each offering temptation for even the most determined runners. There are also candy and cigarette machines, bulletin boards, a barber shop and a coffee shop, creating the stop and go traffic which upsets even the calmest, coolest runners.

Finally, you've reached the home stretch, which some experts believe to be the most testing part of the course. It's not unusual for a star to run a flawless race up to this point, and then run into ten or fifteen people to destroy his score. Numerous tables, more Collegians and the University Store cause tremendous crowds to gather.

The last obstacle is the Blue Wall. By this time you are so thirsty that you need refreshment, even though the exit doors are just inches away. If you resist the Blue Wall, then you must avoid those people stumbling out. They are targets which have frustrated runners for years. This final section of the course is undoubtedly the most exciting. No wonder the sofas across from the Blue Wall are always filled with "beat the crowd" fans.

You may question the value of "beat the crowd". Well, it was the training ground for some of UMass' most successful graduates. Why do you think that Greg Landry, starting for the Detroit Lions, is a scrambling quarterback rather than a scrambler? Where do you think Julius Erving developed his amazing moves? Where do you think Bill Cosby thought of some of his funniest jokes?

win, I will be happy if every one of our runners has run his personal best," said O'Brien.

"It's especially important that our third through fifth runners concentrate on running extra hard on second and third mile of the race for this is where the meet will be decided," O'Brien said.

O'Brien also said that if his runners finished their third mile with a good placing, the psychological emotion will give them a boost through the race.

"Usually the first mile is a fast one with all the runners trying to establish themselves. But if we go through the second and third mile in good shape and our team sees that the race is going well for us, the emotional psych will just help them to finish the race strong," said the cross country mentor.

O'Brien feels it is mandatory for all of his runners to run at least 15 seconds better than their YanCon performances if UMass is to challenge Providence.

Rugby

Rabid Rats - next victim?

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby club hopes to extend its one game winning streak this Saturday at 12:30 p.m. when it plays host to the rabid Charles River "Rats" rugby club. The "Rats" edged a respectable Hartford Wanderers club, 16-12 last weekend.

UMass meanwhile halted a string of four consecutive losses with a solid 10-3 triumph over Holy Cross. The opening stanza was quite literally an uphill struggle (the playing field featured a five degree pitch) as the Crusaders continually threatened to score - pinning the visitors inside their own twenty-five yard line.

The ruggers crossed the midfield strip but twice and only superb defense prevented disaster. Dynamic field general Robert "Doc" Laurence enthused, "they tackled like demons — excellent tackling."

The second half saw the visitors make a Jekyl-Hyde transformation; aided by the terrain — they thoroughly dominated play. "For the first twenty minutes we played as if we were still in our cars — yet they could only muster a 40 yard penalty kick for a 3-0 lead at intermission," added Laurence.

To open the scoring Tom Callaghan dug the ball out of a scrum, passed it to Peter Crane, who gave it to Larry Tebo, who lateraled to Kelley Atteridge. Atteridge, on an inside break, advanced the ball to the five yard line where he was hit and handed off to Bob Wronski who carried two would-be tacklers into the end zone for the score. "Textbook rugby," cried a jubilant mentor.

Eight minutes later the UMass pack embarassingly drove their Holy Cross counterparts 45 yards backwards before stalwart Tom Callaghan dove on the loose pigskin in goal for the try. Hugh Chester-Jones was successful with the conversion; hence the final 10-3 margin.

The "B" contest saw a repetition of this pattern as the home side spurted to an early 10-0 lead. However, "We came on like gangbusters and blew them off in the second half," beamed Laurence.

John Mulrey scored twice benefiting from excellent rucking by his backfield mates on a pair of beautifully executed plays. Doug Bayford later ripped the ball away from a confused opponent and dove over from five yards out for the score. Eddie Bender made two conversions.

This sixteen point second half explosion propelled the ruggers to victory Laurence cited the efforts of John Mechlin, Andy Middleton, and Charlie "Hawkman" Trippi as well as the aforementioned Mulrey.

These two comeback victories leave the ruggers optimistic for their encounter with the strong Charles River "Rats". "These are indeed the real Rats," said Laurence. "Several UMass alumni play for them. They are a tough team and we will have to play well to beat them."

In a press conference earlier this week Laurence announced that standout backfield performer Kelley Atteridge has been invited to the New England trials for the United States National Eagles Team. Atteridge is the only UMass player and joins Amherst College's Eddie Wack as a representative from this area. Atteridge has been a major factor in the ruggers surprising 5-4-1 ledger thus far.

Swim-A-Thon

Swimmers seek sponsors

By EUGENE SCOTT and SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

A National Swim-A-Thon will be held nationwide on November 9. The UMass swim team is very much involved in the proceedings, with Eve Atkinson, Director of Aquatics, the mastermind of the UMass effort.

The NOPE gym is the place to go (4-6:00) to make a pledge. The swimmers are searching for sponsors to help finance the more important swimming needs of local towns and help finance the swimming programs for leagues, swimming lessons, and life saving. Obviously it is an important day for the swimming world.

Each UMass swimmer is limited to a maximum of one continuous two hour period in the pool or a maximum of 200 lengths, whichever comes first.

The event is being used by our U.S. swimmers to build and endow their own Hall of Fame (the first in an amateur sport). It will also help fund local swimming projects, to send our national teams abroad for continued improvement in both local and national standards.

The ultimate goal of every swimmer is to represent their country in International events, with the Olympics in every swimmer's mind. This very moment another Shirley Babashoff is off somewhere swimming mile after mile of sprints, medleys and distance events.

Eve Atkinson is hoping for a large turnout, as your financial support will be used to build a new pool in your hometown and promote safe swimming. And, of course, swimming's own Hall of Fame and the necessary travel funds to keep the U.S. in the number one spot atop the swimming world.

will miss this game and the rest of the year with mononucleosis. The Purple defense is now led by senior defensive tackle John Trimbach (6-3, 260) and co-captain Bill Campbell (5-11, 205).

Campbell captains a young Holy Cross team that starts seven freshmen and four sophomores. "Any time, I'll take talent over experience," MacPherson said, "but I'll take experienced talent over inexperienced talent any time, and that's to our advantage."

UMass may hold the advantage in experience, but Holy Cross has the advantage in the series, 14-9-4. The Minutemen did bury the Crusaders last year, 45-13, but Holy Cross took three straight before that.

Holy Cross has also played two common opponents with UMass so far this season. HC beat Boston University, 31-11, while UMass dumped the Terriers 33-6. Last week the Purple ground up URI in the second half to win 33-14 and the Minutemen had to overcome poor field position to beat the Rams 14-7.

Holy Cross needs this win to make itself respectable and to up its record to from 2-5.

UMass is 3-1 in the Yankee Conference, but only 4-3 overall. The Minutemen need the win to break the two game losing streak and to give the team some insurance with two very tough games coming up with New Hampshire and Boston College.

"We got to have a win," Coach MacPherson emphasized, "we gotta have a win."

Young harriers to run for N.E. championship

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The depth of the UMass men's cross country team will get a test tomorrow when the sub-varsity competes in the New England Championship at Franklin Park in Boston.

With the top seven harriers competing in the varsity division, the next seven runners on the team will get a chance to prove themselves against the top sub-varsity squads in NE.

This year's race will be run over the 5-mile championship course, rather than the 3.1 mile loop that was used in the past. The NE coaches figures the longer course would do more to promote cross country, and give the runners a chance to compete at a distance they had been training for all season, according to UMass assistant coach Arnie Morse.

After its fine performance against Keene State's varsity team in the Albany Invitational, in which UMass placed second to the Owls, Morse has given the nod to six of the seven runners who contributed to that placing, along with one addition.

John Scheer and Kevin McCusker both ran in the top ten at Albany and should do as well, if not better in the NE meet. Matty Wolfe and Kevin McCaffery also ran well at Albany, and will be trying to crack the top ten tomorrow. Scott McKenzie had his best race of the year last Saturday and will be looking ahead to another positive experience.

Jay Legere and Neal McGrail had off days in New York, but should bounce back and then some. Legere knows what it's like to run out front as he collaborated on several sub-varsity sweeps earlier in the year. McGrail has shown tremendous improvement this season and will probably continue to impress.

"We should be able to eke out a victory," said Morse. "I'm confident of that. It's going to be a tough effort, though."

Morse expects the stiffest competition to come from Providence and Northeastern. NU won this title two years ago, while UMass, with Lou Panaccione, Mike Quinn and McCaffery running 2nd, 3rd and 5th, respectively, copped the crown last year, over the 3.1 course.

'Black and Blue' face Purple

Two streaking teams will meet tomorrow in Worcester, one aiming to keep its string alive, the other to end it.

When the University of Massachusetts takes the field tomorrow at Fitton field at 1:30 to take on Holy Cross, the Minutemen will be out to end a two game losing streak. The Crusaders have a streak of their own, winning two out of the last three.

Two out of three could be considered a streak for the Crusaders as they went 1-10 last year and until they beat Boston University two Saturdays ago, the Purple had lost nine in a row and 14 out of 15 in the last two years.

The turnaround started when the offense for the Cross started streaking. In the last three games, the Crusaders have put 82 points on the board.

Junior quarterback Bob Morton (6-0, 185) keys a wishbone offense that has sparked this mini-winning streak for Holy Cross. "They've improved since Morton took over," UMass coach Dick MacPherson said yesterday.

Behind Morton in the wishbone will be the up-back Steve Hunt (5-11, 190) and the two half backs Brian Doherty (6-2, 190) and Crocky Nagle (5-9, 185) both freshmen. Nagle is playing in place of starter Larry Ewald who hurt his ribs in last Saturday's game with Rhode Island.

Doherty is the leading rusher for the Cross with 416 yards in 66 attempts. Hunt, though, is the key to the wishbone. He is the second leading rusher with 290 yards, but when he missed two games with an injury, the Crusaders switched to a veer offense to compensate for his loss.

The leading receiver is Craig Cerretani with 11 receptions on a team that stresses the run.

Facing the resurgent Purple will be a UMass defense with a banged up secondary. Of the four starters that opened the season, only Ron Harris is sure to start. Todd Holt is out for the season and Dave Croasdale might do the place kicking, but little else. John Van Buren is out, too. If Greg Sprout can return after missing two games, John Beerworth will open at cornerback. If Sprout isn't ready, Beerworth will open at safety and Vic Jefferies and Kevin Sullivan, a freshman, will open at the corners.

Coach MacPherson wants Sprout back, though. "We've been very successful with him. When we lost him, we lost two games. We lost two games last year, too, when he was out."

Except for the defensive backfield, the rest of the defense is whole and sound.

Not so on offense where the team's strongest point in the beginning of the season has gotten very thin in the last two weeks. Kevin Cummings, the leading receiver for UMass, is out for the year with torn ligaments and cartilage and substitute Charles Balboni will also miss the game. Regular starter Moses Williams is still recovering from a neck injury from the UConn game, but still may see action.

Tightend seems to be a jinxed position as Dave Federici, called up from the JV for the game hurt his knee Wednesday night in his dorm.

The loss of Cummings and Williams will hurt in two ways. The Minutemen will be forced to change their offensive patterns, for one. "Don't be surprised if we go with three wide outs," MacPherson hinted yesterday.

The injuries also come at a time when the offense is in a slump, scoring just four touchdowns in the last three games.

MacPherson assigns this lack of scoring to mental errors (penalties, interceptions, fumbles) and poor field position. "We moved the ball well against UConn, but we couldn't get it into the end zone. We had three major penalties in scoring range that brought up third and long yardage situations. We also missed a couple of field goals.

"Against Rutgers we had two interceptions," MacPherson explained. "In the URI game we had to start all the time with terrible field position.

"It's mistakes by interceptions, fumbles, and penalties that we don't score," said the head football coach.

Matching up against the UMass offense will be a solid, but unspectacular Holy Cross defense. The Crusaders best defender, senior tackle Frank Matasavage,

Smith stuns spikers

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

After coming out like gangbusters the women's volleyball team could not hold on to a one game lead, dropping the last two games to Smith in last night's volleyball action at the NOPE gym. UMass is now 8-11 on the season.

All was not lost for UMass, though, as the JVs upped their record to 6-5 by winning over Smith in two games, 15-4, 15-1.

The crowd of 70 was surprised by the spikers sudden letdown after they had dominated in the first game winning 15-8. Indeed, no one was more surprised than UMass coach Dianne Thompson.

"After the first I felt we could take them in two games with no problem," Thompson said.

In the first game UMass net play was seemingly faultless. Dianne Bunker-Hannula and Heidi Dickson let loose with powerful spikes throughout the game. The spikers mixed up their strategy with occasional dink shots, instead of spikes, which frequently caught their opponents off guard.

Smith had trouble setting up its net game whenever UMass was serving. The few good net opportunities for Smith were thwarted by UMass blocking.

UMass then lost its aggressive edge and dropped the second game 15-6. Smith now dominated the net, putting UMass on the defensive. Smith was efficiently spiking and blocking just as UMass had in the previous stanza.

The Minutewomen could not set up their net attack. After failing to put the ball past Smith blockers, UMass backed away from practically all net confrontations. Bunker-Hannula, who could not maintain the excellent spiking she exhibited in the first game, was replaced by Sue Sabia who proved to be

Harriers face intense NE meet, Friars, Huskies to challenge

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Remember those action packed and tension filled movies, The Battle of the Bulge, Patton, The Guns of Navarrone, Jaws?

If you pack every ingredient of the pressure and nail biting tension of those events and put them into one, you might get the idea of the 76 New England Collegiate Cross Country Championships to be held at Franklin Park, Boston. Meet time is scheduled tomorrow for 2:30 with the JV New Englands being run at 1:45.

As they say, "Anybody whose anybody in cross country" will be there. Nearly 200 runners from 36 schools will come to Boston to compete in the five mile race. An estimated 1,000 spectators will be on hand to watch the race with the weather predicted to be sunny, cool, and with a slight wind.

The Big Three of New England, Providence, Northeastern and UMass rated 4th, 16th, and 19th in the nation by Harrier magazine, are ready to slug it out for team honors.

Providence is favored to win the meet but only by a slight margin over the Huskies and the Minutemen.

This year's New Englands are probably the most talented that I have every run," said senior John McGrail. "The individual champion is up for grabs and for the last three years, everybody has thought it would be Providence's John Treacy or Mike O'Shea for winning the race."

"This year I don't think anybody can guarantee who will win the race," said the senior harrier.

Last year's winner was Providence's Mike O'Shea as he set a 1975 Franklin Park course record with a time of 23:34. But, according to UMass coach Ken O'Brien, O'Shea has not run close to his record shattering time this year.

However, this year Bob Hodge of Lowell State and Jon Flora of Northeastern have since broken O'Shea's time. Hodge with a 23:18 time and Flora with a 23:28 clocking are picked as favorites to dethrone O'Shea as New England champion.

O'Shea's running mate John Treacy is also picked to contest for the top position as Treacy along with O'Shea are regarded as premier long distance runners.

Other runners who have run just shy of the 24 minute mark and also regarded to finish in the top ten of the race include Bruce Bickford and Bob Flora of Northeastern, Kurt Schulz of Keene State, Vin Fleming of Lowell State, Frank Richardson of M.I.T. and Mike Quinn of UMass.

Where the meet will be decided for the team championships will be in the third through the fifth finishes for each team. All three teams have excellent frontrunners with Providence being led by Treacy and O'Shea.

Northeastern has three top quality runners with the Flora brothers, Jon and Bob, and Bruce Bickford. UMass is led by Yankee Conference winner Mike Quinn and senior All-American John McGrail.

Providence, although having a very talented third man, Dan Dillon (12th in last years New Englands), is awaiting a good finish by fourth man John Savoie who has slipped in the last four weeks. Peter Hartnett and freshman Larry Reed contest for the fifth man on the team.

UMass appears to have a decided adge in the fourth and fifth positions. The quartet of Frank Carroll, Chris Farmer, Cliff Staples, and Lou Panaccione have beaten NU's fourth and fifth man Greg Senick and Jim Doane in a previous UMass-NU encounter.

UMass, coming of its 10-1 season record and winner of the Yankee Conference by a wide margin, 22-44 over UConn are a good bet to upset the Friars.

The harrriers, having all seven runners in the top ten of the Yankee Conference, including seventh runner, freshman Bob Martin, are out to improve last years disappointing third place team finish in the New Englands.

"Our strategy for this race is to concentrate on running hard and come up with seven strong performances from all of our runners, even if we don't

Day care rally protests cutbacks

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

A rally to urge lifting the suspension of day care services for 125 children attracted close to 300 people Friday at the Unitarian Church in Northampton.

The suspension, which is effective within the month, was decided upon by a vote of the Board of Directors of the Hampshire Community Action Commission (HCAC) Wednesday night.

The HCAC is an umbrella organization for the Day Care center and Family Day Care. Due to cash flow problems with these two groups, other agency problems are in jeopardy.

Carol Bond, a board member who voted against terminating the day care services provided by HCAC, spoke at the rally emphasizing the need for day care programs in the area to continue.

"We need the help of business, industry and banks in the area. We hope this rally makes people aware of how essential these needs are," Bond said.

Singing "Children need their day care, we shall not be moved," the congregation of adults and small children moved its way along Main Street. In front of the Northampton National Bank, the gathering sang," Banks we need your money, we shall not be moved."

The HCAC has applied to the Northampton National for a $40,000 floating loan. They will know later this week whether or not the loan will be approved.

Banks in the area have refused thus far to lend money to the cause.

"People will be made aware of the cost to the community if day care employees upon losing their jobs, have to relay on welfare. The way to make the community pay attention is to demonstrate," Stander said.

The employees lost to Day Care would include cooks, drivers, people for training programs and administrative staff, she said.

Stander mentioned that one encouraging factor has been "the work between (HCAC) staff and parents to save the (day care) program." She said that an estimated 47 parents will lose their jobs if day care no longer continues, because parents would be forced to stay with their children during the day.

Upon return to the Unitarian Church the crowd chanted "Mayor Cramer, whady'a say, save our day care right away!"

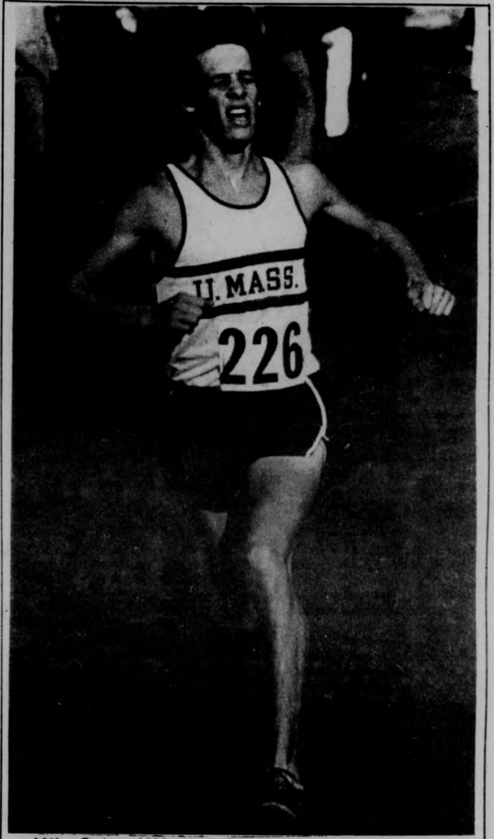
After the rally ended, David Murdock, the Acting Director of HCAC, said a meeting of county commissioners was scheduled for 5 p.m. Friday at which State Senator John W. Olver and State Representatives James G. Collins and Bill Nagle will address the issue.

The group day care and Family Day Care each costs the state $18,500 per month. Operating expenses include rent, food, utilities, salaries and transportation costs, according to Murdock.

He said he sees two main problems that HCAC is faced with. "First, the HCAC needs about $40,000 per month to fund group and family day care. People read in the newspapers about certain amounts of money being given to the HCAC, but the operating expenses eat it up fast.

"Secondly, there is a reimbursement lag in state policy, which states that if we send in our bill for operating costs by the tenth of the month, they'll get the money to us in 21 days. Often, however, it has taken them two months to send the money, and sometimes even three months," Murdock said.

Raffle tickets were sold before and after the rally. Prizes for the winners of the drawing, which will be held on Nov. 17 at an HCAC meeting, will be $50, a "package store surprise", and a fruit basket with two canned hams.



Mike Quinn, UMass sophomore cross-country star, is shown here 10 yards from his second place finish in the New England Cross Country Championships held in Franklin Park, Boston.

His second place time of 23:13 was just seven seconds behind winner John Treacy of Providence College, whose winning time of 23:06 shattered the course record.

Women's Media project opens air-waves, showcases involvement

By ANN TRENEMIAN
Collegian Staff

"We are here to help women take themselves seriously ... to talk about it, so women can become less masochistic, less accepting of crap and to be strong functioning members of the society," said Diane Snyder, a member of the Women's Media Project.

The Women's Media Project, a WMUA radio show, is run by and geared specifically to women. The format of the show includes music, interviews, readings, advertising and news events which are centered around women's culture.

"We expose people to women's culture," said Susan Snedaker, another woman involved with the project, "The show is for women to help us progress through a world that's unfair to us."

Music currently occupies most of air time and has to be "performed by a woman for us to put it on the air." Snyder said. In the past, certain non-sexist songs have been played but a strictly "women's songs only" policy is now being followed. The show is aired from 7 to 10 p.m. on Thursdays.

Members of the group feel men's music receives enough air time on normal radio programming.

"This gives people a chance to hear the obscure," according to Susan Elwin, another woman involved.

The music is chosen for its nonsexist quality, according to project workers.

The show serves as a "station tie in to the women's centers in the area," Snyder said. All women's center activities available to them are broadcast.

Residence heads find

Raising kids in dorms 'unique'

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

"Don't feed me!" reads a button that Jennifer must wear as she roams the lobby and first floor of her "home". Is Jennifer a baby elephant? No, she's the daughter of Carol and Jim Wallace, Heads of Residence in Crabtree and Leach respectively, two dorms in the Northeast Residence Area.

Jennifer is one of eighteen children from twelve Heads of Residence families on campus this fall. Raising children on campus and having their home environment be a dormitory can create some unique problems as well as some interesting advantages.

Jennifer holds up three fingers to show me how old she is as her mother explains that having people feed her junk food is one of the main problems with bringing Jennifer up in a dorm.

Jim and Carol believe she has become a more social person living in a dorm all her life than she would have growing up in a traditional atmosphere.

Jennifer smiles beneath two blond ponytails sprouting from her head and says she prefers Crabtree to Leach. Jennifer lived in Leach, an all women's dorm, for a year but her parents were worried she was developing a fear of men because of rarely coming in contact with them. She lives in Crabtree now, with Carol.

They cite the fact that she gets a lot of attention as a big plus.

"She comes into contact with people who are aware of sexist, racist, and gay oppression ... though there are people who interact with her in negative ways," said Carol, "mostly teasing her."

Carol said she plans to say in the dorm indefinitely if she can't get into graduate school because she believes being a Head of Residence is an ideal job to have while bringing up a child.

Cheryl and Kenny Shain call their six year old daughter, Shonda, their "resident assistant" because she often helps them to get out of tricky situations with students.

The Shains have been living in Johnson, another dorm in Northeast, for only two months. They also feel that Shonda's interaction with people heightens her awareness.

"She hears a lot of words that she might not otherwise hear, and that increases her vocabulary ... though she does occasionally pick up some foul words," said Cheryl.

Shonda, skipping around in clogs, licking toothpaste from her fingertip, says she likes living in the dorm; she's made a lot of friends, "some people are named Kathy, one is named Meg, ... some are named Chris, all the Chrises live on the fourth floor."

"She misses being able to play with kids her own age every day. It's hard for her to understand why her dorm friends don't want to do everything with her, and why she can't do certain things that they can do," said Cheryl.

Kenny said he senses a dislike for children on the campus at large. "We used to live in an industrial community. Everyone there was having children; my wife termed it a 'back-to-having-babies' movement. Here I think there's an anti-baby feeling." Cheryl interjects, though, that they haven't had any of those problems in the dorm.

The Shains said they plan to live in the dorm for two or three years at most, until both parents have finished graduate school.

Bill Kehoe, of Greenough dorm in the Central Residence Area, says his main worry is that his five-and-a-half year old daughter does not get enough interaction with her own peer group. He and his wife have lived in the dorm for six years and are planning to move out in January because of a job change.

Citing attention as a positive factor also, Bill notes, "there is always someone who is willing to entertain her, or to be entertained by her."

He believes that her rapid verbal development is largely due to having lived solely in the dorm atmosphere.

Diana Mason, Head of Residence in Pierpont dorm in the Southwest Residence Area, says there are no bad effects for her twelve-year-old daughter, Katherine. They have learned to sleep through whatever noise there may be.

"I think having cultural events in the same building for her to attend is really splendid," said Diana. They have lived in Pierpont for two months and plan to stay for three or four years if Diana can manage to work as Head of Residence and on her Master's degree of Fine Arts in Creative Writing at the same time.

"I want to stress that Pierpont is not at all what its reputation makes it out to be. We were apprehensive about moving here because we heard it was a drug haven, for users of hard drugs like heroin. That's not true at all — it's a very nice place to live.

Student finances sought; to help office determine tuition , aid policies

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

The Student Affairs Research Evaluation Office, (SAREO), is conducting a survey with the purpose, according to that office, of finding out "the financial needs and resources of UMass students."

The survey, in the form of a questionnaire, was sent out to 1500 students at UMass-Amherst on Nov. 2. The 1000 undergraduate and 500 graduate students were picked at random, according to Shelley Chaiken, a research consultant for SAREO.

The questionnaire, which is to be answered anonymously, is quite detailed so that a good profile can be developed of the financial status of students, said Chaiken.

Chaiken also said that at the present time there is not enough information on students' financial situations. "We don't have a good data bank" said Chaiken.

The idea for the survey came from the Budgeting Office, which is part of UMass President Robert C. Wood's office, and the Financial Aid Office.

Chaiken said the information from the survey is important for two reasons:

The trustees need to know what condition the students are in financially. They can use this as a guideline in deciding on certain policy issues; most importantly whether or not to raise tuition.

Also, the financial aid office needs the information in order to figure out how much assistance they should request from the state and federal governments.

This assistance comes in the form of such things as work-study money, loan money and tuition waivers, said Chaiken.

Chaiken said it is important for all the students who received questionnaires to fill them out and return them.

"You hope to get a representative sample," said Chaiken, "The larger the response rate, he more reliable the information."

SAREO, which designed the questionnaire, also coordinated the distribution of the forms and will be compiling and analyzing the data obtained from them.

Another similar survey will also be conducted at the Boston and Worcester campuses of UMass, said Chaiken.

Election problems surface

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — There were no votes registered on seven of the 10 referendum questions in three Springfield precincts, according to city Election Commission Secretary Donald Metzger.

"I don't know what happened. I assume people in those districts were not interested in the questions," said Metzger.

However, Marcia Molay, supervisor of elections from the secretary of state's office, said "It's quite clear there was a problem reading the machine. I certainly am concerned."

Last Tuesday, voters faced 10 referendum questions in the voting booth. However, in three Springfield precincts only absentee votes were registered on questions 1, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9 and 10.

Voters only pulled levers on questions 2, 4, and 6, which dealt with the graduated income tax, a public power authority and nonreturnable bottles.

Asked how could 1,527 persons in three precincts not register votes on a volatile issue like the handgun ban, Metzger said, "Maybe there were no policemen or sportsmen."

Ms. Moley said there would be a spot check of 27 other communities and 10 Boston precincts where the same voting machine was used.

Stockbridge editor gears yearbook toward changes, remembering past

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

STOSAG, the Stockbridge School of Agriculture yearbook, will be focusing on changes in Stockbridge and attitudes towards changes in agriculture this year, according to the editor.

Sue Phillips said she plans to research the history of the school from 1920. Phillips said she will "work through the Alumni Association, interviewing people from each decade."

Phillips said she plans to replace the usual faculty photo-section with faculty interviews, particularly those who are involved with experimental work. Other features include "letters from, both, Dean (John W.) Denison and Assistant Dean Reynolds, and a special section on the greenhouses focusing on their use for experimental work and classroom study, and their condition and improvement.

Regarding the yearbook's progress to date, Phillips commented that it's still in developmental stages. "Nothing is final; it may all change," she said.

When asked about STOSAG's relation with the Index, the University yearbook, Phillips said, "The Index helps with general questions; our work is completely different."

"The Index has "more resources available and takes advantage of this," she said. For instance, Stockbridge has a "lack of cameras and participation" from students, remarked Phillips, the staff we have are "all interested" though.

Phillips said she felt strongly that the Index and STOSAG should be "definitely separate — separate schools, separate interests."

"We don't feel we are separate completely, just a separate student body. Stockbridge is much closer on the whole because we are small, therefore, different interests."

There is "nothing in writing to put the two together," she said. This is where photography plays an important role. Photographs are taken of the same buildings and campus; there are "not just Stockbridge people in the photos," remarked Phillips.

The Index does not have a special section on Stockbridge. But various departments, such as Animal Science and Plant and Soil Science, use the same facilities and some of the same classes, so that the two schools can't help from intermingling.

Phillips said she worked on the STOSAG staff last year and said that the yearbook format has changed. "New people have brought new ideas."

She said plans to include opinions from the staff on various agriculture issues, but could not elaborate on what specific issues would be covered.

Phillips cited the goal of producing an "effective yearbook for the seniors," as her main objective.

She said she welcomes anyone interested in working on the STOSAG staff to stop by the office, located in Room 102 of the Campus Center.

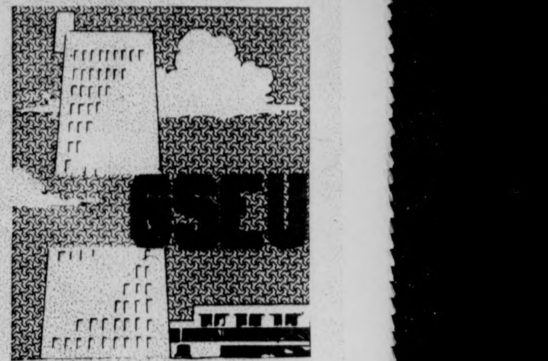
Labor relations board sets additional hearings



By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission scheduled three additional hearings in December to determine if the Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU) will be recognized as a collective bargaing agent for the 1900 UMass graudate students.

The hearing dates have been set for Dec. 8, 9 and 10. Six hearings have been held up to this date, the last three on Nov. 3, 4, and 5.

Sherry Flashman, the newly elected chairperson for the GSEU, stated that the hearings are being drawn out by University attorneys who are taking longer than expected with their presentations and additional time had to be granted because of this factor.

The GSEU's main concerns in wanting the power to bargain are student representatives having negotiating force on workloads and compensation, hiring and re-hiring, conditions of work and grievance procedures.

Flashman stated that no specific demands have been made but that these were the "key areas we see ourselves organizing" in order for student employees to have more control.

"Eventually these are the concerns we would work a contract around," Flashman said.

The GSEU consists of a general membership of any interested graduate students. There is also a Stewards Council which is composed of a person representing one department. The function of a steward is relating departmental feedback to the GSEU and serving as a link to graduate students working in their department.

Currently all departments are not represented on the Stewards Council. Flashman stated that increasing the Council's membership is one of the main goals of the GSEU.

The GSEU elected five new officers last Thursday at the general membership meeting. They were Sherry Flashman, chairperson; Nesta King, vice-president; Joan Gancarski, treasurer; Norman Brown, organizing coordinator; and Steve Oravecz, information coordinator.

The GSEU will sponsor a book sale in the Cape Cod lounge on November 18 and 19.

The next general membership meeting of the GSEU will be held Nov. 18.

Black scholar to lecture here

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

Acklyn R. Lynch, former associate professor of Afro American Studies at UMass and an internationally renowned lecturer, will speak on the "Culture and Education on the University Campus" next Monday, at 8 p.m. in Thompson 106.

Lynch, 44, recently organized an exhibition of African American artists. The exhibition, entitled "Migrations, an Exhibition of African American Artists," will be the first Black art exhibition to travel in the Americas. The exhibition will open in California this December, and will travel to seven countries in South America and the Carribean.

He is a graduate of Howard, Harvard and Johns Hopkins universities, and has attended Edinburgh University in Scotland and St. Mary's College in Trinidad.

He has worked for several large American corporations, Chase Manhattan Bank, Texaco, and Shell Oil among them.

Lynch has received honors and awards from three National Honor Fraternities in 1961, the same year he was graduated cum laude from Howard University.

He has designed and organized many national conferences to discuss the critical problems of the education of Black people and to structure educational systems that could meet the needs of their higher education.

UMass was the setting for two of his conferences in 1972. "China and Africa Conference" attracted about two hundred conferees from Massachusetts to discuss the historical, political and diplomatic relationships between China and Africa. The "Black Musicians Conference" attracted musicians and educators from around the country, whose concern was the investigation of problems in the music industry.

Lynch's local radio work includes "Black Sounds", a discussion program of Black affairs which he created for the Five-College Public Radio (WFCR), and "Great Black Music", a musical mosaic to discuss the musical contributions of Black people to world civilization. Both programs have enjoyed tremendous listener response during the past two years.

Algeria, Morrocco, Senegal and Tanzania are some of the more than 30 countries Lynch has visited. He was a member of the Board of Governors at the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington from 1969-1971, and is a contributing editor to Black Scholar and Black Books Bulletin.

He has studied extensively the Attica Revolt, Pan Africanism and Black nationalism, and Black Dance, as well as Black education in America and abroad.

Adventurers' part company along way as tempers flare

(Editors Note) Duke Simoneau, 22, is a UMass junior (Journalism-Natural Resources major). He left Springfield on May 26 with Stan Sroka, a 23-year-old Chicopee Falls man on an internship assignment. They were trying to reach Portland, Oregon by canoe.

In Jefferson City, Missouri, Duke left Sroka due to a "personality conflict". His attempts to reoutfit and continue his explorations for the Collegian and its readers are detailed below.

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

My spirits soared all the way from Jefferson City to Boston. I was my own man again, not a piece of "equipment" to Cap'n Stanley. I could tour and travel the rivers without worrying about a violent flare-up from my "partner".

I regretted not telling Sroka to his face I was splitting the stock of Transcontinental Canoe Lines. But I didn't feel it wise or safe. Remembering the explosions I'd seen about nothing, I was honestly afraid he'd do more than just curse and scream. He was too big and unpredictable for me to take that chance.

I'd told him if I wasn't back when he expected, call me. He called, demanding an explanation. I calmly went over the details. His voice turned to steel. A string of obscenities led into an open threat.

"Simoneau, you're an..... If you ever publish a word about this trip, I'll sue you. You owe me $1,000. When I get back, you'd better have it ready, BUDDY."

I had originally agreed to pay for half the equipment. Then Stan refused to provide me with receipts, he just demanded a blind grand. When I left, I had left all the community equipment. I left money to cover all food bills and a more than adequate sum for "gear depreciation". Having already explained that, I said if we met again on the river, I'd buy him a drink. He made another threat, so I cut him off.

I decided to buy all my supplies (except a canoe) at home. That way, I could judge if I had the carrying capacity I needed. In the wilderness of the upper Missouri, you have to be able to carry a month's supplies.

I bought some pots, dug out my old pup tent, and got four weeks of non-perishable groceries.

My parents and most of my friends were against my setting out alone. They all agreed I should've left Sroka, but few thought it wise to go alone.

I was determined. I had shelter, food, and cash to set aside for a suitable craft and expenses. All I had to do was fit it into packs and set off.

It was two a.m. I'd tried stuffing things in every possible combination into the backpack, seabags, and other pouches I own. I stared at the sizeable pile that was still on the floor. It was impossible. I needed packs that I couldn't afford.

Sroka had specially ordered a giant pack called a Duluth Paul Bunyan Special. With that, a smaller pack, and a duffel, we survived. But he had that pack and the duffel. I had also given him enough cash for "gear depreciation" so that now I couldn't buy the expensive, all-important pack.

Without a month's carrying capacity, I would have to depend on fish and game for meals. A noble, but impractical thought. The pioneers may have done it, but that was in the days of plentiful wildlife and no state game laws. Not having a license didn't bother me, but not eating for days in the wilderness did.

I contacted my internship sponsor and my editor. They were disappointed that I couldn't finish, but glad I'd made a "wise decision".

I made arrangements to do some public relations writing in Boston to fulfill the writing required for internship credits.

I had made the only rational choice. I settled back into civilization — a credited internship, a paying part-time job, and a lust in my heart to chuck it all and head for the river — prepared or not.

Never, though, do I wish I'd stayed with Sroka. I don't miss days on end of total silence and cold stares answering my questions.

I do miss the beauty of the river. High white bluffs on the Missouri, sandhill cranes leading the canoe along. The powerful grace of the tow boats, cruising along, day or night.

I miss the hospitality of river people — boaters, shore people, fisherfolk. It's a totally different type of life — mingling hard physical work with personal, intangible rewards.

It was a good trip, overlooking my problems with mon capitaine. Even when I made my decision to slip back into a "normal" life, I knew I'd go back.

It'll be awhile until I collect my degree, pay off my school-incurred debts, and save enough to start out again. But I know I will. There's still half a country's worth of river I haven't seen.

THE END — TEMPORARILY

"We have an open door policy as far as contributions from women in the area. We're open to women who want to talk, sing and vent personal feelings," Snyder said. Any woman who is interesting in contributing, is encouraged by the group to contact one of the members calling or writing them at WMUA.

Women's Media Project gives "women a chance to get involved in media," Elwin said. It gives women exposure and experience needed in radio, which is a highly male-dominated field.

Currently the show is predominantly music. In the future, the women involved would like to see 50 per cent of air time devoted to music and 50 per cent given in readings, poetry, political issues, interviews, book, play and film reviews.

"It all takes time and we need more time than we have for special features," Snyder said.

The show was started in October by Elana Nacman and Robin Rich, who were teaching a course in Women's Media. The show, originally one hour long, is now three hours, and future expansion could be possible with the involvement of more women, Snyder said.

"The more women involved, the more we can do, and there is a need to hear more from women," Snyder said.

Carter 'disturbed' at church action

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, Ga. [UPI] — President-elect Jimmy Carter, taking communion at the historic church where the founders of Methodism once preached, was described yesterday as "concerned and disturbed" by the continued barring of blacks from his home Baptist church.

Press secretary Jody Powell said Carter will attend services at the Plains, Ga., Baptist Church next Sunday when the 250-member congregation will vote whether to fire pastor Bruce Edwards for the way he expressed his opposition to the rule barring blacks.

Powell said Carter had learned through staff members and newsmen that for a second consecutive Sunday the Rev. Clennon King of Albany, Ga., was barred from worship services by the church deacons.

"I'm sure he is concerned and disturbed and hopeful the situation can be resolved in the fashion I described to you," Powell told an afternoon news briefing.

He said Carter believes "the right to worship ought to be extended to all." Powell said this was "an end to which he will always work."

Carter spoke to both Edwards and two or three deacons during the week. Carter said in Sacramento, Calif., last Monday that he would remain in his church and do all he could to eliminate the vestiges of discrimination that remain.

"I don't think there is any question that he'll just sit still and vote" next Sunday, Powell said, indicating that Carter will take some active role in the service.

If the congregation should continue to bar blacks, Powell said, Carter will be faced with "a very difficult and personal decision."

Carter, in the second day of a five or six-day "working vacation," fished, went swimming and studied a special memo from outgoing Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller with his thoughts on the nation's No. 2 elective office.

Powell said Rockefeller had offered in a telephone call to Carter last Wednesday to prepare a memo on the responsibilities of the vice presidency and his own reflections on it.

Powell did not disclose the contents but said Carter described it as "substantial."

Carter also studied a general briefing memo on the transition to a new administration. Powell said it contained information about appointments, the current budgetary process and organization of the executive office of the President.

Carter also played ping-pong and pool with sons Jack and Chip and at the urging of daughter Amy, 9, went swimming with her in the pool at the plantation where they are staying.

Powell said Carter would remain out of the public eye today and probably would go picnicing on an island that is part of the 1,300-acre plantation. He planned to see no visitors.

Brooke: 'Blacks will fare better'

BOSTON [UPI] — Sen. Edward Brooke, (R-Mass.), the nation's only black senator, said in a Boston Herald Advertiser interview yesterday that blacks will fare better under the Carter White House.

But Brooke also predicted the Georgia Democrat may be a one term president, because of the "herculean task" of trying to fulfill campaign promises of cutting inflation while bringing unemployment to zero by 1980.

"He faces a juggling act of bringing down unemployment and at the same time holding down inflation. I hope he can, but I just don't see how he can accomplish it," Brooke said.

"How is Carter going to cut the rate of inflation at the same time keep his campaign promises? That's where he runs into trouble. It's a herculean task. He could be a one term president," Brooke said.

Based on Carter's record of bringing Blacks into Georgia government while governor and his heavy black vote last week, Brooke said there is "no question" blacks will fare better than in Gerald Ford's Republican administration.

"I expect you will see more blacks in responsible positions in the government than in any other administration," he said, adding there's "no question" blacks will gain in the transition from the Republican Gerald Ford administration.

"Blacks look to Carter as a messiah. Their votes about 94 per cent nationwide made the difference in many states.

They'll be coming to him. They need jobs. They need housing — my God, you're going to have to do something in housing."

Brooke said he expects Carter to choose a Republican for a cabinet post — possibly retaining Health, Education and Welfare Secretary David Matthews.

Children found in trash cans, woman charged with murder

WORTHINGTON, Ohio [AP] — A 20-year-old woman was in jail yesterday, charged with murder after the bodies of two of her young daughters were found in trash containers.

Authorities, meanwhile, searched for a third daughter and the woman's boyfriend.

The bodies of 19-month-old Laurie Jo Davies and her sister, Christine, 2½, were found Friday, wrapped in plastic bags and stuffed in trash containers.

The hunt yesterday was for Tonya Davies, whose fourth birthday is Nov. 28.

Police charged Margo Davies of Worthington with the murder of the younger child and held the woman without bond awaiting arraignment today. They sought Mrs. Davies' boyfriend, whom they identified as a 16-year-old who lives with his father in Columbus. He was not named.

Police Lt. Richard B. Tennant said Laurie Jo's body was found in a trash can at a city park along the Scioto River, Christine's in a waste can at another riverside park about a mile to the south.

Worthington is a suburb north of Columbus.

Chief Deputy Sheriff William Lavery, recently elected Delaware County sheriff, said the girls had been bound with strips of cloth and stuffed into the bags.

Autopsies showed Laurie Jo either was strangled or suffocated and Christine apparently smothered, he said.

Mrs. Davies, who lives with her parents here, was reported missing Wednesday by her father, police said, and officers tracked her down through friends.

She told them two gunmen forced her to the side of the road Monday morning and abducted her children police said, but the woman could not explain why she did not report the abduction.

In further questioning Thursday, officers said, her answers became "vague" and "incoherent" and she was charged Friday after the first body was found. She has refused to talk with officers since.

City mayors huddle on urban policy

CHICAGO [UPI] — More than 100 mayors from across the nation huddled yesterday to discuss a national urban policy and generally expressed optimism that President-elect Jimmy Carter would accept many of their proposals.

"I'm impressed with the understanding of urban problems that he Carter has shown and the commitments he has made to the mayors," said Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, attending an "emergency" meeting of the National Conference of Mayors.

Bradley said he is not worried the administration may not be able to deliver all that it appears to have promised, particularly in light of talk of a possible tax cut and a balanced federal budget by 1980.

'We are not out to overburden the federal government or create deficits," Bradley said.

"We're confident that some of these programs will create jobs and stimulate the economy."

Newark Mayor Kenneth Gibson, president of the mayors conference who called the meeting, said Carter and his aides have been responsive to suggestions from the nation's mayors.

"The Carter people must have a room full of recommendations," Gibson said. "They have asked for numerous recommendations from the various mayors. I'm confident he'll take a mixed approach to the problems, that is creating jobs, offering tax cuts and programs to stimulate economic development."

Not every mayor, expressed the same hope that urban problems would be tackled under Carter.

"I don't think we'll have another president as open with the mayor and local government officials as President Ford was," said Cleveland Mayor Ralph Perk, chairman of the National Conference of Republican Mayors.

"My recommendation to Carter is that he follow the policies of President Ford, that is to convert categorical grants to bloc grants. This would eliminate much of the red tape and people would be able to act as watchdogs.

"Carter could go one better by eliminating the states as go-betweens."

Hartford Mayor George A. Athanson, a Democratic, urged that the mayors press the Carter Administration as soon as possible for a commitment on some of the proposed reforms, particularly a coherent federal policy on criminal justice.

"With a Democratic president and Democratic congressmen, a lot of people are thinking everything is all hunky dory," he said. "Let's pin him down in the beginning."

At the National Mayors Conference in Milwaukee this summer, the mayors approved a policy seeking more housing support programs, restructuring of the financing of city services and direct federal revenue sharing funds.

Texas couple finds baby

DALLAS [UPI] — A couple who found a dead baby in a garbage bin yesterday said they will fight for the custody of the body so they can give the child something other than a pauper's burial.

"It's sickening what these twisted-minded women will do," said Mrs. Walter Baldree, obviously upset about the incident.

"I am going to fight for custody to bury that baby. I can't live with myself after seeing that baby in a plastic garbage bag, not knowing how the state will put her away."

The child, estimated to be only a few weeks old, was found in an apartment garbage dump Friday.

Police said the baby apparently had not been born in a hospital and that there were no marks on the body.

A spokesman for the Dallas County medical examiner's office said Mrs. Baldree would probably be given custody of the body today if no other claims have been made and no suspects apprehended.

"We're poor people but I want that baby put right away," she said.

Radio listeners want public hangings again

WASHINGTON [UPI] — When an area radio station asked weekend listeners what they thought of a legislator's proposal to restore public hangings, nearly 75 per cent called up to say they were in favor of the idea.

Washington station WRC-AM, which runs daily, "Direct Line" listener surveys, sought opinions Saturday on a suggestion by Virginia state Delegate Albert L. Philpott.

In a speech to the Danville, Va., Chamber of Commerce last week, Philpott, 57, said the death penalty as it has been administered — away from public view — is not a deterrent to crime.

To get the best effect, he said, "you would have to go back to public hangings." But even Philpott added he would not be likely to attend any hangings, since "they're too gruesome."

Dukakis to ask for six new prisons

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is expected to ask the Massachusetts legislature in January for authority to establish as many as six new prisons in the state.

Human Services Secretary Jerald L. Stevens said new prison beds "absolutely" will have a top priority in the governor's 1977 program. Stevens has been named to head a four-member committee to recommend new sites in the next serveral weeks.

The secretary said he plans to hold regional hearings to acquaint public officials and residents with the urgent need to resolve a problem that, he said, is afflicting most states because of "get tough" policies of judges.

"Two years ago," Stevens said in an interview, "the average prison sentence here was 15 months and it is now 30 months."

The Correction Department reportedly wants 850 new beds by June 30 with up to 2,000 additional in the next few years.

The tentative goal is establish several facilities for about 150 inmates each.

Stevens said the committee is definitely leaning to converting existing state facilities.

He said a prison bed in a renovated facility would cost about $15,000 and be available relatively quickly, but a new bed would cost up o $37,000 and would take three years.

"We have not got the time or the money," he said.

Of the several sites mentioned publicly in recent months, only the Gardner State Hospital is "out," although, according to Stevens, objections have been raised to the use of the former Westover Air Base in Chicopee as a prison.

While Stevens would not flatly rule out Westover, other sources within the administration indicated that it, along with "Shadowbrook" in Lenox, a former seminary, would not be acceptable as prison sites.

Stevens feels that small, regional prisons make more sense. He said the only state prison in "western" Massachusetts is in Concord, a Boston suburb. He said there is a particular need for a facility in western and southeastern Massachusetts.

O'Neil stresses strong ethics code

BOSTON [UPI] — A new, strong code of ethics will be one of the first orders of business for next year's Congress, House Majority Leader Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass. told the Boston Sunday Globe.

O'Neill, unopposed for election as the next Speaker of the House, said in an interview Congress' image has been tarnished by recent revelations of scandals and cash handouts by South Korean businessman Tongsun Park to congressmen.

Asked if he ever was offered or accepted money from Park, O'Neill, 63, said, "Never gave and wouldn't have been accepted. Hey, if Tongsun Park came up to me with $3,000, I'd hit him in the puss with it.

"I had that reputation when I was in the state legislature and I have it now."

He pledged "to do whatever is necessary to boost the image of the Congress."

O'Neill also predicted unemployment would dip below 5 per cent by next June and a balanced budget one of President-elect Jimmy Carter's highest priorities, was a "realistic goal" by 1980.

O'Neill, the third Massachusetts congressman to serve as House Speaker in three decades, won his 13th term to Congress last week.

He said he and other Democratic congressman would give advice on various programs to President-elect Carter "even if it isn't sought."

He said, "Before, under the Republicans administration, our advice was never sought and never asked. Now, even if it isn't sought, it will be given at the meetings. We will speak as part of a family."

Student killed pledging

HAUPPAUGE, N.Y. [AP] — Police and St. John's University officials were in disagreement yesterday on circumstances surrounding the stabbing death of a 20-year-old student.

Police said the death occurred Friday night and was "part of a hazing program for the deceased to enter a fraternity."

A spokesman for the university maintained hazing was not involved in the death of Thomas Fitzgerald of Queens, a prospective member of an ROTC fraternity at St. John's.

"If it were hazing, they all would have been charged, since it is illegal," said the university spokesman, adding, "They elected to go out on their own for additonal training."

Another student, a cadet second lieutenant in the Pershing Rifles honorary drill society, was charged with second degree murder in the death of Fitzgerald.

Police on Long Island said the stabbing occurred when a block of wood worn by Fitzgerald on his chest as a shield apparently slipped and the other student plunged the knife into him, severing the main artery to his heart.

New England News in Brief

Nuke appeal

SEABROOK, N.H. [AP] — Opponents of the Seabrook nuclear power plant are expected to appeal in the courts a decision to allow the plant's construction permit to stand. The federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission made the ruling last week.

A lawyer for one environmental group has already said the commission's decision will be challenged in the courts one way or another.

William Tallman, president of Public Service Co., called the NRC decision a milestone in the utility's effort to get the Seabrook plant built, but he said he too believes environmental groups opposing the plant will appeal the ruling in the courts.

Home abortions

NORTH ANDOVER, Mass. [UPI] — A Harvard professor says 70 per cent of women now having abortions will attempt to get abortions at home or the black market if the Hyde amendment is passed by congress.

The amendment would ban Medicaid funds to pay for abortions. A federal court in New York issued an injunction Oct. 22 against implementation of the amendment. It is still in effect.

Dr. Philip G. Stubblefield, assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Harvard Medical School, predicted Saturday an enormous increase in deaths and injuries to women from illegal abortions if the amendment is enforced.

Child abuse hotline

BOSTON [AP] — The state Welfare Department plans to open two 24-hour-a-day toll-free hotlines in Pittsfield and Springfield next week to receive reports of child abuse from Massachusetts' four western counties.

Social workers and psychiatrists will be on call around the clock to investigate serious problems, officials say.

Welfare Commissioner Alexander Sharp said if the pilot program is effective it will be expanded into other regions of the state, where children's protective services now operate only during normal business hours.

The department's budget request for next year includes about 100 new jobs working with abused and neglected children and their families, a department spokesman said.

Phone report

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities today will release a long awaited report on the need to regulate the billing and service termination policies of New England Telephone Co.

The report will be based on months of hearings conducted by the DPU which probed complaints by consumer groups, which included allegations of arbitrary credit and security deposit policies.

Contents of the report were not immediately known, but sources in the DPU indicated it would make a series of recommendations to improve the company's business practices.

Nerve gas

BOSTON [UPI] — Quantities of nerve gas have been seized by authorities in different parts of the world, indicating criminal or terrorist organizations may resort to such weapons, the Boston Sunday Globe said.

More than a quart of a nerve gas called Tabun was seized in Vienna last February. Vials of the gas had been offered for sale to Mideast terrorists, the Globe said.

Several months ago, according to the paper, U.S. postal authorities discovered a package which contained an explosive charge wired to a vial of nerve gas. The newspaper said its sources said the package was believed to have been sent from an Arab country, although officials have declined to discuss the case.

Moderation marks military march

MOSCOW [AP] – The Soviet Union staged one of its smallest annual military parades in history yesterday to mark the 59th anniversary of the Communist revolution. It presented no new military equipment and even toned down the marching style of its troops.

"The Soviet army and navy are reliably guarding the cause of revolution, socialism and peace," Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov announced to the marchers from his place with the rest of the Soviet leadership atop Lenin's mausoleum.

The collection of armored personnel carriers, artillery pieces, and surface-to-air and surface-to-surface missiles that rolled for six minutes through Red Square included no weapons not shown last year.

For the second year, no tanks and other tracked vehicles were shown, possibly to spare the paving the square and access streets through the capital.

The several thousand foot soldiers, cadets, sailors and seaborne commandos who marched across the square dropped their traditional goosestepping for a more moderate march.

There was no official explanation for the toned-down nature of the parade, but the Soviet government has been increasing its calls in the past year for ending the arms race and claims to be decreasing its own military budget.

In another sign of easing beligerence, the greetings for the occasion from the Chinese government were a bit warmer than in recent years. The brief Chinese message, as reported by the official Soviet news agency, stopped short of a clearcut proposal for reconciliation but included a note of "friendship for the Soviet people" not found in last year's message.

Soviet Community party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, 69, headed party and government dignitaries in the mausoleum's reviewing box just outside the Kremlin walls.

In the diplomatic stands adjoining the mausoleum were most of the ambassadors assigned to Moscow and defense attaches from foreign embassies.

The American contingent included Lt. Gen. Samuel V. Wilson, director of the Pentagon's Defense Intelligence Agency, who is on an inspection visit to the American Embassy.

Admitted Utah killer wants firing squad

SALT LAKE CITY [UPI] – Admitted killer Gary Gilmore wants to keep his date with a Utah firing squad next Monday but lawyers for two other Death Row inmates said yesterday they would seek a stay of his execution.

Attorneys Robert VanSciver and Gilbert Athay said they would ask the Utah Supreme Court to stay the execution on grounds its effect would be "adverse" to death penalty appeals in two unrelated cases.

Friday the court opened the door to a stay of what would be the first execution in the United States since 1967. It ruled 3-2 that legal problems in Gilmore's case should be resolved, and said if an application for a stay is made, it should be granted.

Gilmore, a 35-year-old parolee from Oregon, was convicted last month of the shooting death in July of Bennie Bushnell, a motel clerk. At his sentencing hearing, he admitted the crime.

He also was charged with killing a service station attendant the night before the Bushnell slaying. Trial on that charge was postponed indefinitely.

A district court judge sentenced Gilmore to die after the jury voted unanimously for the death sentence. When Gilmore's court appointed attorneys filed an appeal, he fired them.

They appealed anyway, but shortly afterwards a handcarried letter from Gilmore was delivered to the Court asking that any appeals be ignored.

Trapezoid is base of unknown culture

By HAROLD OLMOS

LA PAZ, Bolivia [AP] – Archaeologists have discovered the ruins of what they believe to be a previously unknown culture that existed 500 years ago and used an architecture based on the trapezoid.

A trapezoid has four sides but only two of them are parallel. Most modern architecture uses right angles.

"This is something completely new in archaeology," said Carlos Ponce Sanjines, the director of the National Institute of Archaeology. "We've come across an extremely original form of architecture and we still don't know how it developed."

The discovery in a mountain jungle came when an expedition found the ruins of a citadel called "Iskanwaya," the name given the culture that is possibly descended from the mysterious Tiahuanaco tribe, Ponce Sanjines said.

The Tiahuanaco, who lived on a plain about 45 miles north of La Paz, vanished about 800 years ago.

The newly discovered culture, according to Ponce Sanjines, centered about 190 miles north of La Paz in a warm region on the eastern slopes of the Andes at about 5,000 feet above sea level. There the Iskanwaya citadel was built and surrounded by terraced garden areas used for growing grain and for supporting houses.

The construction of these houses was based upon extremely careful calculations, Ponce Sanjines said in a recent interview. But no one yet can explain the use of the trapezoid.

"We're having to study the structures slowly to see whether the culture had based its architecture on some rare geometric conception, or whether it was based upon the climate or other characteristics of the region," Ponce Sanjines said. "Perhaps it's a combination of factors."

He said he recognizes, however, that traditional architecture using right angles would not have been prohibitive in the jungled region – in fact, much easier.

Ponce Sanjines and other archaeologists opened a recent photographic exhibition of the Iskanwaya ruins in La Paz. The trapezoid is seen in the photography as clearly dominating the floor, the walls and the doors of the small family units.

Lebanon President Sarkis calls for toleration of Arabs

By EDWARD CODY

BEIRUT, Lebanon [AP] – President Elias Sarkis called on the Lebanese people yesterday to tolerate occupation by an Arab peace force as the only way to save their country from further destruction.

"I approach you knowing full well that some of you at this very moment are still carrying arms, and that the blood of our martyrs and victims has not yet dried," said the taciturn former banker in a 10-minute appeal broadcast over Moslem and Christian stations.

"To these I say, enough bloodshed, enough destruction, enough wasted energy and enough lost opportunities for creation, progress and growth," he added in his first speech as chief of the war-battered Lebanese state.

Sarkis spoke out amid increasing violations of a limping 17-day-old truce decreed by Arab kings and presidents meeting first in Saudi Arabia, then at Cairo.

The Lebanese people have been awaiting deployment of an Arab peace force decided at these summits as the only way to halt the persistent battles. But objections from Christian leaders have held it up and the fighting goes on.

Hospital and militia sources estimated more than a dozen persons were killed and some 35 wounded in the latest 24-hour period of shelling and skirmishes along the front line cutting Beirut into two sectarian cities. Residential quarters also rattled through the night with incoming and outgoing artillery blasts.

Contrary to expectations, Sarkis said nothing specific about when the Arab peace force – mostly Syrian troops already in Lebanon – will take up the positions they were supposed to have occupied a week ago.

Instead, he hammered repeatedly at the need for Lebanese people to welcome the forces and cooperate with them in enforcing the truce that no Lebanese forces or leaders have been able to apply.

"I ask every one to meet these forces with brotherly love, and to understand with me ... the obvious limited aim and noble objective behind their entry," he said.

Earthquake hits Iran

TEHRAN, Iran [AP] – A severe earthquake struck a remote mountainous region of northeast Iran yesterday morning.

The Pars news agency said at least 12 persons were killed and 23 injured.

The news agency said the quake leveled all 150 houses in the village of Vandik, killing 11 residents there, while another person died in the village of Kalatalam.

A spokesman for Red Lion and Sun, Iran's equivalent of the Red Cross, said damage also was reported in the vollage of Noughab.

The Pars account said that rescue teams, under the personal supervision of Prime Minister Amir Abass Hoveida, were rushing medical aid, food, clothing and tents into the stricken area, located about 550 miles northeast of Tehran.

Dr. Kosro Gudarzi, director of Tehran University's Geophysics Institute, said the earthquake had a strength of 6.2 on the Richter scale when it struck at 7:31 a.m., 11:01 p.m. Saturday EST.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means the ground motion is 10 times greater.

International News in Brief

Spain's scandal

MADRID, Spain [UPI] – Spain found itself enmeshed yesterday in its own Lockheed scandal – the alleged payment of $1.1 million by the U.S. aircraft maker in irregular commissions to two senior air force officers among others.

Release of the finding of a Supreme Court probe Saturday broke 11 months of official silence and public suspense over the case that the Spanish press said would produce a "payoff list" of as many as 17 persons. But unlike other Lockheed scandals, there was no charges of bribes.

Five Spaniards, including air force Gen. Luis Rey and Col. Carols Grandal, received the $1.1 million for representing Lockheed in connection with a sale to the Spanish air force of 10 Hercules transport planes, the government report said..

Rey and Grandal, both 61, have already been relieved of their duties and put at the disposal of their superiors.

"Among the documents examined there is no 'list" except one of the people who received Christmas gifts, about 12 gifts per year, whose joint value did not exceed $1.325," the report said.

Israel walkout

TEL AVIV, Israel [UPI] – Engineers in Israel's military industries walked out for the first time yesterday and hospitals turned away patients in a day of labor unrest that involved one out of every four workers in the public sector and threatened to spread.

The ports of Haifa, Ashdod and Eilat were closed by a strike of marine pilots.

Workers at the Dead Sea chemicals plant refused to release truckloads of potash for export until their wage demands are met.

Other workers threatening strikes or go-slow sanctions included gasmen, social workers, state attorneys, high school teachers, customs inspectors and officers in the merchant fleet, for an estimated total of 100,000.

About 16,000 engineers and architects took part in the one-day walkout to back demands for a wage increase based on their higher training and education.

But sources in the Treasury Ministry said there was no chance of cracking the government's ruling that froze wage increases at 2.5 per cent.

The military industries involved build and repair everything from rifles to tanks. Israel's aircraft industries were not affected.

Irate French

ROUEN, France [UPI] – Irate neighbors blared out recorded songs by the Soviet Red Army chorus yesterday to try to drown out Msgr. Marcel Lefebvre, the traditionalist priest who has defied Pope Paul VI, during a high mass sung in a Rouen garage.

The neighbors were protesting the purchase of the garage by traditionalists who want to convert it into a church for Lefebvre's followers.

Lefebvre, who opposes the new Roman Catholic liturgy instituted by the Second Vatican Council, was suspended "a divinis" by Pope Paul last July.

This means that Lefebvre, a former archbishop, is forbidden to say mass, ordain priests and administer sacraments.

Lefebvre has defied the suspension by continuing to say mass throughout France and in other European countries.

Jackie Onassis as ambassador?

ATHENS, Greece [UPI] – The Athens daily newspaper Acropolis reported yesterday that Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis will be appointed U.S. Ambassador to Greece by President-elect Jimmy Carter.

In a frontpage story from its Washington corrspondent, Acropolis said "for a long time Jackie has wanted to serve as an ambassador."

The paper said she will be rewarded with the ambassadorship for bringing Carter close to the Kennedy family and their political friends.

The newspaper added that Carter intended to use several women in ambassadorial posts, but reserved the Court of St. James's in Britain for publisher Ann Cox Chambers of the Atlanta Constitution.

A government source said the Greek government had no idea about Carter's intentions.

'Wait and see'

NEW YORK [UPI] – Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa said yesterday he would take a "wait and see' attitude toward U.S. President-Elect Jimmy Carter.

On CBS's "Face the Nation," Vorster said, "We are all anxious to know more about the new president." The interview was taped in South Africa.

Vorster was asked if he was worried about Carter's South Africa policy which has been criticized in the South African press. Vorster said it was too soon to evaluate Carter because he had only emerged as a possible contender for president 22 months ago.

Forces trapped

MAPUTO, Mozambique [UPI] – A senior Mazambican government official said yesterday that Rhodesian forces who crossed the border for a raid inside Mozambique were trapped for a week by black nationalist guerrillas.

The government news agency said later all Rhodesians have been "expelled" from Mozambique territory.

In Salisbury, Rhodesian government spokesmen said any report of the white regime's troops being trapped behind enemy lines was "completely unfounded."

New report on high schools sees 'social aging vets'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time at academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S. Office of Education. "However, it requires orderly reform."

As it is now, the report said, high schools "have become social 'aging vats' that have isolated adolescents and delayed their opportunity to learn adult roles, work habits and skills."

The report was prepared by a panel of academicians, researchers, school superintendants and students. It was described as the first comprehensive study of high school education a decade.

They recommended eventually reducing the length of the high school academic day to two to four hours, starting with seniors and working down to other grade levels as opportunities become available for outside study of the arts, media and other fields.

"A two-to-four-hour day is a necessary concentration of effort by the musician, football player, dancer, politician or scientist," the report said. "The present all-day high school is a costly intruder on this need for both time and variety."

The report said students freed of classroom time could, among other things, become part of "a permanent group of citizen volunteers ... whose function should be to observe, investigate and to report publicly on all government operations, not as tattle tales but as concerned citizens."

The report also says the schools should give students the chance to try, and fail, in the art of self-government.

"The schools need to be laboratories for error in learning the roles of citizens," the report said. "This means realistic participation in the operation and management of the school.

"It is the only fail-safe institution available for learning the consequences of neglect, venality, and the appeals of power. Studied experiments in such consequences should be part of the schools' curriculum in citizenship," it said.

Ford takes vacation

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. [UPI] — President Ford took up vacation residence in this opulent desert resort Sunday for a week of rest, privacy, light work and reflection on what the future may hold for an ex-President of the United States.

The President, Mrs. Ford and three of their children flew in from Washington aboard Air Force One and motored to the millionaire villa they are renting at the edge of Palm Springs' Thunderbird golf course.

A crowd estimated by police at 5,000 turned out in 88-degree heat to line the Palm Springs Municipal Airport runway, behind barriers, to greet the Fords. A high school brass band and youngsters decked out in red and white Indian costumes were on hand.

Although Ford will do some work on the federal budget and his outgoing State of the Union address, the accent of his eight-day stay is on relaxation: daily golf, loafing in the sun, recuperating from the exhaustion of the campaign trail and mapping personal plans for the future.

"It's going to be a very quiet time," one White House aide said, "and a very private one."

It was uncertain whether Ford would meet the press at all before he returns to Washington Nov. 15.

Before leaving Washington, Ford received a heart warming ovation from a crowd of about 150 spectators, who gathered outside St. John's Episcopal Church, to greet the President when he and his wife emerged from the 11 a.m. EST service.

'Good taste' for thieves

CHICAGO [UPI] — Police said Sunday "professional" thieves who broke into a North Side art gallery had good taste — they stole a cache of jewelry, jade, ivory and the finest 11 paintings in the shop, including one purported to be a Rembrandt.

"They knew what they wanted," police investigator Thomas Rennie said.

Estimates of losses by officials at the American Art Galleries, Ltd., ranged from $100,000 to half a million dollars.

Officials said items stolen included paintings by Rembrandt and Renoir and a drawing by Leonardo da Vinci.

The international connection

MARSEILLE, France [UPI] — Three American congressmen from New York said yesterday they were "alarmed by the proportions that narcotics traffic and use are taking in the world."

Democrats Lester Wolff and James Scheuer and Republican Benjamin Gilman, all three members of the House Select Committee on Narcotics, spoke at a news conference following the 23rd meeting of the Franco-Canadian-American intergovernmental committee on Narcotics control.

Conservation notes

The Amherst Conservation Commission reminds residents that hunting is allowed on Amherst conservation land with the exception of Podick, Larch Hill, and Katherine S. Cole wildlife sanctuaries. Hunting is, of course, illegal within 500 feet of houses on any conservation area as it is on other land. Trapping is prohibited on conservation land.

Operation of motorized vehicles, including trail bikes and snowmobiles, is prohibited on all conservation land. Town regulations state: "No person shall operate a snow vehicle or recreational vehicle on public land unless the agency in charge thereof shall have opened the land to use of such vehicles and shall have erected signs stating that such uses are permitted." Special exceptions for conservation land are sometimes granted, as with one snowmobile route granted to the Amherst Snowmobile Association to cross the Holyoke Range Conservation Area.

Camping is permitted on conservation land in groups of eight or fewer. All campers must obtain a permit from the Conservation Commission, second floor Town Hall, 253-2773. Portable cook stoves are allowed but open fires on conservation land are prohibited.

Littering and damage to trees, shrubs, and other plants and animals within conservation areas are also prohibited. Violations of Conservation Commission regulations are subject to fines of up to $100.

Sexism and comics

By DEMIAN

[Editor's note: This commentary appeared in a recent edition of OUTFRONT, a local news magazine monthly, and is reprinted here with the permission of the OUTFRONT collective.]

Two years ago I asked college newspaper cartoonists in Western Mass. to appear on my radio talk show. All but one of the six drew images of sex and violence. All but one used scenarios of dope, sex and violence. All but one talked on the air about their strong interests in dope, sex and violence.

The sixth cartoonist saw cartoon graphics as a political tool to be used within a cultural setting; a language for communicating ideas and ideals. After hearing all the others, the sixth cartoonist voiced the concern that the cartoonist should be careful not to become a cartoon herself.

It had not occurred to any of the other cartoonists, who were all males, that this focusing on dope was pure escapism, the insistence on violence was paranoia producing, if not paranoia inspired, and that the way they focused on sex and violence was sexism.

Escapism is one big reason for the existence of comics, and it's hard to deny the cathartic nature of some comic stories. But we can often see in the comics a direct relationship between the lack of craftspersonship in drawing and story, and the amount and quality of violence.

Sexism is another form of violence. Sexism is exploitive, oppressive and can seriously hurt people.

Sexism produces role models, programmed ways of behaving, that decrease the possibilities for creative interaction. Lois Lane must always be helpless, nosey, meddlesome, helpless and attractive; waiting for her man. Maryjane (not to mention Aunt May) must be forever soothing Peter Parker's furrowed brow, as he contemplates the problems and woes of the world he must face as the Amazing Spiderman. MJ, unlike Lois, doesn't even get to go on any adventures when Spidey puts on his superhero underwear.

Sexism makes irrelevant the fact that the US Constitution has a 19th Amendment. Our capitalist economy demands docile wage earners, which means a pecking order, the old missionary man-on-top-woman-on-bottom posture. In this nation of 51 per cent women, only a fraction have professional jobs. The national average puts the women's wages at one half that of the males'.

The dominance of males in the comic book industry has excluded women from all aspects of production with the exception of colorists, letterers and secretaries. Of the thousands of comics I've read, of the hundreds of artists names, I can recall perhaps four who were women.

Within the comic book industry no woman has been given a major comic book character to draw or script to write on a regular basis.

The underground comix scene appears to be no better. The radical left changed their addictions from alcohol, changed a nation's consciousness away from war, but never gave up their heterosexist male dominance. The women had to publish their own cartoon material, separate from the male comix.

Sexism demands only two roles for the woman-as-object; the totally sexual (fulfillment for the male) or the castrating bitch (when she doesn't put out). The males are forever having to prove their masculinity.

A most common theme in the comix is that of the male character, who imagines himself as a stud, being forever on the lookout for some easy sex. Another "masculine" theme is the nomadic traveller.

The undergrounds often maintain a more blatant dislike for women in their story and graphic treatment of the male character's search for ego satisfaction. Considerable attention is also paid to the male character's dread of being sexually involved with another male. The preponderance of fag jokes betray the authors' fears of their own sexuality.

What remains for us to do is realize the position our culture puts us in. Recognize the dehumanization of the sexism process, work to point it out to others we can reach, and actively work to end its grip on ourselves. Don't buy sexist comics and certainly make efforts to produce alternatives.

If we cannot be entertained by an approach to sex that is loving, warm, spiritually high, full of grace and beauty, a healthy adventure and a natural extension of a friendship — then we're in trouble.

New revenue for the library

By BARNABY KALAN

Recently a friend of mine who dropped out of UMass a year-and-a-half ago found three library books in his room that he'd forgotten to return. Naturally I agreed to return them and he mailed the books to me from England where he was living.

I thought it would be a nice touch to tell the librarian that here were three long-lost books they'd probably given up hope for. I explained that should my friend ever return to this country, he would pay any fine for them.

"Well, he owes the library $6 overdue charges for each book, let me see, that means he owes us $18," the librarian said.

"Wait a minute," I said, checking the price of each book. "The books don't even cost that much, why should he pay $18?"

"That's the charge for long overdue books," she said.

"Well, if it's cheaper to buy new books, I might as well hang on to these," and I started to put them in my knapsack.

"No, to replace them will cost $6 per book plus $8 postage and handling charges," she said.

"What if I go out and buy them myself?"

"Then you'll only have to pay the $8 handling charge," the librarian said.

"What if I bring the books to the library too?"

"Nope, still have to pay the handling charges," she said.

I gave up and slid the books into the return shute. They can always extradite my friend from England to pay his library fine.

I looked around for a library administrator I knew. His name was Bob. Bob once told me he was responsible for library policy.

I found Bob in the periodical department leafing through the personals in Boston After Dark. I asked him about the expensive fines and replacement costs.

"We lost a bundle last year because of stolen books," Bob said. "There aren't too many ways a library can make money."

"Why not install one of those electronic detection systems I've seen in other libraries?" I asked.

"Much too expensive. The cost of buying and operating one of those things would go through two years worth of handling fees," Bob said. "But we've chosen an alternative system that should completely eliminate book theft."

"Closing the library?"

"No, no, not yet. We've purchased two german sheperds specially trained to sniff out books. All we have to do is spray each book, magazine and newspaper with a special scent. They'll never even get a single torn-out page past the sniffer and security guard," Bob said.

"Every book? That's gonna drive those dogs crazy."

"They'll work four hour shifts," Bob said.

"What if students are caught?"

"They'll be fined $5 per book or pilfered page," Bob said. "But that's not all we're doing to scrape up a little extra cash. We're also going to outlaw food," Bob said.

"It's already against the rules," I said.

"Yeah but now we have a foolproof system."

"German Shepherds?" I asked.

"No, Basset hounds. Two of them were donated to the library for that purpose," Bob said.

"Yeah, I think I saw them in the entry way."

"That's right. Betty, that's the larger one, she can smell out any type of food — from candy to string beans. And Bruno — the one with the brown patch — he's our beverage specialist. He'll nab anything from Dr. Pepper to an empty beer can. Anyone caught smuggling in food will be fined one dollar," Bob said.

"What a system! But you know Bob, what really bothers me is all that graffiti scribbled on library walls. What are you going to do about that?"

"Simple. We're prohibiting private pens and pencils," Bob said.

"That's ridiculous, how are we supposed to do our work?"

"Every table will have a supply of pens and pencils chained to it. Each table will be bolted to the floor, away from the walls. And to prevent damaging doodling, every table will be titanium-topped. Virtually scratch-proof," Bob said.

"And replacements?"

"Easy. Janitors will have practically no trash to clean up so students will just call the main desk, request a new pen, and a janitor will be sent right away."

"What about students caught with their own pens and pencils?"

"They'll be fined, of course," Bob said.

I thanked Bob and left the periodical department reassured that my student dollars were being looked after. On my way out of the library I gave Bruno and Betty the remainder of a ham sandwich I'd smuggled in.

Boycott non-returnables!

To the Editor:

It is virtually inconceivable to me that the lies spread by the corporate interests in the attempt to defeat the bottle bill referendum [Question 6] have actually been successful. Although I have not been active in promoting the issue, I cannot relate to the short-sighted attitudes of the voters who would prefer what they see as short-term benefits over the long-term environmental necessities.

Be that as it may, I see no reason why we must accept defeat. The issues are too important. Apparently the only way we can expect to be effective is to hit the corporate interests where it hurts them the most — the pocketbook.

Accordingly, I would like to recommend that a general boycott be started in which no beverages sold in non-returnable containers that would have been affected by the bottle bill are purchased. For those soda freaks among us, it will be inconvenient, but not devastating, since there are a few soda outlets around that sell the bubbly in returnable bottles.

I am not a beer drinker, but I believe that beer can also be purchased that way. If I am mistaken, then perhaps some effort to correct that deficiency is in order. In any case, I intend to commence this boycott on a personal basis as of now, regardless of whether the idea catches on.

No longer will I contribute to the waste generated by non-returnable containers; no longer will I patronize the overpriced soda machines. Hopefully many of you will wish to do the same.

Tenure denial protested

To the Editor:

The new of Professor Jeannette Bragger's failure to gain tenure is, indeed, dismaying. As a former student of Ms. Bragger, I find it exceedingly difficult to conjecture any reason why a lady of her talents, versatility, and devotion to the profession would be denied the opportunity to continue serving the students of the University, and, as in my case, of the entire Five-College community as well.

Few other deeds could depict more vividly Ms. Bragger's genuine interest in students and her willingness to serve the needs of the University AND the French Department than her acceptance to teach an introductory, beginning language course while being aware [as those around her are] that her background and potential rightfully demand that she be teaching in the high levels of literature. In a very accurate sense, she has been accomodating her talents unselfishly for the benefit of the students and the Department; and now her significant contribution, it seems, is being intentionally dismissed.

I think it essential not to lose sight of the fact that the University of Massachusetts, despite its strengths at the graduate level, is not only primarily still an undergraduate institution [whose first obligation should and has to be to undergraduates], but it is also a university with certain major areas of distinct weaknesses. These weaknesses — like lack of person-to-person instruction — are not going to be corrected by letting go those rather scarce professors who do not permit their advanced academic backgrounds from isolating them from those whom they are supposed to be serving, namely, students, particularly undergraduate ones. Ms. Bragger is exemplary of this type of professor who performs this acutely needed task with pride and enthusiasm.

Bowlers express thanks

To the Editor:

We wish to thank everyone who supported us by signing a petition to have our funds reinstated. We appealed to the Board of Governor's Management Committee of the Campus Center and found out that the situation was a misunderstanding between the Board and the Program Council. The final decision was to allow the Club use of the monies originally allocated. Again we thank you all for helping us.

Stamp out pets

Well I guess it's about time I wrote a column that didn't discuss some vague social ill in abstract terms, and that nobody was interested in reading. So this week I will attack a definite evil and even propose a solution to it. The evil is pets, and the solution, obviously, is the elimination and permanent banning of pets.

Now I want to begin by emphasizing that I have nothing personal against pets. Some of my best friends are pets. My sister owns some tropical fish and I don't hold it against her. I don't even mind admitting that now and again I have enjoyed a good game of fetch with neighborhood hounds. It's just that the credits and debits of pets don't balance out favorably.

It might help my argument to define the term 'pet'. By 'pets' I mean animals owned by people primarily for their own pleasure. So this definition immediately excludes house plants, which I am inclined to believe ought also to be banned, but on which I am not yet prepared to write. It also rules out work animals and edible animals (though I suppose you could eat your gerbil if you were really desperate), and limits the field of consideration to animals that are essentially useless, save for sitting in one's lap or bringing one's slippers.

How would society benefit if pets were eliminated? First, we wouldn't have to allocate the tremendous food resources required to feed the vermin. Not very long ago Time magazine estimated that the amount of pet food consumed in the U.S. could nutritionally sustain the world's starving masses. We can't assume, of course, that any or all of the food saved by banning pets would ever reach the people who need it most, but the attempt could be made. Who are we to insist that Spot's well-being outranks a fellow human's?

Secondly, we would rid ourselves of a potentially serious health hazard and general public nuisance — namely, pet wastes. Let's face it, no one likes stepping in dog shit, nor does anyone want their young children playing in it. We are all aware of the problem, but no one seems willing to deal with it. CBS's "Sixty Minutes" documented a city's struggle with inconsiderate pets and owners (I believe it was in London), and the situation was a grim one. Pets really can be dangerous spreaders of disease.

And the subject of inconsiderate owners brings me to another possible action to be taken in the war against pets. Seeing as we're purging the pets, why not purge the owners as well? Perhaps that measure is a bit severe. But can we really lay the whole blame on dumb animals whose behavior is at the mercy of their masters? I guess maybe it would be sufficient punishment to take the pets away permanently.

Sometimes the whole idea of pets strikes me as disgusting. One would think human companionship is so vastly superior to the friendship a cat can offer that most people would have little need for the creatures. But American pet-owners are a rather unbalanced lot who seem capable of imputing the most human of characteristics on decidedly unhuman animals.

I realize that Travels with Charlie would never have been written were it not for Charlie, and in some instances lonely, elderly people may benefit from having a friend that will remain faithful to the very end. But the great majority of pets are social leaches, surviving only because we give them valuable food, constant attention, and lawns, sandboxes and sidewalks to use as their exclusive lavatories.

As I make my way home avoiding vicious packs of ill-trained canines and whatever they may have left behind them, I can only hope that decisive action is taken to annihilate these unnecessary burdens to society.

IQ's, degrees and Tonto

By MICHAEL ROBERTS

There is a relationship between I.Q. tests and school. Both are social orientations. If you have been made a social outcast, you might not do well in either. To be a social outcast is to resist.

Resistance builds its own culture, its own values, and its own viewpoint. The alternative perspective will conflict with societal norms.

Societal norms are judgements, like tests, those subtle blue ditto stencils that tell us we have been "examed" and not examined. They focus on status quo perspectives. They limit people from holding alternative viewpoints. They punish those who resist. There is no space on tests to develop alternative answers. There is authority and punishment.

If learning has taught you to resist, forget graduating cum laude. Forget graduation.

That degree or that I.Q. score makes us a person, or an intellectual. Brains make us above the animals some intellectuals tell us. All of us are equal but brains make some of us equaller than others.

My degree is not forthcoming.

I could be a garbage collector while a television station searches for a new announcer. They interview my partner, a forty year old black man and experienced sanitation engineer.

"Manny, what are we going to do? Where are we going to find a black sports announcer by tomorrow?"

"I don't know, George. I've tried all the sporting goods shops. Maybe we can conduct interviews at public basketball courts?"

"We can't remember? We don't have anyone to send in those neighborhoods."

"Look over there on the garbage truck! It's one of them. Dark complexion and the right shade too. No question about him."

"Excuse me, sir. We're from television and we're looking for a sports announcer. Do you have any qualifications for reporting news?"

"Well I have three doctorates related to the communications field, all from prestigious institutions. I have a law degree from Harvard. I speak twelve languages fluently and I have been nominated for the Nobel prize in literature."

"No, what we mean is, have you ever playe professional sports, such as basketball or pool?" Wer you ever a Miss America?"

"No, I am not athletically inclined."

"If you're such a smart assed intelligent person ho come you're delivering garbage? (Aside) Manny, lo at the way he walked away, shaking his head, kicki the non-returnable bottle, kind of shuffling along. I t you he's a natural. Just look at his hair. With a litt publicity he could be another Jay Scott. So what if never played sports."

"Sir, we want you for the job."

"Gentlemen, I took an intelligence test once. Th said my I.Q. was 37."

"Well maybe we could hush it up. Don't tell anyo Who gave you the test?"

"Army Intelligence."

"How could someone with your education score low?"

"Perhaps Walt Kelly's reflection, 'Military i telligence is a contradiction of terms' applies to bo Intelligence Quotient and white people."

"Huh? Does Kelly play for the Phoenix Sun (Aside) Hey Manny, look at his smile. Those pea white teeth. Bleached boring with brighteners. I t you he's a natural."

"You can't do that," I interrupted. "Sell yourself sixty grand a year to be made up like Tonto the Indi Is sixty grand a year reason enough to be a fool?"

"Why should white people have a monopoly good jobs? Tonto could have been an Italian with headband. The next sports announcer could be Jolson in blackface. Should I let my family sta because some whites think it is wrong to be midd class, especially if it is us who will be middle-cla Why should our future be tied up with yours?

"Tonto use to call the Lone Ranger kymosabe. some it means friend, to others it means fool. Ev Tonto had some dignity."

Yet in my fantasy I would still walk away. After a might not have my degree, but I still have my high I. scores on which to cling. I can still rationalize I smart, that I am right.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Film explores wartime reactions

The Five-College B'Nai B'rith Hillel Foundations will show the film "Sweet Light in a Dark Room" tonight at 8:00 in Wright Hall at Smith College.

The film is part of a series of films of Jewish interest presented by the Hillel Foundations.

"Sweet Light in a Dark Room" is the story of an Aryan student who hides a Jewish girl from the Nazis during World War II. It explores the reactions of fear and suspicion of the other residents of the apartment house.

Other showings of the film in the valley will be tomorrow at UMass; Wednesday at Mount Holyoke College; and Thursday at Amherst College. All shows are at 8 p.m.

The movie is open free to the public.

Oxford program seeking students

For over 10 years, UMass has sponsored the Oxford Summer Seminar, a unique opportunity for American students to study abroad at one of England's finest colleges.

The program consists of six weeks at Trinity College located in the heart of England's 'golden city', Oxford. Only an hour from London, Oxford is as stimulating as a larger city in that it offers an incredible variety of museums, libraries, gardens, parks, and pubs.

The courses offered are unusual and demanding, but the amount of spare time afforded allows students to explore their own interests to the utmost. If your interests be scholarly, the Bodleian is one of the world's greatest libraries and is at your disposal. Transcendentalists will find great delight in the countryside, and in the greater awareness that comes with walking in the English hills.

In addition to the study time, there is three weeks of free travel time in which students can get a taste of the continent or explore the British Isles.

All those who may be interested in "the summer of your life" may pick up the detailed brochure available at Bartlett Hall or contact Ernest Hofer c-o English Dept. at the University.

Dogs at Amherst pound listed

Amherst, red collar; male Beagle standard purebred found on Salem St., leather collar; black Labrador purebred puppy about 3 months with red collar and flea collar; female tiger cat with white chest; female tiger from Presidential apts.; female orange and white cat; female grey cat; male black and white cat found at Atkins Fruit Bowl; female Calico cat found on Stanley St.; male tiger cat with bobbed tail found on Stanley St.; and three black and white kittens, three to four weeks old.

Recommendations for future grads

If you are a senior graduating in June, the next few weeks can be important to you in thinking and planning about graduate or professional school. Deadlines for applications generally fall early next year, so now is the time to gather applications, put together some recommendations, and take the necessary tests, such as Law Boards on GRE's.

What is just as important is sorting out the alternatives. Even if you know you will be out of school for awhile, it is wise to look into alternatives before you leave campus.

If you want help with any of these issues surrounding graduate study, see the Pre-Graduate Study advisor, Frank Lennox, in CASIAC E 26 Machmer Hall Tuesday through Thursday mornings and all day Friday. The telephone number is 545-2191.

Photographic fair, trade buff show to be held in Conn.

Photographic collectors and historians from across the country will gather Nov. 20 and 21 for the Semi-Annual Antique and Classic Photographic Trade Fair sponsored by the Photographic Historical Society of New England.

The two-day event, open to the public, will be held at the Ramada Inn, I-91 at Bridge Street, East Windsor, Conn., just 10 minutes north of Hartford. Hours will be 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 7 to 10 p.m. Saturday; and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sunday. General admission is $1.25.

In the past few years, major public auctions, sales, and numerous books and articles have encouraged interest in the history of photography and in collecting. Certain early photographs and cameras can command prices in the thousands of dollars; collectors travel from coast to coast and to Europe to attend auctions and Trade Fairs such as the one scheduled for the Ramada Inn.

On display at the show, and offered for sale and trade, will be thousands of items, including cameras, lenses, books and catalogues, stereo views and viewers, daguerreotypes, the so-called "gutta percha" cases, and paper photographs, dating from the 1850's to the present.

One of the purposes of the Trade Fair is to interest members of the general public in photography and its history. Anyone having old photographic items they wish to sell or have valued should bring them to the show. Additional information is available by calling (203) 658-5782, or (617) 586-3414.

Screening team looking for children with special needs

The Amherst-Pelham public schools will hold a pre-school screening for children with special needs at the South Amherst School Friday morning, Nov. 19.

Chapter 766, the state's special education law, requires that services be provided for identifying children with special needs.

The screening team will be looking for Amherst-Pelham children aged three to five who might have difficulty with speech or language development, hearing, vision, understanding, thinking, behavior or physical development.

It is important that such problems be identified at an early age in order to provide the most appropriate educational program for each child.

"Screening", according to Judith Souweine, Pre-School coordinator, "is not an in-depth evaluation but is an observation of how a child is growing in different areas of development."

Persons who have or know a child who seems to have difficulties may make appointments by calling Liz Brinkerhoff at 253-2188. Screening is by appointment only.

Conservation board invites removal of felled trees

The Amherst Conservation Commission has invited Amherst residents to gather firewood from the following conservation areas: Mill River (No. Amherst), Mt. Castor Marsh (at the end of Valley View Drive off South East St.), and Lawrence Swamp (off Station Road).

No standing timber, live or dead, is to be cut, and no power tools are to be used. The offer is good "any time until further notice." Further information is available from the Conservation Services Office, second floor Town Hall, phone 253-2773.

HAPPY HOURS of another kind are being recorded at Yale, where a new formula is being applied to dispense liquor without a license at student mixers.

The New York Times reports that, for a nominal admission charge, the Elis may have as many drinks as they want at a free bar. The policy, writes the Times, "has sent spirits soaring."

"I've never seen so many drunk people in one happy hour," one junior reported, after her first free-bar mixer.

Another said that "People who normally would buy one or two drinks are having five to six."

While the state liquor authorities have not ruled on its legality, one social committee chairman warns the happy hour may not survive the heavy deficits that the heavy drinking is incurring.

ADD TO HEADY HEADLINES the one that appeared in the Miami-Dade (Fla) Community College Falcon Times over a story on venereal disease: "Nice people get it, too." The deck on the piece read: "More than 43 per cent of college students will contract one of the forms of the disease 'nice people' don't get."

ACADEMIC SUSPENSIONS have doubled at the University of New Hampshire, according to a page one piece in the campus newspapers.

A total of 277 were suspended for grades in June 1976, compared with 128 in 1975.

The suspension rate more than tripled in that time in the colleges of Liberal Arts, Engineering, and Physical Sciences and Health Studies.

At UMass, The New Hampshire story added, the suspension rate rose from 1.5 to 4.8 per cent of the student body. The UNH rate is 2.9 per cent.

CHUCKLES — IN — THE CLASSROOM are proposed by a USC psych prof who says that the way to keep students awake during lectures on ponderous materials is through their funny bones.

The Wash State Daily Evergreen shared this intelligence in a recent issue.

It all began about two and a half years ago for Prof. Edward Connolly, who began one of his classes by saying, "It was in this very room that I attended my freshman orientation. I'll never forget it. We were addressed by a man with a nervous tic who was wearing a clip-on tie and what looked like a clip-on suit. He also carried a Roy Rogers lunch box ... He was, I learned later, the head of the psychology department."

For several hours, the prof intermingled jokes by comedy writer Eric Cohen into his lecture. When class ended, his students stood and applauded.

Photographic fair, trade buff show to be held in Conn.

Photographic collectors and historians from across the country will gather Nov. 20 and 21 for the Semi-Annual Antique and Classic Photographic Trade Fair sponsored by the Photographic Historical Society of New England.

The two-day event, open to the public, will be held at the Ramada Inn, I-91 at Bridge Street, East Windsor, Conn., just 10 minutes north of Hartford. Hours will be 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and 7 to 10 p.m. Saturday; and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sunday. General admission is $1.25.

In the past few years, major public auctions, sales, and numerous books and articles have encouraged interest in the history of photography and in collecting. Certain early photographs and cameras can command prices in the thousands of dollars; collectors travel from coast to coast and to Europe to attend auctions and Trade Fairs such as the one scheduled for the Ramada Inn.

On display at the show, and offered for sale and trade, will be thousands of items, including cameras, lenses, books and catalogues, stereo views and viewers, daguerreotypes, the so-called "gutta percha" cases, and paper photographs, dating from the 1850's to the present.

One of the purposes of the Trade Fair is to interest members of the general public in photography and its history. Anyone having old photographic items they wish to sell or have valued should bring them to the show. Additional information is available by calling (203) 658-5782, or (617) 586-3414.

Screening team looking for children with special needs

The Amherst-Pelham public schools will hold a pre-school screening for children with special needs at the South Amherst School Friday morning, Nov. 19.

Chapter 766, the state's special education law, requires that services be provided for identifying children with special needs.

The screening team will be looking for Amherst-Pelham children aged three to five who might have difficulty with speech or language development, hearing, vision, understanding, thinking, behavior or physical development.

It is important that such problems be identified at an early age in order to provide the most appropriate educational program for each child.

"Screening", according to Judith Souweine, Pre-School coordinator, "is not an in-depth evaluation but is an observation of how a child is growing in different areas of development."

Persons who have or know a child who seems to have difficulties may make appointments by calling Liz Brinkerhoff at 253-2188. Screening is by appointment only.

Conservation board invites removal of felled trees

The Amherst Conservation Commission has invited Amherst residents to gather firewood from the following conservation areas: Mill River (No. Amherst), Mt. Castor Marsh (at the end of Valley View Drive off South East St.), and Lawrence Swamp (off Station Road).

No standing timber, live or dead, is to be cut, and no power tools are to be used. The offer is good "any time until further notice." Further information is available from the Conservation Services Office, second floor Town Hall, phone 253-2773.

HAPPY HOURS of another kind are being recorded at Yale, where a new formula is being applied to dispense liquor without a license at student mixers.

The New York Times reports that, for a nominal admission charge, the Elis may have as many drinks as they want at a free bar. The policy, writes the Times, "has sent spirits soaring."

"I've never seen so many drunk people in one happy hour," one junior reported, after her first free-bar mixer.

Another said that "People who normally would buy one or two drinks are having five to six."

While the state liquor authorities have not ruled on its legality, one social committee chairman warns the happy hour may not survive the heavy deficits that the heavy drinking is incurring.

ADD TO HEADY HEADLINES the one that appeared in the Miami-Dade (Fla) Community College Falcon Times over a story on venereal disease: "Nice people get it, too." The deck on the piece read: "More than 43 per cent of college students will contract one of the forms of the disease 'nice people' don't get."

ACADEMIC SUSPENSIONS have doubled at the University of New Hampshire, according to a page one piece in the campus newspapers.

A total of 277 were suspended for grades in June 1976, compared with 128 in 1975.

The suspension rate more than tripled in that time in the colleges of Liberal Arts, Engineering, and Physical Sciences and Health Studies.

At UMass, The New Hampshire story added, the suspension rate rose from 1.5 to 4.8 per cent of the student body. The UNH rate is 2.9 per cent.

CHUCKLES — IN — THE CLASSROOM are proposed by a USC psych prof who says that the way to keep students awake during lectures on ponderous materials is through their funny bones.

The Wash State Daily Evergreen shared this intelligence in a recent issue.

It all began about two and a half years ago for Prof. Edward Connolly, who began one of his classes by saying, "It was in this very room that I attended my freshman orientation. I'll never forget it. We were addressed by a man with a nervous tic who was wearing a clip-on tie and what looked like a clip-on suit. He also carried a Roy Rogers lunch box ... He was, I learned later, the head of the psychology department."

For several hours, the prof intermingled jokes by comedy writer Eric Cohen into his lecture. When class ended, his students stood and applauded.

French painting exhibited at Smith

A loan exhibition of mid-19th-century French painting is now being shown at the Smith College Museum of Art. Called "Jongkind and the Pre-Impressionists: Painters of the Ecole Saint-Simeon," it is a joint presentation of the Smith College Museum of Art and the Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute at Williamstown, Massachusetts.

The exhibition, which includes some 110 paintings, watercolors, drawings and prints, was conceived and organized by Charles C. Cunningham, chief curator at the Clark Art Institute. In the preparation of the exhibition, which began several years ago, Cunningham has been assisted by David Cass, Assistant Curator at the Clark Art Institute, and Kathleen Zimmerer and Susan Peters, both students in the Williams College-Clark Art Institute Graduate Program in the History of Art. The exhibition has been financed in part by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency in Washington, D.C.

There are also works by Leon Barillot, Richard Parkes Bonington and John Constable, Jean-Francois Millet, Stanislas Lepine, Jules Dupre, Theodore Rousseau, Constant Troyon. Lesser-known artists are shown in examples of exceptional quality: Xavier LePrince, Louis Alexandre Dubourg, Eugene Lavieille and others.

The exhibition will be on view at the Smith College Museum of Art through Dec. 5 when it will leave for a Dec. 17 opening at Williamstown.

The museum will present a film on Jongkind and his work at two showings: tomorrow and Nov. 18, at 5 p.m. in Graham Hall.

The museum is open Tuesdays through Saturdays from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Sundays 2 to 4:30 p.m. It is closed on Mondays.

Housing reps on 'Off the Hook'

WMUA's "Off The Hook" will be presenting a return visit of the people from various housing offices tonight at 6:20.

Host Bill Files will be talking with Don Pelke, from Married Student Housing, Bruce Cochrane from the Housing Office, and Vice-Chancellor For Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury.

Rent and eviction topics on WMUA

Immediately following tonight's 10:00 news, WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will broadcast a live forum on the possible institution of rent and eviction control in the town of Amherst.

Tonight's program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Rent control could become a reality in Amherst if a majority of the town's voters approve a referendum question on the issue in a special townwide election on Tuesday, Nov. 16.

Tonight's program begins the first of a two-part series on the controversial issue to be aired prior to the referendum vote.

Interested listeners are invited to call in their questions during the live broadcast.

Committee sponsors tournament entries

"One of the functions of a college union is to provide a cultural, social, and recreational program, aiming to make free-time activity a cooperative factor with study in education". This is a statement of purpose which is applicable to the Campus Center Program Council.

Within the Program Council, there exists a recreation committee which participates annually in tournament programs set up by the Association of College Unions-International (ACU-I) of which UMass maintains membership.

The traditional events included in the national competition are men's and women's bowling, billiards and table tennis, bridge, chess and table soccer. New additions this year in sports are air hockey, frisbee, and darts. Areas of participation must be reported to the Regional Coordinator no later than Nov. 15. If interested, please contact Irene Richard, in Room 416, Student Union, or call 5-2351.

Archetypes tested in big exam

By JACOB LOVE

An archetype is a subconscious image of a primordal power. There is only one power within us but it wears many masks in the drama of the subconscious. That drama forms deep inside of us, flows into the conscious mind, and then gets acted out in our lives. Our personal drama is better or worse to the extent that our flow of power is in harmony with our personal archetypes. The personal birth-chart symbolizes on the individual's unique set of archetypes yet each partakes of the primary energy source, the Sun in the sky and secondary sources, symbolized by the planets in the sky.

The Bluebird Forecast tries to shed some light on the general archetypal conditions by interpreting the meanings of the overall planetary pattern in the sky. But since the archetypes are subconscious, we are always trying to point to the hidden meaning. When we use a word in connection with a planet, don't try to "reason" its meaning but rather, try to feel it with your subconscious. Take the planet Saturn, for example. We may refer to it as the "stern guru" but, as one very intelligent undergraduate pointed out, who knows what a guru is, anyway? A guru or a priest or a teacher is simply someone who points the way. Saturn does just that — but sternly, harshly, strongly, insistently. Saturn will teach us the meaning of the law if we can handle it.

The Sun, the eye of heaven, is now forming a square angle with Saturn. This 90 degree angle is the most challenging of all the heavenly relationships. The square forces crisis. Thru our own Sun, our heart, the eye of our soul, we must confront the stern guru and take our exam. Saturn is in Leo, the sign of The Actor, so he'll be asking, "How well have you got your act together?" If we have not paid attention to our homework since last July (when the Sun lined up with Saturn), he may slap our wrists, shake up our archetypes, and send us back three paces. But if we have been honestly working to get-it-together, Saturn will challenge our progress and we'll respond with the correct solution.

This Sun-square-Saturn pressure has been building up all week-end, and, if we haven't peaked already, we will certainly peak today. And whether it feels good or bad, if we keep our eye open, Saturn will further point the way.

The emotional Moon is in Gemini, the sign of communication. The spiritual Sun is still in Scorpio, the sign of death-and-rebirth. So if we emotionally communicate rebirth energy, the day will flow best. Otherwise, the emotional skies will be very cloudy and lots of pain — rain may fall.

McCausland is presently the coordinator of services for victims at Boston City Hospital. In addition, she is in charge of training all staff who work with rape victims. Her greatest area of expertise is in the field of child sexual assault.

Trainers from the Family Planning Council will work with participants during video taped role play and small group case sharing. The focus will be on understanding feelings about rape, on being a victim, knowing limits, the necessity for referral and feedback on effectiveness in working with rape victims.

No surprises in NFL play

The return of Pittsburgh's "steel curtain" defense is making all those "Steelers are dead" reports look premature.

For the third straight week, the Steeler defense held an opponent scoreless Sunday and Franco Harris, their workhorse fullback ran for 109 yards and a record-setting two touchdowns to spark Pittsburgh's 45-0 rout of the Kansas City Chiefs.

The victory, the Steelers' fourth straight, improved their record to 5-4 and kept alive their chances of defending the Super Bowl title with a wild card post-season berth. The Chiefs, meanwhile, dropped to 3-6 and in doing so, suffered their first shutout in 180 regular season games. The "steel curtain" has now gone 13 quarters without yielding a point.

Harris, who broke his own team record by rushing for his 10th and 11th TDs of the season, also surpassed the 100-yard rushing mark for the 23rd time in his career. He scored on runs of 25 and 5 yards, while quarterback Terry Bradshaw, who completed only 3 of 11 first half passes, threw a 19-yard touchdown toss to Frank Lewis in the third period before the Pittsburgh reserves finished the scoring.

The Chiefs had not been shut out since the New York Jets beat them 17-0 in the 10th game of the 1963 season, the longest streak in the NFL.

Ken Stabler threw three touchdown passes, including two to Cliff Branch, to lead Oakland to a come-from-behind victory over Chicago. Stabler hit Branch with a 75-yard bomb in the second period and again for a 49-yard touchdown in the final period to give the Raiders their 28-27 margin. It was Oakland's fifth straight win.

Walter Payton was the offensive spark for the Bears as he scored three times for the first time in his career and led a rally in which the Bears scored 20 points in the third period to grab a 27-21 lead at the end of three periods.

Dallas seized on two New York errors to set up a pair of fourth quarter field goals by Efren Herrera, but it took a last minute fumble recovery to hold off an upset bid by the winless Giants in the Cowboys' 9-3 victory.

In the closing minutes of play, New York drove from its own 29 to the Dallas six. But on fourth down, quarterback Craig Morton was hit by Harvey Martin as he attempted to throw a winning touchdown pass.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Monday, November 8 — Born today, you are a highly responsive individual, given to deeply felt emotional demonstrations of your feelings. All but unable to keep to yourself the degree of like or dislike involved in your reactions to people, places or things, you find it absolutely impossible to conceal the reactions themselves. There is no question, then, in the minds of those with whom you come into contact as to whether or not they are making a favorable impression upon you; the answer is always obvious, even to the most obtuse among them. For this reason, it is difficult for you to play the politics game; rather, you must stand on your actual feelings, whether they please other people or not.

Although you are perfectly capable of living happily within a very limited budget, you do enjoy life's luxuries. Good food, fine clothes, vacations, expensive sporting goods, jewelry: all these have their appeal. Even so, you are glad if the necessities of life are met with relative ease and do not ask for more than your share of the "extras." Wisdom and stability are a natural part of your everyday approach to everyday problems -- and this includes the problem of making ends meet.

A thoghhtful individual, you never make up your mind about a given thing until you have considered it from every angle. You seldom have to backtrack, therefore, or reverse yourself because of aspects of the situation that had not occurred to you before. On the other hand, you have no trouble changing your mind in accordance with new knowledge; indeed, flexibility is one of your chief characteristics.

Tuesday, November 9

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Restrain yourself insofar as your emotional responses are concerned. This is no time to be overzealous in any direction.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This is a day when a stitch in time saves more than nine. Be among the many to take advantage of new methods of operation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — If you retreat from the morning's problems, you will have more to deal with than you had bargained for by evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Lend a hand to one who has little talent for getting out of trouble -- but a great deal for getting into it.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If you can be critical of another's work without at the same time hurting his or her self-esteem, all will be well by day's end.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — This may well be a day of such petty problems that you lose sight of important goals in trying to deal with them. Maintain your equilibrium.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If you insist upon thinking of yourself as superior to one with whom you must of necessity share work, arguments will abound.

GEMINI (May 21-June 19) — Though you may be shocked by what you hear today, you cannot afford to be angered by it. Maintain your emotional status quo.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — If you can speak your mind in such a way that you offend no one by so doing, you should be able to make your points and gain a friend in the bargain.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — If you allow your temper to get the better of you today, you may as well give up on at least one goal of long standing. Stand pat -- but calmly.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Share present rewards with those of whom you are fondest. Children give special meaning to ordinary happenings this evening.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Business and personal matters intersect at odd angles today. Make it a point to finish one thing before starting another.

★ UMass tops Crusaders, 21-14

responded with 76 yards in eight carries. Freshman Mike Newell started the game in place of Bob Zawada at split end and led UMass receivers with three catches for 51 yards.

The offense had its best day in a couple of weeks as it scored all of its points on sustained drives. The offense avoided penalties in the second half as it only had two and had the tying and winning drives in the second half.

The winning drive lasted for 5:18 and covered 80 yards in 11 plays, the big one being Fallon's long run.

The tying tally came at 11:35 of the third period as Coleman's TD capped an 80 yard, 12 play drive that lasted 5:40.

There were three key plays in the drive. The first one was when Dent got 28 yards up a big hole in the middle on a draw to the Holy Cross 34. Fallon then got four yards on a fourth and one situation at the Crusader 25. The next play, Fallon gained 13 yards on a quarterback draw.

In the first half, the Crusaders led for most of the way, scoring first, then going ahead 14-7 after UMass had tied the score.

Holy Cross scored first at 10:27 when Morton, off the wishbone, faked to fullback Steve Hunt and went around right end for a seven yard touchdown. The drive consumed 16 plays and 80 yards.

UMass tied the game 37 seconds into the second quarter, with McNally going most of the way before being injured. The drive covered 80 yards and lasted 13 plays. Coleman scored from four yards out again, this time from the right side. Coleman also made a big run in the drive, carrying the ball 28 yards to the Holy Cross 23.

Holy Cross led again when Doherty ran 13 yards from the left, sprung by a block by wide receiver Craig Cerretani. The drive was only 54 yards on seven plays as the Crusaders stopped a fake punt by John Romboli.

"We needed it bad," said a jubilant UMass coach Dick MacPherson after the game. "We showed our poise today. We looked like a winner today, and it's been a long time since we looked like it."

MacPherson credited the offensive line with much of the success in Saturday's win. "We blew them out in the second half," said the coach.

The stats bear him out as UMass piled up 312 yards on the ground, 168 in the second half. UMass did not complete a pass in the second half as all the yardage gained was on the ground, a sign of strong line play.

Volleyball

The UMass volleyball team fared poorly in the Rhode Island Invitational this past weekend, losing seven of eight games. The women lost to Delaware, 10--5, 5-15, to Rhode Island, 7-15, 4-15, to Springfield, 4-15, 4-15, and split with Bridgewater St. 8-15, 15-7.

"It was the worst I've seen them play the entire season," UMass coach Dianne Thomson said. "It was just a miserable weekend."

UMass will host Keene St. and Westfield St. tomorrow at 7:00.

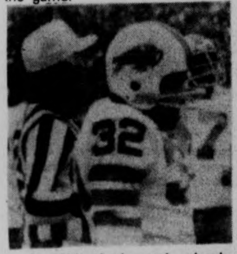
Pats defeat Bills; comedy of errors

FOXBORO, MASS. [UPI] — Rookie Mike Haynes dashed 89 yards with the first punt return for a touchdown in the club's 17-year history Sunday and John Smith added two field goals to propel the New England to a 20-10 victory over the Buffalo Bills.

Buffalo, now 2-7 with five straight losses, played most of the game without O.J. Simpson, who was ejected in the first quarter for fighting.

Smith's field goals came from 46 and 33 yards and Sam Cunningham, who had his best day in four years as a pro with 149 yards in 25 carries, scored the other New England touchdown on an eight yard run.

The Bills' points came on George Jakowenko's 31-yard field goal with one second left in the first half and a 6-yard touchdown run by quarterback Gary Marangi late in the game.



A dejected and ejected O.J. Simpson.

Haynes, the Patriots' first round draft pick from Arizona State, fielded Marv Bateman's 46-yard punt late in the econd period at the New England 11 on the third bounce. He broke to his right, scooted up the sideline and ran into the clear after fellow rookie Tim Fox blocked Bateman's last gasp tackle attempt.

Haynes — a 6-foot-2, 193-pound cornerback — nearly returned a punt for a touchdown in a preseason game against Cleveland. But he spiked the ball at the Brown three after running 71 yards. Teammate Darryl Stingley recovered the "fumble" and ran in for the touchdown.

Simpson came off the ground swinging at New England defense lineman Mel Lunsford after carrying the ball for no gain and quickly was thrown out for first time in his eight-year pro career. Simpson, the second leading career rusher in NFL history, watched the second half on TV from the Buffalo lockerroom.

New England, 6-3, got its first three points as a result of an interception by Fox. The rookie safety from Ohio State snared a Marangi pass at the New England 42 and returned it 29 yards to the Buffalo 29. Smith's followed with a field goal at 4:18 of the first quarter.

The Patriots scored again midway through the second period on Smith's 12th field goal in 16 tries this season.

Haynes' punt return lifted the Patriots' lead to 13-0, but an interception set up Jakowenko's field goal.

Patriots' rookie Mike Haynes scampers into the end zone enroute to an 89-yard punt return against the Bills yesterday afternoon. (UPI)

Ruggers sweep rival Rats

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby club swept a twinbill from the visiting Charles River Rats this Saturday afternoon 25-15 and 4-3. Taciturn tactician Robert "Doc" Laurence was, "very pleased, I'm optimistic — if we play the way we did today we should sweep our remaining contests."

Tom Callaghan tallied two push over tries to spark the "A" team's impressive extermination of their rabid, rodential rivals. The game was not as close as the 25-15 margin seemingly indicates as the UMass pack rucked very well and thoroughly dominated play.

Callaghan opened the scoring in the first minute of play. The Rats countered with a 30 yard penalty kick to close to within 4-3. At the halfway point in the opening stanza Callaghan continued his scoring onslought and Hugh Chester-Jones converted for a 10-3 lead.

Shortly before intermission Charles River kicked deep into UMass territory. On the ensuing scrummage from a lineout the visitors passed the ball out to the wing, successfully shot the gap and converted to trail by a single point.

Early in the second half Terry Kinneen benefited from some alert passing from his teammates to extend the lead to 14-9. The forwards set up this play as Bob Wronski started the play, fed off to Dan Georgiana who lateralled to the trailing Henry Brown. Brown returned the ball to Georgiana who carried to the five yard line where he hit Kinneen to complete the play. "Beautiful teamwork" said their revered leader.

The game winning play was a result of some heady ballhandling by veteran Peter Krane. Following a line out from the Charles River 45 yard line, Krane dummied a pass to the short side and turned upfield to the inside where he quickly exchanged with hard running Mike McClay. McClay exploded past the befuddled defenders and had only the fullback to beat and this he did easily. Hugh Chester-Jones converted for an insurmountable 20-9 lead. "Simply dynamite" exclaimed a jubilant mentor.

A few minutes later Charles River pounced on a loose ball and an unidentified rodent sped 50 yards untouched for the score. This was the result of a UMass miscue as the lateral was behind its intended receiver. "The backs played very mediocre today," said Laurence. "Considering the amount of ball they had they should have scored six or seven additional tries. Without question it was the forward day."

Peter Krane put the "icing on the cake" with a pushover try late in the contest.

Laurence singled out the efforts of Tom Callaghan; "He did a good job cleaning up," and Dan Georgiana who "played probably his best game of the year for us."

John Mechlin scored with less than a minute remaining in the game as the Minutemen squad eked out a hard fought 4-3 triumph. Charles River led 3-0 at halftime on a 45 yard penalty kick as most of the half was played between the 39 yard lines.

With time running out and quickly becoming an ally of the Rats, Doug Bayford lofted a kick deep into the oppositions territory. The UMass forwards rucked well and Bruce Gordan eventually dug the precious pigskin out and fed off to Jack Richmond. Mechlin, after taking a pass from Richmond, scored in the corner. Due to the tough angle the conversion attempt failed.

The home side "covered the subsequent kickoff like tarpaper, never let them get untracked and hung on to preserve the win," reported a happy Laurence. "It was a good win, they played well and deserved to win."

Poloists leave NE finals empty handed

By ROBERT CORB
Collegian Staff

The water polo men played their best polo of the season but came away empty handed as they lost all three of their games at the New England championships held at Brown over the weekend.

Plagued all season by the inability to get the entire team together at one time, UMass took on second seed Yale Friday minus two starters. Five of the six UMass swimmers who started played the entire game as UMass lost 12-9. Scoring for UMass were Lomas (6), Yarworth (1), Mansfield (1), and Corb (1).

Saturday morning UMass took on number one seed Brown, again minus two starters, and lost 13-8. Scorers for UMass were Yarworth with 5, Lomas (2), and Corb (1).

In the second game of the day, a tired UMass squad took on fourth seed Harvard and lost 15-12. Harvard, which had beaten Yale in overtime earlier in the day, got revenge for an early season league loss to UMass. The scoring for UMass was well spread out in this game with Yarworth leading the way with 5, Corb with 3, Lomas with 2, Rick Mansfield with 1, and defensive specialist Ben Crooker with 1.

The men finished this frustrating season in fourth place in the New England league, 5-6 overall. On the positive side, they have gained the respect of every coach and team they have played, and are looking forward to an exiting spring season.

UNH nips stickers in tournament play

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — After a lot of ups and downs, the UMass field hockey team closed out its 1976 season Friday with a 3-2 loss to UNH in a consolation game in the EAIAW tournament at Brown University.

As the score indicates, it was a close game from start to finish. At the end of the first half, the score was tied 1-1 with the Minutewomen ahead in penetration time (inside the 25 yard line). Then in the second, the Wildcats went ahead 2-1 on a penalty stroke before scoring a third goal to go ahead 3-1. The Minutewomen had a good chance to score on a penalty stroke themselves, but missed, and didn't score their second goal until late in the game. It was a tough loss for the Minutewoman, who had previously defeated UNH, 1-0 earlier this season.

The Minutewomen opened the tournament with a loss to Yale on Thursday morning, but came back later in the day to defeat Dartmouth 1-0. That victory made them eligible for their ill-fated consolation game with UNH.

As expected, Springfield College (responsible for two UMass losses), as the Chiefs defeated runnerup Southern Connecticut State in the finals.

Those two teams will play in the National AIAW tournament. Last year Springfield finished third in that contest, with Westchester College (Pa.) taking the title.

Coach Judith Davidson, on her first year coaching the Minutewomen said, "I have a lot of mixed feelings about the season. I was very pleased to be able to coach, I enjoyed it very much. I would like to have another chance to coach. But, I'm disappointed in our losses. We should have won four of those six games that we lost." (The two conceded games were the two Springfield losses).

The Minutewomen finished their season with nine wins and six losses. As Davidson said, four of the losses were against teams (Northeastern, Cortland St., Mt. Holyoke, Bridgewater), that they probably should have beaten. These losses can be considered upsets because they came against teams considered weaker than UMass, but the losses to perennial nemesis Springfield were games in which the Minutewomen were definitely outclassed. With a talented team, UMass faced a continual problem of "off-on" hockey; playing spirited hockey for one half only to let down in the second.

There were bright spots in the season, too, like the five game winning streak that began with a 4-0 win over Worcester State and ended with a loss to tough Springfield College. The goaltending of Kathy Gipps was superior; playing in front of her was a solid "team" consisting of Kelly Salls, Gayle Hutchinson, Cheryl Meliones, Lynsie Wickman, Sue Kibling and Karen Zimmerman. When the team worked together and supported each other, the Minutewomen became invincible. as evidenced by their performances in the Worcester, UNH, Smith and Plymouth St. victories. Unfortunately, there weren't quite enough of those moments, as the Minutewomen never played up to their potential.

Revitalized booters shutout UNH, 2-0

By MIKE WITOWSKI

A couple of forwards new to front line, Mike Parsons and Tarek Elnabli, provided the goal scoring, while Mark Hanks, who has been in his position all season, provided the goal-stopping as the UMass soccer team defeated the University of New Hampshire squad by a score of 2-0 in its last home game of the season.

Parsons, a senior who had played fullback all of this season until a couple of weeks ago scored his first ever varsity goal at 26:46 of the first half to get the Minutemen off on the right foot. UNH netminder Bruce Riedeil misplayed Parson's shot from the right wing and it got past him for the goal.

Elnabli, a freshman, playing in only his second varsity game, scored an insurance goal with only about three minutes left in the game to make life easier for goaltender Hanks. UNH had been pressuring in the UMass end and nearly scored the tying goal, if it had not been for a great save by Hanks. Elnabli had a two-on-one break with teammate Mark Abbott, who fed Tarek and the little lad from Egypt scored.

Goaltender Hanks had another outstanding game in gaining his fourth shutout of the season. One shot did go into the UMass net in the second half, but a penalty on UNH preceeded it and therefore nullified it.

UMass coach Russ Kidd was extremely pleased with the way the defense played in front of Hanks. "The way our wing fullbacks, Pat Veale and Mark Vassalotti, played today showed the reason why I could move Parsons to the front," said Kidd, "Pat has come on real well for us and Vassalotti, I can't say enough about that kid."

Center fullback Ed Niemiec and sweeper Larry Aronson got some praise from Kidd also, as did UNH forward Chip Black. Niemiec, who seemed to be hurt on three or four separate occasions but never left the lineup, almost scored a goal resulting from a corner-kick. Aronson constantly booted the ball to midfield on goal-kicks. Black, who was all over the field, was categorized by Kidd as "The best player we've played against this year."

BOOTER BANTER: The Minutemen play their season finale on Tuesday at Tufts.... Bob McChesney didn't see much action for UMass.... Joel Mascolo played some right wing, he had been exclusively a left wing... Mark Abbott has come on in the last two games, with a goal and an assist....

Legere, McGrail prove points in NE sub-varsity harrier meet

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Jay Legere knew what he wanted to do — "run out front". Neil McGrail felt he had something to prove since he felt he and Legere had been "stuck on at the end of the team," after a less than dazzling run at Albany State.

Both UMass sub-varsity harriers proved their points emphatically on Saturday in the 64th annual New England cross country championship at Franklin Park in Boston, as they finished 6th and 7th, respectively in the JV meet.

The problem is, everyone else on the team slumped, and consequently the Minutemen finished third in third in the team battle with 66 points to Providence's 51 and Northeastern's 54.

Providence used a winning effort by Mike Byrne and Fran Rafferty's 3rd place to lock up the team title and dethrone UMass which won the crown last year. NU's Kevin Prest was second. Since the 5-mile course was being used for the first time, Byrne's time of 24:34, although they were a few seconds apart, usual front runner John Scheer was in 14th with a time of 25:50. Kevin McCusker was 19th in 25:58 and Rick Walls was 20th in 26:05 to close out UMass' scorers.

Over the first three miles, UMass was in good position as McGrail, McCusker, Legere and Matty Wolfe were all in the top ten. Right about that point, McCusker started to drop off the pace, and Wolfe was hit with a band stomach cramp, which hampered him for the rest of the race. The other two UMass runners slipped back a little to set up their finishing position.

Although the times were generally sub-par, the fact that Legere and McGrail ran well is encouraging. Scheer and McCusker had off days which will probably not happen again very soon. Wolfe would have definately finished in the top ten if he hadn't been stricken with cramps, and Walls and Kevin McCaffrey are capable of running better.

Legere felt that he could have pushed it a little more, but was satisfied with his run. "Your body tends to tell you to slow down," said Coach Ken O'Brien. "That's when you have to really dig in and concentrate."

"All those hard one miles we did last week really helped," said McGrail. Indeed they did, as the harriers went through the mile mark in 4:37 and the two mile in 9:25.

The sub-varsity is looking ahead to the IC4A race next weekend where they are confident that they'll bounce back. "We know we can beat them, we were tired today," said McCusker. "Nobody ran good today," added Walls.

"Place-wise I was satisfied," said assistant coach Arnie Morse. "The times were slow, though. I think we'll do well in the IC's, if our performances improve."

tire, and Quinn sprinted past him to take the lead by 20 yards.

Flora tried to regain the lead but Quinn, stretching out his stride, kept the 20 yard lead over Flora and finished 20 yards behind the front-runner Treacy.

Treacy said Quinn ran a smart and sensible race but was definitely surprised by Quinn's time. "I never expected him to beat my teammate (O'Shea) but Quinn proved he is a strong, strong runner," said O'Shea.

Providence College displayed tremendous overall depth in capturing the New Englands with with six of its top seven finishing in the top twenty of the race. The Friars, rated fourth in the country, placed Treacy at the top, O'Shea, 4th, Dan Dillon, 8th, Ed Hartnett, 15th, and John Savoie, who ran the last two miles of the race without his shoes, 16th.

But besides Quinn's record shattering time, the story of the meet was the one point second place finish eked out by the Minutemen over arch rival Northeastern.

Providence won the meet with a team score of 44 points. Following them were UMass with 88 points and Northeastern with 89. Although the Huskies had three top runners, Jon and Bob Flora, and Bickford, they didn't have the depth UMass had in its fourth and fifth runners.

Following Quinn for UMass, John McGrail placed 11th, Louis Panaccione, 22nd, Frank Carroll, 26th and Cliff Staples, 27th. Northeastern's fourth man was 28th and 40th, respectively.

An important man for UMass was Staples, for had he not beaten the Huskie's fourth man Jim Doane for 27th place, the Huskies would have taken second place in the 36 team contest.

"I think this is the first time in two years UMass has performed well in an important championship meet," said O'Brien.

"Our mental conditioning was great. Winning by a point means that all of our runners were able to pull out of themselves something extra to pass other runners," O'Brien said. "Everybody scratched and clawed and didn't let anybody pass them. It was a great team victory and a beautiful thing to see. Everybode gave 150 per cent."

I'm really proud of our team," said captain John McGrail, "especially after last year's disappointing third plice finish. Our guys did what they had to do and there is nothing better than beating Northeastern. I know they will remember this race for a long time," McGrail added.

Coach Irwin Cohen, of Northeastern wasn't surprised by the finish. "Providence, UMass, and ourselves are well coached and have excellent personnel, so I knew it would be close. It's very hard to find freshmen who can run with our upperclassmen and that's one of the reasons we lost. But we will be back next week in the IC4A's and out team won't forget the one point loss," said Cohen.

The next obstacle to UMass's recognition as one of the top teams in the nation (now rated 16th) will be the IC4A's, known as the Eastern Collegiate Eastern Championships next Monday. Coach O'Brien feels the test will be even harder for the Harriers.

"There will be more competitors, a tougher course, and more teams for competition. We will have to run a little better but our runners must still have the same mental attitude of not letting others pass them," said O'Brien.

QB Mike Fallon rolled to 112 yards ...

Minutemen find ammunition to overcome Holy Cross

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

WORCESTER — A bunch of heroes helped UMass last Saturday to a 21-14 win over Holy Cross College, lifting its record to 5-3 and giving the team an emotional uplift for next Saturday's Yankee Conference title game with New Hampshire.

Junior quarterback Mike Fallon won the Dr. Eddie Anderson Memorial Award for his performance in the game, replacing Brian McNally in the first quarter when the co-captain left with a concussion. Fallon responded in the game by gathering 112 yards in 19 carries, with 83 of those yards coming in the second half on 11 carries.

Billy Coleman was also helping out on the ground by carrying 21 times for three touchdowns and 87 yards. Coleman scored two of his touchdowns in the second half as the Minutemen overcame the Crusaders 14-7 halftime lead.

Coleman's game winner was set up by a 38 yard run by Fallon from the Holy Cross 46 down to the eight. Fallon, facing a fourth and two situation, kept the ball after faking right, and went left behind guard Jerry Greene and tackle Jeff Lauder. The junior quarterback cut to the middle of the field for ten yards, then headed for the left sideline where Holy Cross safety and co-captain Bill Campbell finally made the stop.

Fallon was hurt on the play and this brought in freshman QB Mike McEvilly, whose first play of his varsity career was in the second quarter when he replaced a shaken up Fallon for one play.

McEvilly, from first and goal at the eight with less than two minutes remaining, carried the ball on a four yard quarterback keeper, setting up Coleman's four yard touchdown burst up the middle for the game winner with 1:25 remaining.

McEvilly came back and fell on the ball twice when UMass regained possession again to insure the victory.

It was the defense, though, that preserved the victory by ending a desperate Crusader march downfield. Holy Cross, starting on its own 38, moved the ball on quarterback Bob Morton's arm down to the UMass 15 when Ron Harris intercepted a pass intended for Crusader Phil Johnson in the endzone.

The defense had its share of heroes as Harris covered the field all day making tackles. Harris saved a touchdown when he tackled Purple running back Brian Doherty on a 55-yard run around left end.

Doherty was a thorn in the side of the Minuteman defense as he gained 108 yards on 15 carried, but was pretty much shut off in the second half as he only gained seven yards plus his long run. He was also caught twice behind the line of scrimmage, once by Harris and Peter McCarty and again by Harris.

The defense was also hurt by injuries as John Beerworth started in place of Dave Croasdale and Joe McDonald replaced co-captain John Toner in the first quarter. Toner had a jammed ankle.

The subs on offense came through, too. Dennis Dent saw a lot of time in the second half and

Quinn leads harriers to 2nd in NE's

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Three weeks ago, assistant coach Arnie Morse was asked how good a runner sophomore Mike Quinn could be. Morse predicted that Quinn would rewrite the UMass distance records before he was through.

Morse had his predictions come true this past weekend when Mike Quinn, with a time of 23:13, simply demolished the Franklin Park five mile course record and the UMass record, on his way to a second place finish in the New England Collegiate Championships.

The sophomore running sensation, in leading the harriers to an impressive second place finish in the New Englands, not only beat 198 other competitors, but came within seven seconds of beating one of the best cross country runners in the country, John Treacy.

Providence's Treacy also set the Franklin Park course record with a 23:06 clocking.

Quinn, however, not only beat another premier distance runner in the country, Mike O'Shea from Providence, but also All-Americans Jon Flora and Bruce Bickford from Northeastern, and former Franklin Park record holder, Bob Hodge from the University of Lowell.

"I refuse anymore to predict what Mike Quinn will do in the future. In my wildest dreams I thought maybe Mike would get second place but his time is unbelievable. His potential is outstanding and it's anybody's guess to what he will do in the future," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien.

Quinn, in breaking the UMass record of 23:40, formerly held by 1974 graduate Randy Thomas, bettered his Yankee Conference winning performance of 23:59. He did it on a partly cloudy, cold, and slightly windy day before an estimated 900 spectators who jammed Franklin Park.

The sophomore, from Dedham, Mass. who was second in the JV New Englands last year, said he even surprised himself by breaking the record but maintains it couldn't have come at a better time.

"I'm really surprised at my time but I really feel great that I could help the team beat Northeastern for second place," said Quinn.

"Probably the key to the race was Bob Hodge's first mile pace of 4:26. That fast pace helped me to prepare for what was to come later in the race," Quinn said.

Quinn's running splits of a 4:28 mile, 8:56 two mile, and a 13:40 three mile, trailed the five top leaders at the three mile checkpoint. Trailing the leader Treacy by an estimated 200 yards, Quinn decided to make his move.

First off, he passed Bruce Bickford from NU and O'Shea from Providence. Then he set his sights on All-American Jon Flora from Northeastern. At the 4.5 mile mark, Flora then running third, began to

VOLUME 2, ISSUE 5

"WE BELONG TO YOU"

As I approach him seeming to walk faster as he nears, all excited and almost childish feeling races through my bones. He's blood of my blood, flesh of my flesh. We look, walk, eat and sleep alike. I'm awaiting the brightening of his eyes, the warm grin his mouth will create when we pass each other. And finally ... a simple "Hi ... How ya doin'?", will assist in patterning the rest of my day into being something simply beautiful.

My dreams of having a sincere brother and the peaceful love and unity that could exist between us is so real in my mind I can almost taste it.

But all of this quickly disintegrates when I don't see his eyes light up ... in fact, as he passes me he casts his eyes downward as if to avoid speaking to me. I don't receive the pleasure of watching a beautiful grin blossom on his face. And last, but most important ... the only existing sounds between us were fragments of stale silence as we briskly passed each other on the street.

I don't dare look back for fear that that same coldness that just passed between us is standing directly behind me.

Why, dear brother? I attempted to smile in your direction but when no indication of a mutual feeling came from you, I quickly erased the thought of us being close friends even for a split second, as we pass each other on the street.

No, I don't know you personally my brother, and just because I may smile in your direction, it does not mean that I want to run a game on you. Possibly, you may have had some bad experiences with sisters who smiled at you while deviously calculating a master spiders web in their mind, in which to capture and destroy you.

But, you are my brother, and believe me there are many of us who want to be true sisters to you. Not necessarily your "chick on the side" or the chick by your hip who you have at your finger tips.

You are my brother. And I doubt you realize the value of your love and consideration to me.

Why is it that so many brothers ignore sisters? And so many sisters ignore brothers? We pass each other on the streets and actually try to pretend we don't see each other, which would justify our not speaking to each other. A whale could swim through the gap between us with absolutely no trouble.

If you are a fairly physically attractive sister, you may get a few "What's happenin sister." from the few brothers you pass daily. If you are not too attractive physically you find yourself never even receiving a smile from the brothers you pass daily not to mention a "What's happenin." And the brothers that do say it sometimes sincerely do not know the answer to the question they're asking. What is happening? We all walk around blank not knowing what is happening in the world we live in. Consequently, we walk around asking each other ... "What's happening."

My usual response to this question is "Oh, not much" ... or .... "Nothing much." I'm responding to the courtesy the brother had in speaking to me and not the question itself. If I seriously ran it down on what was happening around me I'd be there taking up all of the brothers' time. But I realize that my brother was merely gesturing that, "I see you sister and I recognize that you are a part of me," when he spoke to me. I'm not capping on brothers who use the phrase "What's happenin?", as a greeting. In fact, I praise them for having the concern enough to speak. And you're right brother ... as your sister I belong to you. And I thank you for sharing your consideration and intelligence with me.

But right now I want to address my attention to my brothers who don't speak when they see me. Not myself, personally, I'm speaking in behalf of hundreds of sisters. I'm addressing my attention to my brothers who don't have the courtesy and the intelligence to clean up their language and borrow some manners while they are in the presence of sisters or women period. My brothers who have the disease of prejudice eating away at their hearts ... who will escort a white woman to her doorstep and leave his Black sister to stumble home in the dark, the prey of any wild beast in the streets.

My brothers who may have been blessed to have received love and affection from a Black woman by her, allowing him to make love to her, but he destroys the whole essence behind that action by broadcasting it to his so-called friends, who are unfortunately, just like him. All because she trusted her emotions with what she thought was a man.

These are my brothers who I want to address my attention. You are still my brothers because I love you and I want to see you change.

I want to talk to you brothers. I want to show you the gap between us, how big it is, how it got there and how to close it. Hopefully, we can begin to learn how to be true brothers and sisters.

I realize that the sisters are just as guilty if not more. There are many women who live to destroy man. And I realize that some of my brothers that I'm addressing now are an exact product of female demons. Be careful of who you let in your heart. For the devil is not a color nor a sex, but a mentality, which comes in all sizes shapes and colors.

We who want to be true sisters to you are waiting for you to take your rightful role as rulers and lead. We can only respond to what you give us. I guarantee you ... we are behind you 1000 per cent.

I'm telling you this because you are my brothers. If we as your sisters did not love you we wouldn't care if you lived or died. But the relationship between us is quickly dying. This is what myself and many other sisters are trying to save.

Because ... You are our brothers ... We are your sisters and "We belong to you."

Formation of National Black Student Association

By NKRUMAH OLINGA

There was a stunning conference of the (N.B.S.A.) National Black Student Association. The Conference took place in Atlanta, Georgia from Oct. 29 thru 31, on the main campus of the University of Atlanta. There were 9 students from the Amherst area that went to the conference, their transportation was provided by the New World Center.

Topics discussed included programs and principals for formation of the N.B.S.A. and its ideology. There will be a recall on Feb. 17, 1977 on the Atlanta campus.

The Atlanta University area is centrally located, a predominate number of Black Students attend college in the south and proportionally more Blacks live in the south.

The response for solidarity was very much evident throughout the conference. The Black Student body did not deviate, there were no instances of disagreement or procrastination, everyone at the conference was progressive.

One setback of the N.B.S.A. was the conference in Boston, Ma., which was poorly planned and executed. But this conference polarized the students and broadened their base.

One very important aspect which was discussed is the realization of the Black elite. The Black students attending Universities and Colleges throughout America today. It was stressed at the conference the need for greater participation of students and other groups to begin to plug themselves into the very complex problem of changing the conditions of the masses.

The next Conference on Feb. 17 will be without a doubt a very rigorous one.

REFLECTIONS

By CHARISSE WILLIAMS

In response to the letter entitled "Problem of Communication" which appeared in last Monday's Collegian, I would like to point out the short sightedness is some of their assertions.

I believe there should have been an historical analysis that would have reflected the reasons behind the lack of communication between black men and women. No doubt American's oppression and suppression are a leading cause.

Looking at things chronologically one can see that slavery with its forced separation helped hinder the lines of communication between the black male and female. After emancipation, black people were denied entrance into America's economy. The crumbs that were left for us helped foster strained relations between the black male and female. This deprivation of economic rights continues to produce the same effects today.

Also in our analysis we must include the social value system inherent in capitalist America. One supreme tenant is individuality. We begin to get into a bag where as you do your own thing and I do mine. This is done sometimes even at the expense of another person or community's livelihood. This type of doctrine has disunified us rather than strengthened our ties to one another. It is especially noticed on this campus where we are so small in number.

The materialist values of society has filtered into what characterizes an eligible man or an eligible woman. The eligibility is generally formed by how fine he is, does he have money, or is he well like. I'm quite sure that this list can be lengthened. We tend to only value things that the majority of capitalist America values which is on a very superficial level. It tends to be the materialist aspects of the exterior rather than the interior that is measured.

It does no good to walk around and say "There are no men or no women on campus," and then blame one another for this occurrence. In blaming one another we fail to reflect upon our own shortcomings which help widen the gap of communication. What is needed is an understanding which can only be created by the coming together of people. All the forces involved must meet and discuss our situation. The Third World Women Center will be sponsoring a workshop to deal with the lack of communication on campus. All those who complain are especially urged to come.

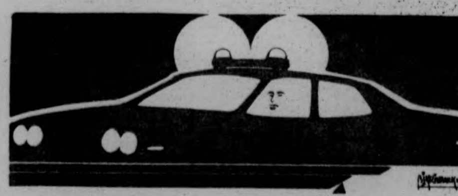
Organized Car Thieves



By N. LUMUMBA OLINGA

I bitterly oppose Amherst towing service and the traffic director at the University of Massachusetts. The two have no sympathy for illegally parked automobiles. They stick you with a big fat ticket and then tow your car away. The ticket could be a necessity but the towing is unnecessary.

Once they tow an automobile it cost $18.00 to get it back plus $3.00 a day. This is an outrage, a syndicate operation by design. What needs to be done is a well organized protest against the towing service once and for all. My automobile was towed recently and it was damaged. Paint and chrome on my automobile was scraped and I got no sympathy when I went to the towing companies office to find out what could be done to fix my car. They are also liable for the loss of one flashlight which is missing because the door was left ajar. I will be taking them to small claims court, but my action would have a bigger impact if I had the support of the community at large and also support from those who have also been victimized by the (hijackers) (Amherst Towing Service) University of Massachusetts traffic procedures.

Black Nationalism and the Afro-American Student

By MUHAMMED AHMED

Many changes have occurred in the world of the black student since the convening of the 1st black conference on black nationalism which was held in Nashville, Tenn., by the Afro-American Student Movement in 1964. This conference, while small in number, represented a growing tendency among black students and black youth towards a new trend of black awareness among black people. The black nationalist trend spread among black students, and in 1966 the Atlanta SNCC project drafted a black consciousness paper that had much to do with moving SNCC from a policy of integration to Black Power.

The emergence of the slogan Black Power was the turning point for the black student community. The concept of black power challenged the whole value structure of the Negro community. In essence it forced black people to think about black people in the United States as powerless. Black Power challenged the pseudo-class structure of the middle class Negro society and black became the new and fashionable thing; it was now hip to be black.

Though these changes may sound superficial, they were necessary steps in altering the hip society of the black student. The hip society was a result of conditioning and of the false hopes of the American dream (bourgeois — equal — existence with whites). It transcended all class barriers and had its own social values and norms. It was built on escapism, to escape the reality of a racist society and of the necessity to change that society if our people were to achieve liberation. By making "black" popular, the values of black students began to slowly change and so did the values of all black America. This value, cultural revolution, is still in process.

Each day the black student faces more and more contradictions. Being the more educated class of an oppressed nation, it is sociologically the potential colonial bourgeoisie, but like colonial bourgeoisies of all oppressed nations, their class interests cannot be fulfilled under the colonial regime. Because America is a racist capitalistic society, it cannot absorb all black students as a class into its economic system because its system is built on racial and economic exploitation.

For the most part black youth will be future black workers. The black worker is a super-exploited, wage slave, meaning that he is still a slave. Only the name of slavery has been changed; the condition remains almost the same.

Black students therefore, like all black people, are discriminated on the basis of race and not that of class alone. Being an educated class, black students have traditionally had "higher expectations" from the system than most black captives. But as the struggle intensifies, and more and more black students become alienated from the system because they cannot achieve their goals within the system, black students will transform as a class; from being a bourgeois assimilationist, alienated elite to becoming a revolutionary nationalist intelligentsia for the movement, developing a vanguard on the road to independent nationhood.

Faced with growing contradictions of fighting for a system that enslaves us, fighting in a racist war in Vietnam and for democratic rights in America, black students began to develop an anti-imperialist, anti-colonialist attitude. The turning point in this attitude and the black student movement came on March 21, 1967 at Howard University when a group of black students chased selective service director Hershey off Howard's Champton Auditorium stage, chanting "America is the black man's battleground."

As the year continued, these students engaged in what they called a cultural revolution at Howard, a re-channelling of the student body's values toward changing Howard from a "Nego college with white innards" to a black university relevant to the black community and its struggle.

Black students at other colleges slowly began to pick up on what was going on at Howard, and by 1968 the black studies rebellion had swept San Francisco State College and on to campuses (white and Negro) across the country and had spread as well to black high schools. In the process of the black rebellion, middle class European values began to be swept away. By 1969 the black studies revolt had hit over 50 Negro colleges alone.

The black student movement that was just a small nucleus four years ago has now taken on proportions of a mass movement with wide ramifications for the black community. In less than three years of internal revolution, the cultural values of the black student's world have been challenged and are in the process of being remolded. The world of the Afro-American student which was once built around a complete escape from reality now is striving to be "relevant" to the black community.

With more anddmore students coming from black working class backgrounds (families), they are more reality-based, striving to make their education meet the needs of their mothers, fathers, brothers, and sisters at home. This growing sense of reality in the student community is producing a new sense of black love, respect, pride, and nationalism in the overall black community. Black students are no longer trying to become white, and if black students (the future bourgeoisie) don't want to become white, then who does anymore?

The process of destroying the false class barriers between black college students and the black community is a difficult and important task. The friction between the two was a false one, but one that has left many historical scars. Previously, black college students didn't want to associate with the "brother" and "sister" from the streets because they wanted to be as white, European, or respectable as possible. But now, with the upsurge of black awareness, this is changing and the black college student is coming back home. (What this is, in essence, is a cultural revolution that is first affecting the colonial alienated elite or petty bourgeoisie who, through a process of re-orientation and re-organization, will develop into a revolutionary nationalist intelligentsia which will play a significant role in the road to independent nationhood in our democratic revolution.)

In most nationalist revolutions the beginnings have come from student movements; students who are the potential petty national bourgeoisie of the colonialized nation who no longer seek integration with the mother (colonial) country, but begin to demand independence, national autonomy, and formation of a nation-state. This has not happened yet with the black student movement because the movement is still in the transitional stage. But as the cultural revolution and students become more politically sophisticated, the question of an independent black nation-state will become a popular demand.

The cultural revolution which began in 1966 with the call for Black Power and which reached mass proportions in 1967 has now affected the vast majority of Black America. The contradictions of the Vietnam War and the rise of unemployment among black youth are rapidly affecting the African-American student. To the extent that the contradictions polarize, the student community has changed.

Prior to 1964, little attention was paid to high school and junior high school youth by black revolutionaries. In 1967 black nationalists began to organize high school youth which resulted in high school youth organizing themselves, and in October, 1967, five thousand black high school students went on strike and held one of the first major black high school demonstrations for black history and black freedom in the country. Since that time, black high school students have become a new dynamic force in the black revolution, and eventually they may be forced to play a vanguard role. The cultural revolution in the black high school and junior high school community has more far reaching ramifications than in the black college community because the black high school (and junior high school) student is directly tied to the community. Ninety per cent of them will be the future black workers, fathers, and mothers of Black America, the generation yet to come.

If the black revolution is to grown and continue, these students must be trained in revolutionary-nationalist theory, practice, and organization and must be geared to carry the revolution. The black revolution will then become an inter-generational revolution, its new cultural dynamic producing the cultural values of the next generation. The struggle for community control of schools is therefore a struggle to nationalize schools in the black community. In order to make education relevant to black folks, schools must become black nationalist training centers. Education for black children must be black nationalist education, a black nationalization of the education system. This is what black studies mean to black students.

The struggle for community control of schools is a struggle to gain control or power over the system that affects eight to ten million black youth. The fierce struggle for black student power will occur in the high school and junior high schools as more and more students gain the awareness of the necessity of community control. The struggle for black history courses, the wearing of hair natural, and the wearing of national dress are beginnings of the black student revolution. But the real test will come when black students begin to say: "A white teacher can't teach me anything: We demand all black teachers." This will be another degree in the nationalization of the school system: To demand black teachers, principles, and administrators who are relevant to the black community.

The next step comes in the demand to change the names of black high and junior high schools to be named after black liberation fighters and the right to salue the black nation's flag (the red, black and green) and the right to fly it over the school at all times. Then comes the complete change in curriculum to make it relevant to the black high school and junior high school student.

Black college students could be very helpful in organizing black high school students and could serve as "liberation" teachers in liberation schools. As the cultural revolution sweeps into the community from the schools, it may raise demands such as changing street corner names, naming them after liberation fighters or African nations. In the south, it may lead to whole communities changing their names. Some of these things are already occurring but will have more effect when broadened to a national level. In order for the cultural revolution to reach its fullest dimension, black youth must organize nationally to make their demands felt.

The role of black youth in the cultural revolution is to serve as agitators, re-educators, organizers, and unifiers in the struggle for independentl black nationhood. The black college student can play a very constructive role in the cultural revolution. In his struggle for black studies, he should strive to make the college or university (if on a black campus) into a community center, with all the facilities of the college open to the community free of charge. He must encourage local community groups to come on campus and participate in school programs.

REFLECTIONS ON HOMECOMING

Interview: with Sandra Jackson, University of Massachusetts exchange student to the University of Lagos, Nigera (formerly Cultural Affairs Editor of Nummo News in 1975).

Nummo: Miss Jackson when did you get back to Amherst, and how long did you stay in Nigera?

Miss Jackson: I got back to Amherst on Tuesday, November 2, and I stayed in Lagos for one year.

Nummo: What is the University of Lagos like?

Miss Jackson: The University of Lagos still has traces of Colonial influence, but it's changing. Actually the University of Lagos was set-up directly after the Nigerian independence. However, the basic structure of the Educational System and orientation of the curriculum, were basically British.

Nummo: What were the exams like?

Miss Jackson: Actually I didn't take any exams because I was doing independent study and research under special arrangement. However, I noted the effect that exams had on students. The system is based on a final examination which theoretically a student prepares for the whole year, and this system tends to produce a situation whereby students are academically lax at the beginning of the year, and a lot of pressure comes down on students when they start cramming for exams. The system is tough and at times unnecessarily tough, but it's changing.

Nummo: What type of independent study and research did you do and under what arrangements?

Miss Jackson: I was working with the Institute of Mass Communications at the University of Lagos. I did an internship in Radio at (NBC) Nigerian Broadcasting Corporation. I also did a workshop in writing for television and a research project having to do with media training in Nigeria.

Nummo: What were the students in Nigeria like?

Miss Jackson: The students in Nigeria were different just like students are different everywhere. But there was a general tendency of being politically conscious, especially concerning Nigeria in particular and Africa in general. Several interesting traditions I noticed was a great deal of politicking around the student elections. They have an annual student demonstration which occurs just about every February. And I found that quite interesting.

Nummo: What type of Government do they have in Nigeria and who is the current head of state?

Miss Jackson: The current head of state is Lt. General Olusegun Obasanjo who has been in power since an attempted coup on Feb. 13, 1976 assassinated former head of state, the late Gen. Murtala Muhammad. The present Government is a Military Government which is the case in many African countries such as Ghana, Taga, Algeria, the list goes on. Nigeria has been governed by either one military regime or another since the late sixties. However the present Military Government (which took power from Yakubru Gowan in the "Bloodless Coup" in July of 1975) has indicated plans to return Nigeria to Civilian Rule by 1979.

Nummo: Do you have anything you'd like to add to that?

Miss Jackson: I'd just like to sa, that I'm very, very grateful that I had the opportunity to go to Africa, which was like the fulfillment of a life-long dream for me. Going over as a student gives a person an added perspective than say, doing the tourist trip because you have a goal to work against and you get to learn a lot just by living, working, studying within the society.

Another thing I'd like to say is this; that a lot of folks have been asking me how I was received as a Black American coming home, so to speak. Generally Black Americans are received pretty well, and the African hospitality is really warm and you feel, well at home. But just like over here where the media has fed us so many myths and misconceptions about the continent, it works both ways.

I found that, largely due to the widespread exportation of certain kinds of movies from the U.S., we have a negative type of image over there. That is why it's so impootant that we have this kind of cultural exchange happening, and it's of utmost necessity that we create and perpetuate institutions whereby we continue to learn and re-learn one another.

One person on this side who I owe a lot of thanks to for turning me on to the program and giving a lot of encouragement in making the trip is Professor Dovi Afesi, a brother from Ghana who teaches in Afro Am. I'd also like to thank the Department for their support in allowing me to spend my final year abroad.

I want to urge any students who're interested in the exchange program (which I believe they also have exchanges to Jamaica, some European countries and possibly Ghana) to get in touch with the International Programs Office at Whitmore. Or better yet, talk to Dovi, who's on the 3rd Floor of New Africa House.

NATIONAL BLACK STUDENT ASSOCIATION DECLARES POLITICAL LINE

We, the Amherst Chapter of NBSA, are organized in the spirit of the New Afrikan Student's Unity and the sincere desire to see Afrikan students become viable in the righteous struggle of our people for national liberation, and total independence. We see from the present situation, that the time has come for Afrikan students to get rid of all the foolishness that has plagued us in the past few years and get down to the serious business of freeing our people.

Brothers and sisters the time has come for us to take command.

As we see America becoming progressively more oppressive we understand what this situation will mean to the 30-40 million of our people that live within its shores. As America is celebrating its Bicentennial, 200 years of freedom (?), it is also on the verge of annilating all democratic rights, which in the case of African people, is making legal what they have been doing all along. Now is the time for us to strengthen ourselves ideologically, mentally, physically, and morally, in preparation for a long hard struggle. Everything we do must be a reflection of our desire to see New African People attain their rightful position in world history.

From studies and our day to day experiences inside of America we, the Amherst Chapter of the N.B.S.A. have analyzed the status of Black people and have come to the following conclusions:

A) We are New Afrikan People. Our history tells us that this is so. We are not Negroes, Niggers, Americans, or Afro Americans. We are Afrikan People held captive in America. We are prisoners of war, the war that was waged on Afrika by Europe and America since the 15th century. We are the decendents of the survivors. Just because we were born in America does not make us Americans. Anyway, if we were Americans we wouldn't need civil rights legislation. Why are we the last hire and the first fired? Why does there have to be busing for quality education? Why are we constantly the victims of police brutality? Why is it that our women are constantly urged to get sterilized? As New Afrikans we are the only ones who can answer these questions.

B) It is our position that Afrikan people inside the United States constitute America's domestic colony. If you seriously study and compare our situation here in America to that of other colonized peoples, you will find some striking similarities.

2) We have given Amerikkka the status of OPPRESSOR and will deal with Amerikkka as such.

3) From our day to day experiences we have found that the domestic Afrikan Colony (Black People) in America cannot live peacefully and achieve our highest level of development under this racist capitalist system of government. Quite frankly, we are its victims.

Remember, "The American Dream is the Black Nation's Nightmare".

Thus, it is the duty of New Afrikan students to help create an alternative.

4) Understanding that we are a colonized people, we have adopted the position that New Afrikan People inside the United States constitute an oppressed nation. We have found that the nation-within-a-nation concept is very relevent to our situation because it was European Imperialism seeking a slave labor force to work the newly discovered land in America that justified our kidnapping, the stripping of our culture, and forcing together of different tribal groups that ultimately, for the sheer sake of survival, forced us into the Mighty Black Nation that we are today. As an oppressed nation, (not minority grouping) we have the divine right to our political freedom, to some land, and to the 400 years of reparations [back pay] that is owed to us by this racist regime for the work and blood of our forebares.

5) From further study of our situation we have come to the conclusion that as an oppressed nation our oppression is two-fold, Racial and Class Oppression:

Class — Are not our parents part of the labor force (employed or unemployed), the Black working class?

Race — But they are constantly denied access to better jobs, upward mobility, full social benefits, because they are Black. Are we not constantly victims of racial unrest, and police brutality because we are Black? We could go on and on — . But remember while our oppression is two fold, racism is the key threat to New Afrikans in the U.S.A.

E) We feel that one of the solutions to our oppression is the serious study and adoption of the principles of Revolutionary Black Nationalism. The definition is too long to include in its entirety here, but this is a general definition: "Revolutionary Black Nationalism — The application of universal revolutionary laws to the concrete condition of AFRICANS held captive in the U.S.A. and the formation of a day to day plan based on reality."

It is our sincerest wish to see much work get done, to see Black students come to life, come to the aid of the Black masses with new ideas and vigor and help shake off the chains of Oppression.

As the Amherst Chapt. Of The National Black Students Association, we have certain points and ideas we wish all Black students to reflect on while considering participating in the organization.

1. A statewide Black student demonstration against all of our grievances.
2. The unification of all Black students across the state.
3. Adoption and support of the AFRIKAN PEOPLE'S PARTY PROGRAM FOR LIBERATION
4. End to all Black STUDENT FINANCIAL AID cutbacks.
5. Maintenance of all Black Studies Programs and Black Student Organizations.
6. Encouragement of Black Self Defense.
7. The need for Black Students to be on the political offensive.
8. The need for us as Black People to be Revolutionary instead of reactionary.
9. Not to submit to any injustices no matter how small because they have large.
10. The support of local Chapters of The N.B.S.A.

Dare to struggle,
Dare to win.

A Commentary

A Protest of Cleaver's Speech

By NKRUMAH OLINGA

Democracy, Democracy, where was it for Craemen Gethers and Earl Brown? Where was it for Dr. Martin Luther King, Malcolm X, and other sincere believers for true democracy?

Eldridge Cleaver said Wednesday at UMass that Democracy was being practiced here and it is the fairest country in the world. One of any common sense must begin to analyze scientifically the U.S. role over the years what Democracy has meant for New World countries. I mean New World countries and people because that is precisely what we are.

I will depart to take the liberty for a moment to state the Third World implies from a numerical interpretation by most of the people here at UMass as the third digit or numerical degree after 1 and 2 therefore Third means the last of the other two numbers. Therefore by the use of deductive logic we can ascertain that it may not be psychologically healthy for a group of all ready oppressed people to use the word Third. Further, let us look at the history of the concept of Third World people.

The concept of Third World was not invented by people of color but a Frenchman, very close to Franz Fanon, Fanon being a revolutionary psychiatrist used his concept in the early fifties in his analysis of oppressed people around the world.

To people who sleep red, white and blue and have fantasies on the moon about oppressive here in the U.S. People of all colors are oppressed in the U.S. We as a collective have never been able to get together because of institutional racism that permeates throughout this society. It is the sole cause of conflict between oppressed people colonized here in the U.S. Jews called them Ghetto's a number of years ago. The new urban poor are referred to as colonized labor forces that are at the mercy of major corporations and their slave managers. Meanwhile, back to Eldridge.

Mr. Cleaver was given $50,000 a year while he was in Algiers. He was also there with other Black Panthers in Algiers. They at that time made up the international Black Panther Party. If Eldridge was so poor in France so recently before his arrival in the U.S. where did his money go? He lived in Algiers over a year.

Patriate Eldridge was also eventually given an Embassador status by the Algerian government with a large villa or palace if you please who is raping who? The end of this is not yet complete.

Cleaver along with his fanatical followers hijacked a U.S. commercial airline to Algiers and ransomed it at a cost of one million dollars which the airline company paid him for the passengers and plane release. Algiers finally recognized how sick this mad dog was and had enough of his madness like most thinking people here have had. They kicked him out, as did Cuba, because he was an embarassment to the African Revolutionaries.

Finally on his arrival back to the U.S. he decided he would try to get back into the Black Panther Party. Luckily for the Panthers there is an articulate, intelligent female at the helm and not a slider. Eileen Brown would not accept him back in and called a press conference to properly record the records so that if anyone doubts the information here, investigate for yourself.'

In fact investigate everything mentioned in this particular editorial. There is strength in Unity — through diversity, through weakness the oppressed continue to be oppressed.

OPEN LETTER ON SOUTHERN AFRICA

Conclusion

For example, it is a well known fact that many of the three hundred U.S. corporations doing business in South Africa are also clients of C.B.S. The fact that these corporations reap huge profits by observing South Africa's slave wage standard is also well known. In fact, the National Council of Churches has been fighting on this question for several years. They have even waged proxy fights in their laudible efforts to change American corporate policy in South Africa. Perhaps it would be helpful to investigate the nature and extent of C.B.S. business interests in South Africa. However, that question will have to await more wide ranging study.

It seems that C.B.S. places a much higher value on the interests of its corporate clients than on that of the millions of Afro-Americans who consume their products. If so, we say this is plainly anti-democratic, a form of media tyranny as it were. This situation presents us with an extraordinary paradox in this bicentennial year, when the entire nation is called upon to rejoice in the destruction of tyranny! In order to democratize the reportage on southern Africa, certain steps must be taken immediately. There are two reasons why I am taking the liberty to spell out alternatives. Firstly, I believe there is merit to the argument that criticism is not enough. Secondly, I am supplying the black community with a yardstick by which to measure your response.

There are certain minimum essentials which must be met, in order to bring some semblance of democratic fairness to your coverage of the southern African situation. The first step is glaringly obvious; the leaders of the black liberation organizations must be given equal time to present their case. The American public has been preyed upon long enough by the one-sided, racist, anti-democratic propaganda which passes for objective reportage. The southern African liberation movements possess a wealth of intelligent, articulate spokesmen who are quite capable of speaking for themselves.

One wonders in bewilderment, at the callous disregard with which you have treated the legitimate spokesmen of the African people. Abel Muzerewa and Ndbaningi Sitole are both respected men of the cloth. The former is a bishop and the latter a minister in a major Christian denomination. They are also respected leaders of the African National Council of Zimbabwe. This organization is the national voice of the African people. In the American context, this organization would be equal to the NA.A.C.P., C.O.R.E., S.C.L.C., and the Urban League combined. What possible reason could C.B.S. have for ignoring such men while simultaneously subjecting the American public to the ignominious rantings of white racist buffons?

How is it possible that C.B.S. could overlook a man such as Josha Nkomo? Here is a man Ian Smith referred to as "reasonable," until he refused to participate in a sellout of his people at the recent constitutional talks. The Pan Africanist Congress of Azania (whites refer to this country as the Republic of South Africa) enjoys a highly intelligent and articulate spokesman in its Foreign Minister, Mr. David Sebieko. Mr. Sibieko is often in New York and can be contacted at the U.N. delegates lounge. I have personally met and talked with several of these leaders, especially Mr. Sebieko, and found their ideas infinitely more intelligent than those of Ian Smith, John Voster, or Henry Kissinger for that matter.

The United Nations, representing most of the nations of the world, has declared the white South African occupation of Namibia (popularly known as Southwest Africa) to be illegal. They recognize the South West African Peoples Organization headed by Mr. Sam Ujoma to be the legitimate representatives of the Namibian people. It is well known that the U.N. provided the original mandate for the temporary administration of Namibia by South Africa. Therefore, the U.N. was operating well within its realm of authority when it chose to terminate South Africa's mandate. In view of these realities I insist that C.B.S. stop presenting racist white South African spokesmen and provide S.W.A.P.O. representatives with the opportunity to lay their case before the American public.

In regard to the issue of American spokesmen on the South African question, it is high time you cease the parade of white racist ignoramuses. There exists, within the U.S.A., a highly talented group of Afro-American scholars on African affairs. They are ready, willing, and more than able to comment on the South African situation with sensitivity and intelligence. Among them are scholars of the caliber of Martin Kilson, Professor of Government at Harvard, who holds the same academic rank in the same department as Henry Kissinger, Professor Willard Johnson, Chairman of the Political Science Department at M.I.T., and Professors Elliot Skinner and Wilfred Cartey. All of these men are outstanding scholars with international reputations.

Scholars such as Professors John Hendrik Clarke and James Turner of Hunter College and Cornell University respectively are men of wide experience with much of the leadership of Africa. To be sure, this is only a partial listing of the available black scholars on African affairs. We would argue that the American public in general, and blacks in particular, have a right to hear the views of these scholars. Instead, we are abandoned to the incompetent meanderings of neophyte white reporters bemused by the complexity of events, eloquent old silvery haired hypocrites, and academic hired guns who pose as objective social scientists.

In the geopolitical circumstances of the U.S., you possess an awesome power to determine events. In many ways, this power exceeds that of a powerful army in less developed areas of the world. One, therefore, wonders as to your objectives in giving license to the vice of racism in your coverage of southern Africa. It is virtually impossible to escape the conclusion that you are engaged in a sinister attempt to manipulate American sentiment in favor of the white facist minority. In my view, this is an extremely dangerous development and must be opposed!

Professor Fred Friendly of the Columbia School of Journalism recently pointed out that the public has virtually no means of opposing the excesses of broadcast media. That is why I have chosen the open letter as the vehicle to express my objections. This document will be published and widely circulated in this country and in Africa. I call upon African Americans in particular, and progressive Americans in general, to resist this attempt at subterfuge by C.B.S. It is conceivable that you may be so intoxicated with the arrogance of power that you will choose to ignore this expression of dissent. But you may rest assured that you will hear more from the black community on this matter.

All members of the Five-College area Third World community are urged to attend.

TRANSKEI NATION OR COLONY?

The Transkei, largest and most important of South Africa's bantustans or "African Homelands", was to become 'independent' on Oct. 26. Transkei, a model government, is designed to defuse mounting international pressure against the illegal South African occupation of Namibia (S.W. Africa), and to put "an acceptable face" on the unending brutalities of Apartheid.

Transkei was formerly scheduled for independence in the late 1970's or 1980's. The advancement of the date for political separation followed the defeat of Portuguese colonialism in Mozambique and Angola. At this point, the Pretoria government objectively realized that Apartheid control of South Africa was in jeopardy.

In effect, the new "republic" will remain an almost complete independent rural slum, as it has since the boarders were legally outlined in the 1930's.

We must wait and see how many countries recognize it as an autonomous nation. So far, Transkei's government has been rejected by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), the main body whose support would give the republic a great degree of legitimacy.

Under the mentioned conditions, it is probable that Transkei could remain South Africa's political 'outcast' since any recognition of it would constitute approval of the Apartheid system.

The Transkei is located in the eastern Cape Province along the Indian Ocean and is the only bantustan with a coastline, although its only deep-water port, Port St. Johns, is to remain under South African control even after the territory's Oct. 26 'independence'.

Under 1936 Apartheid legislation, the areas set aside for bantustan settlement were never meant to be future 'independent' states. They were intended, as the small areas — 13 per cent of the country's available land for almost 90 per cent of its population — where black South African peoples "would be herded for permanent settlement under the direct rule of the various commissions, authorities, and State owned corporations set up by Pretoria to rule them". (Guardian: Independent Radical Newsweekly; Oct. 27, 1976)

In April 1961, Prime Minister Hendrik Verwoerd announced that "in light of the pressure being exerted on South Africa", bantustans would be developed into separate states, even to the point of independence.

In Transkei, Verwoerd and the white colonial Nationalist Party found a model for the new policy. Its "claimed population" could be said to live on a continuous piece of land, while the largest group, the Zulus, had been 'given' some 144 fragments of unconnected land, precisely because they were the largest group.

There are many documented practices of "fragmentation" policies by the Pretoria regime. To numerous to mention here. All done to create and exaggerate the tribal antagonisms and ethnic animosity on which Apartheid's "divide and rule" strategy toward African's is built.

There is evidence to suggest collaboration between Chief Kaiser Matanzima, Transkeian "head of State", and the Pretoria government. He was elected in 1963 in an election heavily and openly backed by Pretoria while, the few opposition candidates that ran against him were constantly harrassed. Most other bantustan leaders, have rejected bantustanization in favor of a unified South Africa. (Guardian: Oct. 27, 1976)

The U.S. has been anxious to secure a firm military foothold in southern Africa for some time, but a base on South African soil would run counter to the 'new' African policy of U.S. Secretary of State Kissinger. Accordingly, the U.S. Army's July issue of Military Review, a magazine "considered by most observers to reflect Defense Department views'', suggested the Pentagon is preparing to install a naval base in Port St. Johns to increase its military capabilities in the Indian Ocean. Such a measure would not be possible without an "independent" Transkei in which to set up.

It is important to also note that the 'Republic of Transkei" has been compared to the colonial case of Puerto Rico. This parallel was made in a statement by Alberto Salado Villacin of the Cuban delegation before the Decolonization Committee during this recent session of the U.N. General Assembly.

In his statement he pointed out, "This experiment which Transkei represents, is nothing new in the international community". "Over two decades ago, the same people that are at this time advising South Africa, made a similar intervention in Puerto Rico, but under the name "Commonwealth of Puerto Rico". The patterns are similar. There exists the same type of government which at this point is being established under the name of the "Republic of Transkei", where the economic interests of the colonial power rule in order to serve their interests."

As Mr. Villacin concluded in this statement, "the international community should be on the alert when such manipulations take place, which in turn hinder the decolonialization process of elimination and the end of racism and Apartheid in Africa, the Caribbean and other parts of the world". (Claridad-U.S.A.; Oct. 29, 1976)

The Pretoria government has tried to confuse those who oppose Apartheid and support the movement for national liberation in southern Africa. We must not let that happen:

On Oct. 27, the Nigerian representative to the U.N. presented a resolution co-sponsored by 50 countries prohibiting "any dealings or contacts" with Transkei. Transkei retains the repressive Security Acts that are in force in the rest of S. Africa. The departments of Forestry, Justice, Interior, and Education continue to be headed from Pretoria. Communists, Nationalists, SASO (South African Student Organization), and Trade Unions remain outlawed. Last July, all Africans living in the Transkei, who openly opposed the fake nationhood were arrested. (Workers World Newspaper; Oct. 29, 1976)

We end with a quote from Jennifer Davis reprinted from the Oct. 1973 issue of SOUTHERN AFRICA. "There can be no doubt that the "change" being sponsored by the South African government is not the kind of change being fought for by the black majority of southern Africa. Thus, whatever their motives, the so-called black leaders who lend their names to the South African propaganda campaign are giving support to the stability of that every authority which will have to be destroyed before there is real liberation in southern Africa. In this context, their own personal honesty or sincereity is irrelevent, and the effect of their action is a betrayal of the freedom struggle in South Africa."

It is our desire that this letter will provoke deeper discussion and understanding among all peoples in building a mass movement in solidarity and support with southern Africa liberation organizations. In struggle and solidarity,

Billie Stewart

This scientific approach is not new for the P.A.C., in a book published in '66, Southern Africa in Transition, the well-known American political scientist and expert on Southern Africa, Professor Gwendolen M. Carter, testifies to this. Mangaliso Sobukwe, says Professor Carter, "has always been political rather than spiritual in his approach". She says, "Sobukwe's objective is to establish an African mass movement that will bind together peasants, migrant workers and those living close to or below subsistence in the urban townships. Many of the Pan Africanists are highly educated (Sobukwe was a lecturer at the Witwatersrand University from 1953 until 1960), but they have made a deliberate and quite successful attempt to communicate their own aspirations to African migratory workers in their own native languages and through examples and idioms that the workers understand in terms of their own experiences." She continues, "The earlier African nationalist movements concentrated on the urban literate, used English as their medium of communication, and thought in terms of change within the existing structure."

"Such an appeal to the rural Africans had been made successfully in the Cape during the defiance campaign, and the PAC built on this experience. The Pan Africanists were particularly successful, however, in using this approach to migrant workers in the townships outside Cape Town... By making understandable to them both the existing political system in South Africa and the PAC's objectives for the future in which Africans would play the major role, the Pan Africanists developed a closer relation between intellectuals and illiterates, and between urban and rural, than had any earlier African nationalist group. How effective this relationship became was demonstrated on March 30, 1960, after the Sharpeville crisis, when 30,000 Africans made a peaceful disciplined march from Langa and adjoining townships into Cape Town." This march against the pass laws, after Sharpeville and Langa, is an important landmark in South African political history.

It is against that background of intensive work amongst the broad masses that the PAC leadership pointed out in the Revolutionary Message of 1967 that "The problems connected with making it possible in the initial stages for the guerillas to survive and thereafter grow, is thus one of utmost concern to our revolution. The immediate tactical problem therefore clearly demands that we build up the organisational capacity to disperse the enemy from the very onset of the struggle. But while the armed struggle proceeds, we will conduct intensive political education amongst the peasants and landless labourers about the nature, objectives and tactics of the armed struggle, for the spirit of a people is not easily crushed when they have developed ideological convictions as to the rightness of the cause for which they and their sons and daughters fight. The cry for land and liberty is very powerful. People are moved by correct slogans, but they will only fight with the ferocity of a lioness protecting her cubs if there is reality to the promises."

The foregoing is necessary if what is happening in Azania is to be understood in proper historical perspective. Our struggle as from the turning point at Sharpeville, like the heroic wars of resistance against colonial aggression by our forefathers, has frequently been the subject of gross distortions by instant historians; not to speak of the riff-raff on the fringes. As it is we have had to wage a bitter struggle with the western media which at the beginning of the national uprising slandered our young militants as "hooligans" and the Azanian people's answer of revolutionary violence against the enemy's reactionary violence as "riots". Some of this language has even crept into the vocabulary of unsuspecting compatriots and supporters.

Beginning with the PAC campaign in 1960 our people did away with the pursuit of civil rights or changes within the structure. The struggle is for the seizure of political power. The organic link between the approach adopted by the PAC and the present uprising cannot be denied. The initially spontaneous uprising has therefore accelerated the pace towards all out armed struggle. We salute the brave young kindered who have paid with their valuable lives to advance the cause, their sacrifices are certainly not in vain.

The Pan Africanist Congress reminds that the national liberation movement in our country has made the people a pledge that should never be made lightly. We have promised to lead the people in armed struggle. Our credibility can sustain only if we live up to our responsibilities. The mass organisations have got strikes and demonstrations in mind. Our task is to lead the people's war.

WHITE RESPONSE

In an interview with the New York Times last week, Vorster made it plain that as far as he is concerned, the Black man will never rule in Azania. Against the uprising he threatens measures even harsher, as if butchering school children and mass arrests are not the worst. This is vintage Vorster, shorn off the sheepskin of dialogue, detente and shuttle diplomacy.

Since the threat of harsher measures was issued, Vorster's police have raided a high school in Soweto and arrested all the students and teachers. Last week-end in Soweto the fascists sank below their own record of degeneracy when they raided two funerals held, respectively, for a high school girl of 16 who was killed by the police and a male student who died in detention. At the girl's funeral they shot and killed one person, injured several and arrested 115 from amongst the 1,000 mourners. Seven more were killed later at the boy's burial.

These barbaric acts will however not deter our people. As the Founder-President of SASO, Steve Biko, told the New York Times before he was detained: "The outbursts are going to become increasingly frequent, and the white community, which has so far been very protected, is going to realize how thin their security really is. Eventually blacks are going to move out of the townships into the white suburbs, destroying and burning, and when that happens there will be white panic."

HISTORY OF APARTHEID

The nation of South Africa as we know it today was established during the period of British colonialism. In 1877, Great Britain annexed Zululand and the South African Republic thus creating South Africa.

In 1948, the white Nationalist party came to power with the majority of the members being Afrikaaners. It was at this point that a whole series of racial laws designed to insure the supremacy of the white man, especially the Afrikaaner were enacted.

As their legislation became more repressive South Africa has suffered diplomatic isolation and severe condemnation in the United Nations and outside. Nevertheless, they continue to stand firmly committed to their policy of apartheid.

APARTHEID

The policy of apartheid is designed to racially segregate the white population from the black population to the detriment of the latter.

While the black population makes up 70 per cent of the country's people, they are allowed only 13 per cent of the land while the whites have received 80 per cent of the land.

In addition, whites who constitute 30.6 per cent of the labor force, receive 68.2 per cent of the wages while blacks who make up 55 per cent of the labor force earn only 21.1 per cent of the wages.

The South African government has established a policy which requires that blacks live on designated homelands or "Bantustans". The areas designated as homelands are economically the worst part of South Africa. They are small, and isolated, mineral resources, and seaports. In addition, the land is poor in quality and is made worse by the over farming that takes place.

Because these areas are very poor, the black population is forced to go elsewhere for work, especially to the white cities. Men are allowed to live in the cities only while they are working and their families are legally prohibited from visiting them. The disastrous effects on the family are obvious.

The South African governmen to further stifle the black populatior requires that every man and woma over the age of 16 carry an iden tification card for entrance into white areas. It is estimated tha everyday, an average of 200 people are picked up for supposed violations of "pass" laws.

FOREIGN ECONOMIC INTEREST THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN

Since World War Two, economic contacts with Western nations have increased significantly. Britain is South Africa's major trading partner and is involved in virtually every sector of the South African economy.

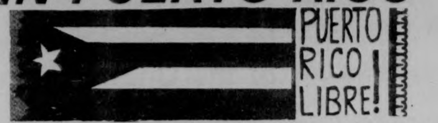
The United States is the second largest trading partner and also has significant investments in the economy. The high rate of return on investments (17-19 per cent in 1968) and the large supply of cheap labor has attracted over 300 US firms to South Africa with a tota investment of about $2 billion. In fact, US investment in South Africa rose from $692 million in 1968 to $1.2 billion in 1973 (a 73 per cen increase in 5 years).

The growing economic stake in South Africa has coincided with a policy of support by the United States and Great Britain for the Status Quo.

Officially, the US has denounced apartheid by supporting some United Nations resolutions. But i has not however, lent support to resolutions which call for harsl action.

This is because US economi and scientific interests are too significant. Aside from the hugl amount of money that is invested i South Africa, that country is th major gold supplier to the capitali world in addition to being a natio of vast mineral wealth. Expor import trade between South Afric and the United States has result in a very favorable balance of tra for the US.

ELECTIONS IN PUERTO RICO



By MIGUEL RIVERA

The elections which have just been held in the United States, also took place in Puerto Rico. The people of Puerto Rico voted for a change in administration, the New Progressive Party. This party, a right wing pro-statehood party, defeated the ruling Popular Democratic Party, a pro colonial government party. The results are not official yet; they are still counting.

A new situation has resulted as a product of this past election. It was a protest vote as the people of Puerto Rico voted against the corrupt government of PDP. The New Progressive Party was able to channel that discontent through the old demagogic bourgeois tactic of economic promises, liberalism and the claim of a new moral.

It was also clear that the people broke with former ways of voting. There was more mixed voting, meaning that the people are not willing to follow leaders. It is true that they are not at the level of changing political oppressive structures or ideological components, but they have shown a clear growing consciousness.

That process of acquiring political consciousness has been too slow. Juan Mari Bras, Secretary General of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, attributes it to "the relative inefficiency of the leadership of the two independence parties and the other forces that make up the national liberation movement and the workers' movement in our country".

A new assesment of the whole liberation movement has been proposed. As far as the Puerto Rican Socialist Party is concerned, this self-criticism and criticism is going to begin right away.

Because of the many irregularities found after the elections, the official figures might not be obtained until mid December. Eighty per cent of all precincts are currently under investigation.

In the case of socialist candidates, the first firgures given by the Puerto Rican Election Board are way under the second figures given after a recounting. Three examples are the towns of Humacao, Trujillo Alto and Levitown. As a result of the voting recount, the socialist candidates were given more than one thousand votes over the first figures given to the press.

The socialist candidates Carolos Gallisa and Pedro Grant still have good possibilities of having been elected.

For the Puerto Rican Socialist Party, some of the goals for the electoral process had been fulfilled before the elections were over. That political work is already producing.

The elections were not an end in the Socialist perspective; therefore, the daily struggles continue as usual. According to the schedule, the next important activity is the protest in New York next Saturday, November 13.

The five Puerto Rican Nationalists, Lolita Lebron, Oscar Collazo, Rafael Cancel Miranda and Irving Flores have been in prison for over twenty-six years. They are the oldest political prisoners in America. Puerto Ricans as well as members of all other nationalities in United States will march to the United Nations in an effort to obtain their freedom. The marching people will depart from Union Square in Manhattan towards the U.N. at noon.

In terms of our community here, buses will be leaving the area early Saturday morning (around 7:30 or 8:00 a.m.). The Latin community may call 549-0841 for seat reservations.

There will be a latin dance sponsored by NUCLEO FEFEL VARONA and Ahora on Wednesday, Nov. 10. This dance will be held in the Student Union Ballroom at 9:00 p.m. Tickets are being stold on the Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee table, or people may call 549-0841. Students pay $2.50 and non-students $3.50. Two bands will play. (No intermission.)

These activities will help us realize that, though the elections are over with the highest pro-independence vote in the last two decades in Puerto Rico, the struggle continues. PATRIA O MUERTE, VENCEREMOS!

Repression of Puerto Rican People in Northampton

During the last two weeks of September, the Puerto Rican community of Northampton organized to protect their individual and collective rights in the court. They received and will continue to receive the full support of the progressive sectors of the Valley. An up-to-date report of the results of the particular court proceedings and of the Puerto Rican community's continued efforts in combating discrimination and harassment is in order...

The hearings of the Puerto Rican women and their children, as complainants, against a white Northamerican youth who had threatened them with a loaded rifle finally came to a close September 30th. After three days of intense testimonies by the children and their parents at Northampton's District Court, Judge Morse found the defendant guilty of five assaults with a dangerous weapon and of possessing a .177 caliber air rifle without a license, which in Massachusetts carries a mandatory one year sentence. For the assault charges, the defendant was sentenced to three months in jail to be served concurrently. The decision was appealed by the defendant, and hearings at the Superior Court are tentatively scheduled for December.

The case involving the Puerto Rican youth who allegedly took a van without permission from an agency where he worked, was also heared at the District Court. Although the Executive Director of the agency did not press charges against the youth, Judge Ferris found him guilty of a stolen vehicle and sentenced him to 30 days in jail; the youth was also convicted of driving to endanger and fined $125. The counter charges of police brutality were not brought to the attention of the court at this time. The youth appealed the case; and it will be heard in Dec.

The Puerto Rican community of Northampton continues in the uphill struggle against discrimination...

In the case involving three Puerto Rican youths who allegedly siphoned 75 cents worth of gasoline, the judge found them neither guilty nor innocent. The case was "continued" pending any future cases the youths may have in court. The owner of the truck from which the gasoline was supposedly taken still maintained that he had no evidance that any gas was siphoned. The judge ordered each to pay a $50. fine.

Daily expressions of deep frustration and desperation plague the Puerto Rican community as they confront continued harrassments by some members of Northampton's police department. The struggle of the Puerto Rican community to protect its human rights, however, goes beyond the courthouse.
